The leg contains the large tibia on the medial side and the slender fibula on the lateral side. The tibia bears the weight of the body, whereas the fibula does not bear weight. The interosseous border of each bone is the attachment site for the interosseous membrane of the leg, the connective tissue sheet that unites the tibia and fibula.

The proximal tibia consists of the expanded medial and lateral condyles, which articulate with the medial and lateral condyles of the femur to form the knee joint. Between the tibial condyles is the intercondylar eminence. On the anterior side of the proximal tibia is the tibial tuberosity, which is continuous inferiorly with the anterior border of the tibia. On the posterior side, the proximal tibia has the curved soleal line. The bony expansion on the medial side of the distal tibia is the medial malleolus. The groove on the lateral side of the distal tibia is the fibular notch.

The head of the fibula forms the proximal end and articulates with the underside of the lateral condyle of the tibia. The distal fibula articulates with the fibular notch of the tibia. The expanded distal end of the fibula is the lateral malleolus.

The posterior foot is formed by the seven tarsal bones. The talus articulates superiorly with the distal tibia, the medial malleolus of the tibia, and the lateral malleolus of the fibula to form the ankle joint. The talus articulates inferiorly with the calcaneus bone. The sustentaculum tali of the calcaneus will help to support the talus. Anterior to the talus is the navicular bone, and anterior to this are the medial, intermediate, and lateral cuneiform bones. The cuboid bone is anterior to the calcaneus.

The five metatarsal bones form the anterior foot. The base of these bones articulates with the cuboid or cuneiform bones. The metatarsal heads, at their distal ends, articulate with the proximal phalanges of the toes. The big toe has proximal and distal phalanx bones. The remaining toes have proximal, middle, and distal phalanges.

THE CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM

THE CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

The human heart

The human heart is a muscular pump about the size of a human fist. It has 4 chambers—2 atria and 2 ventricles. It has 4 heart valves. Two are located between the chambers and 2 exit the heart, preventing the backflow of blood.

cardiac muscle

The heart consists of cardiac muscle, a striated and involuntary muscle. Individual cardiac muscle cells (cardiomyocytes) are connected by intercalated discs that coordinate synchronized muscle contraction.

Blood composition

The human body contains about 5 liters of blood. Blood consists of red blood cells, white blood cells, platelets, and plasma.

Arteries carry oxygenated blood away from the heart to arterioles and then to capillaries. Capillary walls are thin—only a single cell thick—allowing O_2 and nutrients to enter tissues while waste products are removed. Blood then travels through venules and into larger veins that carry it back to the heart.

The 2 circulation loops

Pulmonary

The right side of the heart pumps oxygen-deficient blood to the lungs where it releases CO_2 and becomes oxygenated. This blood then returns to the heart.

Systemic

The left side of the heart pumps oxygenated blood to body tissues where it delivers O_2 and picks up CO_2 and other waste products. This deoxygenated blood then travels back to the heart where it begins the pulmonary loop.

THE CARDIOVASCULAR SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The cardiovascular system, also designated as the blood system and circulatory system, in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is responsible for blood circulation through it.

The lightweight “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances”, which are known as the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Blood” or simply the “blood”, are a manifestation by metaphor of the refined energy flow, which is present in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

DATABASE

The “blood” inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” of “life” and of “health”, and which is necessary to maintain “life” and to sustain “health” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It continuously transports all “vital” information for the proper functioning of the cells, tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It also transports feedback information sent by those cells, tissues and organs, in the form of thousands of small molecules of very low molecular weight (in the range of 0.1–1 kDa), and which are intermediates or final products of metabolisms that occur in those cells, tissues and organs.⁶²⁹ Small molecules are low molecular weight molecules that are only a few atoms large and which are held together by strong covalent bonds. Take water for example. Only three atoms make up this molecule, yet it is essential for life. Oxygen gas is a diatomic molecule that is crucial for cells to make energy. The properties of these small molecules provide them with unique characteristics that make them so important to life conditions. Small molecules have incredibly strong intramolecular forces. These are the covalent bonds that hold them together. These bonds are very strong and do not easily break. They are not the bonds that break when a molecule changes state. The forces involved in state changes are called intermolecular forces and include any forces involved in interactions between molecules. The intermolecular forces of small molecules include dipole-dipole interactions between polar molecules, ⁶²⁹ An extensive list of small molecule metabolites found in the human “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is recorded in the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB), <https://hmdb.ca>, a freely available electronic database. The database contains 220945 metabolite entries including both water-soluble and lipid soluble metabolites. Additionally, 8610 protein sequences (enzymes and transporters) are linked to these metabolite entries. Each MetaboCard entry of the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB) contains 130 data fields with 2/3 of the information being devoted to chemical/clinical data and the other 1/3 devoted to enzymatic or biochemical data.

London dispersion forces in non-polar molecules, and hydrogen bonds, which is a special type of dipole-dipole interaction that involves a dipole moment on a hydrogen atom.

Some examples of small molecules include water, carbon dioxide, oxygen, lipids, monosaccharides, second messengers, metabolites, etc... The molecular diameter of CO₂, a small ubiquitous molecule, is larger than that of O₂, with a value of 3.34×10^{-8} cm; the smallest molecule is the diatomic hydrogen (H₂), with a bond length of 0.74 Å.

Owing to the small size, small molecules infiltrate through the cell membrane easily to accomplish their “specific tasks” and regulate “specific cellular processes” by interacting with targeted molecules present inside a cell. They are able to affect the functions of various proteins, including protein–protein interactions, by forming complexes with their targets. For example, they can selectively bind to specific biological macromolecules and regulates their biological activity, by acting as ligands that can increase or decrease enzyme activity, cell signalling, increase mitochondrial ATP synthase, etc... These small molecules can function as therapeutic agents to disinfect and restore a deteriorated cell and its external environment to a better health condition, or in the case of irreparable deterioration, to dry out a deteriorated cell, annihilate its functioning and mark it for elimination.

As such, through small molecules of very low molecular weight, thousands of feedback information are transported back by the “blood”. Each of those thousands of small molecules is produced at a unique location (tissue and organ) inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and has a unique “specific task”. It is so that, that feedback information, which is carried by those thousands of small molecules of very low molecular weight, tells about a very accurate (up to tissue location in an organ) self-diagnostic mapping of the internal state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. That feedback information can be “read back” by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” itself for an appropriate response to best support or sustain its own health. All such autonomous functions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The cardiovascular system includes all the organs that intervene in the bloodstream. This system includes the heart, all the blood vessels and the blood circulating there.

The main function of the cardiovascular system is to carry blood throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will allow the cells to receive what they need, such as nutrients, and also to rid them of their waste, such as carbon dioxide. The blood contains a liquid part, plasma, and solid constituents, red blood cells, white blood cells, and platelets, each having functions peculiar to them.

The organ represented by the inverted cone-shaped red viscera, which is designated as the “heart” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, through its movement, will pump blood through blood vessels, which are arteries, capillaries, and veins. As blood will flow through these vessels, it will deliver the oxygen and nutrients to cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, while removing carbon dioxide and other waste products from those cells.

The inverted cone-shaped red viscera organ, which is designated as the “heart” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is the core muscle that will fulfill an essential function in the mechanism of the expression of the metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. It is this core muscle which, inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’

Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, is located in the mediastinum.

The heart is essentially composed of a muscle (the myocardium) doubled by two tunics (pericardium, endocardium), internally divided into two distinct parts which each have two communicating cavities (atrium at the top, ventricle at the bottom). As such, it has 4 chambers (constituted by 2 atria and 2 ventricles), resulting from the projection of the acronym IHVH. It has 4 heart valves, out of which 2 are located between the chambers and 2 exit the heart, preventing the backflow of blood.

For an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will measure from 10 to 12 cm in height, 8 to 9 cm in width and 6 cm in thickness, and it will have a weight of about 300 grams.

It is this inverted cone-shaped red viscera, which will be the main agent of the circulation of the manifestation of the metaphor of the refined energy flow, which is present in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”; that is, the main agent of the blood circulation in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. It is the manifestation of the metaphor of this refined energy, which is called “blood”. The movement associated with this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will also be an expression by the metaphor of the movement of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.⁶³⁰

⁶³⁰ Remember what the elder ENOCH, of whom METHUSELAH is the descendant, wanted human inhabitants of this earthly world to understand, when he was shown in a vision, the “Specific Walking Movement” of that which is called the “Sun”, the “solar star”, and he reported it in his writings, saying:

From there I came in another place, on the side of the Occident, to the extremities of the “EARTH” (that is, at the extremities of the “Plane Below”).

Where I beheld a blazing fire and a perpetual movement, travelling night and day, without ever stopping.

I asked the angel who was with me, and I said: “What is this? Why this incessant movement?”

RAGUEL, one of the angels who accompanied me said: “That burning fire, which moves towards the Occident, is the fire which sets ablaze all “LUMINAIRES” of the HEAVEN.”

Now, what do you think that inverted cone-shaped red viscera, which is inside you, and which, through its incessant movement, autonomously regulate the flow of blood, is all about? Those things, inside you, are what the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have labelled as the “secrets” of Heaven and Earth. All those so-called “secrets” of Heaven and Earth have been implemented inside you, as human creature, and by “THE DIVINE FORCE” during the fulfilment of this seventh decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

COMPONENT PARTS OF THE HEART

The division of the heart into four cavities is indicated on its surface by grooves.⁶³¹ The atria are separated from the ventricles by the coronary sulcus (auriculoventricular groove); this contains the trunks of the nutrient vessels of the heart, and is deficient in front, where it is crossed by the root of the pulmonary artery. The interatrial groove, separating the two atria, is scarcely marked on the posterior surface, while anteriorly it is hidden by the pulmonary artery and aorta.

⁶³¹ A result of the projection of the four points defined by the acronym IHVH in the space called the thoracic cage.

THE AORTA — the aorta is the main trunk of a series of vessels which convey the oxygenated blood to the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” for their nutrition. It commences at the upper part of the left ventricle, where it is about 3 cm in diameter, and after ascending for a short distance, arches backward and to the left side, over the root of the left lung; it then descends within the thorax on the left side of the vertebral column, passes into the abdominal cavity through the aortic hiatus in the diaphragm, and ends, considerably diminished in size (about 1.75 cm in diameter), opposite the lower border of the fourth lumbar vertebra, by dividing into the right and left common iliac arteries. Hence it is described in several portions; that is to say, the ascending aorta, the arch of the aorta, and the descending aorta, which last is again divided into the thoracic and abdominal aortae.

THE ASCENDING AORTA — the ascending aorta is about 5 cm in length. It commences at the upper part of the base of the left ventricle, on a level with the lower border of the third costal cartilage behind the left half of the sternum; it passes obliquely upward, forward, and to the right, in the direction of the heart's axis, as high as the upper border of the second right costal cartilage, describing a slight curve in its course, and being situated, about 6 cm behind the posterior surface of the sternum. At its origin it presents, opposite the segments of the aortic valve, three small dilatations called the aortic sinuses. At the union of the ascending aorta with the aortic arch the caliber of the vessel is increased, owing to a bulging of its right wall. This dilatation is termed the bulb of the aorta, and on transverse section presents a somewhat oval figure. The ascending aorta is contained within the pericardium, and is enclosed in a tube of the serous pericardium, common to it and the pulmonary artery. The only branches of the ascending aorta are the two coronary arteries which supply the heart; they arise near the commencement of the aorta immediately above the attached margins of the semilunar valves.

The left coronary artery, larger than the right, arises from the left anterior aortic sinus and divides into an anterior descending and a circumflex branch. The anterior descending branch passes at first behind the pulmonary artery and then comes forward between that vessel and the left auricle to reach the anterior longitudinal sulcus, along which it descends to the incisura apicis cordis; it gives branches to both ventricles. The circumflex branch follows the left part of the coronary sulcus, running first to the left and then to the right, reaching nearly as far as the posterior longitudinal sulcus; it gives branches to the left atrium and ventricle. There is a free anastomosis between the minute branches of the two coronary arteries in the substance of the heart.

PULMONARY ARTERIES — the pulmonary arteries will receive deoxygenated blood from the right ventricle, and deliver it to the lungs for gas exchange to take place. The arteries begin as the pulmonary trunk, a thick and short vessel, which is separated from the right ventricle by the pulmonary valve. The trunk is located anteriorly and medially to the right atrium, sharing a common layer of pericardium with the ascending aorta. It continues upwards, overlapping the root of the aorta and passing posteriorly. At around the level of vertebrae T5-T6, the pulmonary trunk splits into the right and left pulmonary arteries. The left pulmonary artery supplies blood to the left lung, bifurcating into two branches to supply each lobe of the lung. The right pulmonary artery is the thicker and longer artery of the two, supplying blood to the right lung. It also further divides into two branches.

PULMONARY VEINS — the pulmonary veins return the arterialized blood from the lungs to the left atrium of the heart. They are four in number, two from each lung, and are destitute of valves. They commence in a capillary network upon the walls of the air sacs, where they are continuous with the capillary ramifications of the pulmonary artery, and, joining together, form one vessel for each lobule. These vessels, uniting successively, form a single trunk for each lobe, three for the right, and two for the left lung. The vein from the middle lobe of the right lung will unite with that from the upper lobe, so that ultimately two trunks from each lung will be formed; they perforate the fibrous layer of the pericardium and open separately into the upper and back part of the left atrium. The three veins on the right side remain separate. The two left pulmonary veins end by a common opening.

At the root of the lung, the superior pulmonary vein lies in front of and a little below the pulmonary artery; the inferior is situated at the lowest part of the hilus of the lung and on a plane posterior to the upper vein. Behind the pulmonary artery is the bronchus. Within the pericardium, their anterior surfaces are invested by the serous layer of this membrane. The right pulmonary veins pass behind the right atrium and superior vena cava; the left in front of the descending thoracic aorta.

THE SUPERIOR VENA CAVA — the superior vena cava receives deoxygenated blood from the upper part of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (superior to the diaphragm, excluding the lungs and heart), delivering it to the right atrium, the direction of its orifice being downward and forward. Its opening has no valve. It is formed by merging of the brachiocephalic veins, travelling inferiorly through the thoracic region until draining into the superior portion of the right atrium at the level of the 3rd rib. As the superior vena cava makes its descent it is located in the right side of the superior mediastinum, before entering the middle mediastinum to lie beside the ascending aorta.

THE INFERIOR VENA CAVA — the inferior vena cava, larger than the superior, returns the blood from the lower half of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and opens into the lowest part of the atrium, near the atrial septum, its orifice being directed upward and backward, and guarded by a rudimentary valve, the valve of the inferior vena cava (Eustachian valve). The blood entering the atrium through the superior vena cava is directed downward and forward, that is to say, toward the atrioventricular orifice, while that entering through the inferior vena cava is directed upward and backward, toward the atrial septum. This is the normal direction of the two currents in fetal life.

The coronary sinus opens into the atrium, between the orifice of the inferior vena cava and the atrioventricular opening. It returns blood from the substance of the heart and is protected by a semicircular valve, the valve of the coronary sinus.

The foramina venarum minimarum are the orifices of minute veins (venæ cordis minimæ), which return blood directly from the muscular substance of the heart.

The atrioventricular opening (tricuspid orifice) is the large oval aperture of communication between the atrium and the ventricle; it will be described with the right ventricle.

The valve of the inferior vena cava (valvula venæ cavæ inferioris; Eustachian valve) is situated in front of the orifice of the inferior vena cava. It is semilunar in form, its convex margin being attached to the anterior margin of the orifice; its concave margin, which is free, ends in two cornua, of which the left is continuous with the anterior edge of the limbus fossae ovalis while the right is lost on the wall of the atrium. The valve is formed by a duplicature of the lining membrane of the atrium, containing a few muscular fibers.

The valve of the coronary sinus (valvula sinus coronarii) is a semicircular fold of the lining membrane of the atrium, at the orifice of the coronary sinus. It prevents the regurgitation of blood into the sinus during the contraction of the atrium. This valve may be double or it may be cribriform.

THE VENTRICLES — the ventricles are separated by two grooves, one of which, the anterior longitudinal sulcus, is situated on the sternocostal surface of the heart, close to its left margin, the other posterior longitudinal sulcus, on the diaphragmatic surface near the right margin; these grooves extend from the base of the ventricular portion to a notch, the incisura apicis cordis, on the acute margin of the heart just to the right of the apex.

The base (basis cordis), directed upward, backward, and to the right, is separated from the fifth, sixth, seventh, and eighth thoracic vertebrae by the esophagus, aorta, and thoracic duct. It is formed mainly by the left atrium, and, to a small extent, by the back part of the right atrium. Quadrilateral in form, it is in relation above with the bifurcation of the pulmonary artery, and is bounded below by the posterior part of the coronary sulcus, containing the coronary sinus. On the right it is limited by the sulcus terminalis of the right atrium, and on the left by the ligament of the left vena cava and the oblique vein of the left atrium. The four pulmonary veins, two on either side, open into the left atrium, while the superior vena cava opens into the upper, and the anterior vena cava into the lower, part of the right atrium.

THE STERNOCOSTAL SURFACE is directed forward, upward, and to the left. Its lower part is convex, formed chiefly by the right ventricle, and traversed near its left margin by the anterior longitudinal sulcus. Its upper part is separated from the lower by the coronary sulcus, and is formed by the atria; it presents a deep concavity, occupied by the ascending aorta and the pulmonary artery.

THE DIAPHRAGMATIC SURFACE, directed downward and slightly backward, is formed by the ventricles, and rests upon the central tendon and a small part of the left muscular portion of the diaphragm. It is separated from the base by the posterior part of the coronary sulcus, and is traversed obliquely by the posterior longitudinal sulcus.

THE RIGHT MARGIN OF THE HEART is long, and is formed by the right atrium above and the right ventricle below. The atrial portion is rounded and almost vertical; it is situated behind the third, fourth, and fifth right costal cartilages about 1.25 cm from the margin of the sternum. The ventricular portion, thin and sharp, is named the acute margin; it is nearly horizontal, and extends from the sternal end of the sixth right costal cartilage to the apex of the heart.

THE RIGHT ATRIUM — the right atrium (atrium dextrum; right auricle) is larger than the left, but its walls are somewhat thinner, measuring about 2 mm; its cavity is capable of containing about 57 cc. It consists of two parts: a principal cavity, or sinus venarum, situated posteriorly, and an anterior, smaller portion, the auricula.

- The sinus venarum (sinus venosus) is the large quadrangular cavity placed between the two venae cavae. Its walls, which are extremely thin, are connected below with the right ventricle, and medially with the left atrium, but are free in the rest of their extent.
- The auricula (auricula dextra; right auricular appendix) is a small conical muscular pouch, the margins of which present a dentated edge. It projects from the upper and front part of the sinus forward and toward the left side, overlapping the root of the aorta.

The separation of the auricula from the sinus venarum is indicated externally by a groove, the terminal sulcus, which extends from the front of the superior vena cava to the front of the inferior vena cava, and represents the line of union of the sinus venosus of the embryo with the primitive atrium. On the inner wall of the atrium, the separation is marked by a vertical, smooth, muscular ridge, the terminal crest. Behind the crest the internal surface of the atrium is smooth, while in front of it the muscular fibers of the wall are raised into parallel ridges resembling the teeth of a comb, and hence named the muscoli pectinati.

THE LIMBUS FOSSAE OVALIS (ANNULUS OVALIS) is the prominent oval margin of the fossa ovalis. It is most distinct above and at the sides of the fossa; below, it is deficient. A small slit-like valvular opening is occasionally found, at the upper margin of the fossa, leading upward beneath the limbus, into the left atrium; it is the remains of the fetal aperture between the two atria.

THE INTERVENOUS TUBERCLE (TUBERCULUM INTERVENOSUM; TUBERCLE OF LOWER) is a small projection on the posterior wall of the atrium, above the fossa ovalis. It is distinct in the hearts of quadrupeds, but in man is scarcely visible. It was supposed by Lower to direct the blood from the superior vena cava toward the atrioventricular opening.

THE RIGHT VENTRICLE — the right ventricle is triangular in form, and extends from the right atrium to near the apex of the heart. Its anterosuperior surface is rounded and convex, and forms the larger part of the sternocostal surface of the heart. Its under surface is flattened, rests upon the diaphragm, and forms a small part of the diaphragmatic surface of the heart. Its posterior wall is formed by the ventricular septum, which bulges into the right ventricle, so that a transverse section of the cavity presents a semilunar outline. Its upper and left angle forms a conical pouch, the conus arteriosus, from which the pulmonary artery arises. A tendinous band, which may be named the tendon of the conus arteriosus, extends upward from the right atrioventricular fibrous ring and connects the posterior surface of the conus arteriosus to the aorta. The wall of the right ventricle is thinner than that of the left, the proportion between them being as 1 to 3; it is thickest at the base, and gradually becomes thinner toward the apex. The cavity equals in size that of the left ventricle, and is capable of containing about 85 cc.

THE RIGHT ATRIOVENTRICULAR — the right atrioventricular orifice is the large oval aperture of communication between the right atrium and ventricle. Situated at the base of the ventricle, it measures about 4 cm. in diameter and is surrounded by a fibrous ring, covered by the lining membrane of the heart; it is considerably larger than the corresponding aperture on the left side, being sufficient to admit the ends of four fingers. It is guarded by the tricuspid valve.

THE OPENING OF THE PULMONARY ARTERY is circular in form, and situated at the summit of the conus arteriosus, close to the ventricular septum. It is placed above and to the left of the atrioventricular opening, and is guarded by the pulmonary semilunar valves.

THE TRICUSPID VALVE (VALVULA TRICUSPIDALIS) consists of three triangular-like cusps or segments. The largest cusp is interposed between the atrioventricular orifice and the conus arteriosus and is termed the anterior or infundibular cusp. A second, the posterior or marginal cusp, is in relation to the right margin of the ventricle, and a third, the medial or septal cusp, to the ventricular septum. They are formed by duplicatures of the lining membrane of the heart, strengthened by intervening layers of fibrous tissue: their central parts are thick and strong, their marginal portions thin and translucent, and in the angles between the latter small intermediate segments are sometimes seen. Their bases are attached to a fibrous ring surrounding the atrioventricular orifice and are also joined to each other so as to form a continuous annular membrane, while their apices project into the ventricular cavity. Their atrial surfaces, directed toward the blood current from the atrium, are smooth; their ventricular surfaces, directed toward the wall of the ventricle, are rough and irregular, and, together with the apices and margins of the cusps, give attachment to a number of delicate tendinous cords, the chordae tendineae.

THE TRABECULAE CARNEAE (COLUMNÆ CARNEÆ) are rounded irregular muscular columns which project from the whole of the inner surface of the ventricle, with the exception of the conus arteriosus. They are of three kinds: some are attached along their entire length on one side and merely form prominent ridges, others are fixed at their extremities but free in the middle, while a third set (musculi papillares) are continuous by their bases with the wall of the ventricle, while their apices give origin to the chordae tendineae which pass to be attached to the segments of the tricuspid valve. There are two papillary muscles, anterior and posterior: of these, the anterior is the larger, and its chordae tendineae are connected with the anterior and posterior cusps of the valve: the posterior papillary muscle sometimes consists of two or three parts; its chordae tendineae are connected with the posterior and medial cusps. In addition to these, some chordae tendineae spring directly from the ventricular septum, or from small papillary eminences on it, and pass to the anterior and medial cusps.

THE PULMONARY SEMILUNAR VALVES are three in number, two in front and one behind, formed by duplicatures of the lining membrane, strengthened by fibrous tissue. They are attached, by their convex margins, to the wall of the artery, at its junction with the ventricle, their free borders being directed upward into the lumen of the vessel. The free and attached margins of each are strengthened by tendinous fibers, and the former presents, at its middle, a thickened nodule (corpus Arantii). From this nodule tendinous fibers radiate through the segment to its attached margin, but are absent from two narrow crescentic portions, the lunulae, placed one on either side of the nodule immediately adjoining the free margin. Between the semilunar valves and the wall of the pulmonary artery are three pouches or sinuses.

The principal cavity is cuboidal in form, and concealed, in front, by the pulmonary artery and aorta; in front and to the right it is separated from the right atrium by the atrial septum; opening into it on either side are the two pulmonary veins.

The auricula (left auricular appendix) is constricted at its junction with the principal cavity; it is longer, narrower, and more curved than that of the right side, and its margins are more deeply indented. It is directed forward and toward the right and overlaps the root of the pulmonary artery.

The interior of the left atrium has the following parts:

- Openings of the four pulmonary veins. The pulmonary veins, four in number, open into the upper part of the posterior surface of the left atrium — two on either side of its middle line: they are not provided with valves. The two left veins frequently end by a common opening.
- Left atrioventricular opening. The left atrioventricular opening is the aperture between the left atrium and ventricle, and is rather smaller than the corresponding opening on the right side.
- Musculi pectinati. The musculi pectinati, fewer and smaller than in the right auricula, are confined to the inner surface of the auricula.

On the atrial septum there is a lunated impression, bounded below by a crescentic ridge, the concavity of which is turned upward. The depression is just above the fossa ovalis of the right atrium.

THE LEFT VENTRICLE — The left ventricle is longer and more conical in shape than the right, and on transverse section its concavity presents an oval or nearly circular outline. It forms a small part of the sternocostal surface and a considerable part of the diaphragmatic surface of the heart; it also forms the apex of the heart. Its walls are about three times as thick as those of the right ventricle.

The left atrioventricular opening (mitral orifice) is placed below and to the left of the aortic orifice. It is a little smaller than the corresponding aperture of the opposite side. It is surrounded by a dense fibrous ring, covered by the lining membrane of the heart, and is guarded by the bicuspid or mitral valve.

The aortic opening is a circular aperture, in front and to the right of the atrioventricular, from which it is separated by the anterior cusp of the bicuspid valve. Its orifice is guarded by the aortic semilunar valves. The portion of the ventricle immediately below the aortic orifice is termed the aortic vestibule, and possesses fibrous instead of muscular walls.

The bicuspid or mitral valve is attached to the circumference of the left atrioventricular orifice in the same way that the tricuspid valve is on the opposite side. It consists of two triangular cusps, formed by duplicatures of the lining membrane, strengthened by fibrous tissue, and containing a few muscular fibers. The cusps are of unequal size, and are larger, thicker, and stronger than those of the tricuspid valve. The larger cusp is placed in front and to the right between the atrioventricular and aortic orifices, and is known as the anterior or aortic cusp; the smaller or posterior cusp is placed behind and to the left of the opening. Two smaller cusps are usually found at the angles of junction of the larger. The cusps of the bicuspid valve are furnished with chordae tendineae, which are attached in a manner similar to those on the right side; they are, however, thicker, stronger, and less numerous.

The aortic semilunar valves are three in number, and surround the orifice of the aorta; two are anterior (right and left) and one posterior. They are similar in structure, and in their mode of attachment, to the pulmonary semilunar valves, but are larger, thicker, and stronger; the lunulae are more distinct, and the noduli or corpora Arantii thicker and more prominent. Opposite the valves the aorta presents slight dilatations, the aortic sinuses, which are larger than those at the origin of the pulmonary artery.

The trabeculae carneae are of three kinds, like those upon the right side, but they are more numerous, and present a dense interlacement, especially at the apex, and upon the posterior wall of the ventricle. The muscoli papillares are two in number, one being connected to the anterior, the other to the posterior wall; they are of large size, and end in rounded extremities from which the chordae tendineae arise. The chordae tendineae from each papillary muscle are connected to both cusps of the bicuspid valve.

The ventricular septum (septum ventriculorum; interventricular septum) is directed obliquely backward and to the right, and is curved with the convexity toward the right ventricle: its margins correspond with the anterior and posterior longitudinal sulci. The greater portion of it is thick and muscular and constitutes the muscular ventricular septum, but its upper and posterior part, which separates the aortic vestibule from the lower part of the right atrium and upper part of the right ventricle, is thin and fibrous, and is termed the membranous ventricular septum.

STRUCTURE OF THE HEART

The heart consists of muscular fibers, and of fibrous rings which serve for their attachment. It is covered by the visceral layer of the serous pericardium (epicardium), and lined by the endocardium. Between these two membranes is the muscular wall or myocardium.

The endocardium is a thin, smooth membrane which lines and gives the glistening appearance to the inner surface of the heart; it assists in forming the valves by its reduplications, and is continuous with the lining membrane of the large bloodvessels. It consists of connective tissue and elastic fibers, and is attached to the muscular structure by loose elastic tissue which contains bloodvessels and nerves; its free surface is covered by endothelial cells.

The fibrous rings surround the atrioventricular and arterial orifices, and are stronger upon the left than on the right side of the heart. The atrioventricular rings serve for the attachment of the muscular fibers of the atria and ventricles, and for the attachment of the bicuspid and tricuspid valves. The left atrioventricular ring is closely connected, by its right margin, with the aortic arterial ring; between these and the right atrioventricular ring is a triangular mass of fibrous tissue, the trigonum fibrosum. Lastly, there is the tendinous band, already referred to, which is designated as the posterior surface of the conus arteriosus.

The fibrous rings surrounding the arterial orifices serve for the attachment of the great vessels and semilunar valves. Each ring receives, by its ventricular margin, the attachment of some of the muscular fibers of the ventricles; its opposite margin presents three deep semicircular notches, to which the middle coat of the artery is firmly fixed. The attachment of the artery to its fibrous ring is strengthened by the external coat and serous membrane externally, and by the endocardium internally. From the margins of the semicircular notches the fibrous structure of the ring is continued into the segments of the valves. The middle coat of the artery in this situation is thin, and the vessel is dilated to form the sinuses of the aorta and pulmonary artery.

THE CARDIAC MUSCULAR TISSUE

The fibers of the heart differ very remarkably from those of other striped muscles. They are smaller by one-third, and their transverse striae are by no means so well-marked. They show faint longitudinal striation. The fibers are made up of distinct quadrangular cells, joined end to end so as to form a syncytium. Each cell contains a clear oval nucleus, situated near its center. The extremities of the cells have a tendency to branch or divide, the subdivisions uniting with offsets from other cells, and thus producing an anastomosis of the fibers. The connective tissue between the bundles of fibers is much less than in ordinary striped muscle, and no sarcolemma⁶³² has been proved to exist.

⁶³² The sarcolemma is a specialized cell membrane which surrounds striated muscle fiber cells. Sometimes called the myolemma, the sarcolemma is similar to a typical plasma membrane but has specialized functions for the muscle cell. The sarcolemma also contains

Between the endocardium and the ordinary cardiac muscle are found, imbedded in a small amount of connective tissues. These tissues are very much larger in size than the cardiac cells and differ from them in several ways. In longitudinal section they are quadrilateral in shape, being about twice as long as they are broad. The central portion of each fiber contains one or more nuclei and is made up of granular protoplasm, with no indication of striations, while the peripheral portion is clear and has distinct transverse striations. The fibers are intimately connected with each other, possess no definite sarcolemma, and do not branch.

The muscular structure of the heart consists of bands of fibers, which present an exceedingly intricate interlacement. They comprise (a) the fibers of the atria, (b) the fibers of the ventricles, and (c) the atrioventricular bundle.

The fibers of the atria are arranged in two layers: a superficial, common to both cavities; and a deep, proper to each. The superficial fibers are most distinct on the front of the atria, across the bases of which they run in a transverse direction, forming a thin and incomplete layer. Some of these fibers run into the atrial septum. The deep fibers consist of looped and annular fibers. The looped fibers pass upward over each atrium, being attached by their two extremities to the corresponding atrioventricular ring, in front and behind. The annular fibers surround the auriculae, and form annular bands around the terminations of the veins and around the fossa ovalis.

The fibers of the ventricles are arranged in a complex manner. They consist of superficial and deep layers, all of which, with the exception of two, are inserted into the papillary muscles of the ventricles. The superficial layers consist of the following:

1. Fibers which spring from the tendon of the conus arteriosus and sweep downward and toward the left across the anterior longitudinal sulcus and around the apex of the heart, where they pass upward and inward to terminate in the papillary muscles of the left ventricle; those arising from the upper half of the tendon of the conus arteriosus pass to the anterior papillary muscle, those from the lower half to the posterior papillary muscle and the papillary muscles of the septum.

an extracellular matrix consisting of various polysaccharides which allows the cell to anchor into the tissues that build and support muscle fibers. Typically, the sarcolemma connects the basement membrane which surrounds all connective tissues, or to other muscle cells, creating a very strong fiber which can contract together. We will come to it further down in this section.

2. Fibers which arise from the right atrioventricular ring and run diagonally across the diaphragmatic surface of the right ventricle and around its right border on to its costosternal surface, where they dip beneath the fibers just described, and, crossing the anterior longitudinal sulcus, wind around the apex of the heart and end in the posterior papillary muscle of the left ventricle.
3. Fibers which spring from the left atrioventricular ring, and, crossing the posterior longitudinal sulcus, pass successively into the right ventricle and end in its papillary muscles.

The deep layers are three in number; they arise in the papillary muscles of one ventricle and, curving in an S-shaped manner, turn in at the longitudinal sulcus and end in the papillary muscles of the other ventricle. The layer which is most superficial in the right ventricle is placed next the lumen of the left, and vice versa. Those of the first layer almost encircle the right ventricle and, crossing in the septum to the left, unite with the superficial fibers from the right atrioventricular ring to form the posterior papillary muscle. Those of the second layer have a less extensive course in the wall of the right ventricle, and a correspondingly greater course in the left, where they join with the superficial fibers from the anterior half of the tendon of the conus arteriosus to form the papillary muscles of the septum. Those of the third layer pass almost entirely around the left ventricle and unite with the superficial fibers from the lower half of the tendon of the conus arteriosus to form the anterior papillary muscle. Besides the layers just described there are two bands which do not end in papillary muscles. One springs from the right atrioventricular ring and crosses in the atrioventricular septum; it then encircles the deep layers of the left ventricle and ends in the left atrioventricular ring. The second band is apparently confined to the left ventricle; it is attached to the left atrioventricular ring, and encircles the portion of the ventricle adjacent to the aortic orifice.

The atrioventricular bundle is the only direct muscular connection known to exist between the atria and the ventricles. Its cells differ from ordinary cardiac muscle cells in being more spindle-shaped. They are, moreover, more loosely arranged and have a richer vascular supply than the rest of the heart muscle. It arises in connection with two small collections of spindle-shaped cells, the sinoatrial and atrioventricular nodes. The sinoatrial node is situated on the anterior border of the opening of the superior vena cava; its strands of fusiform fibers run under the endocardium of the wall of the atrium to the atrioventricular node. The atrioventricular node lies near the orifice of the coronary sinus in the annular and septal fibers of the right atrium; from it the atrioventricular bundle passes forward in the lower part of the membranous septum, and divides into right and left fasciculi. These run down in the right and left ventricles, one on either side of the ventricular septum, covered by endocardium. In the lower parts of the ventricles they break up into numerous strands which end in the papillary muscles and in the ventricular muscle generally. The greater portion of the atrioventricular bundle consists of narrow, somewhat fusiform fibers, but its terminal strands are composed of Purkinje fibers.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE HEART

The arteries supplying the heart are the right and left coronary from the aorta; the veins end in the right atrium. The lymphatics end in the thoracic and right lymphatic ducts. The nerves are derived from the cardiac plexus, which are formed partly from the vagi, and partly from the sympathetic trunks. They are freely distributed both on the surface and in the substance of the heart, the separate nerve filaments being furnished with small ganglia.

THE CARDIAC CYCLE AND THE ACTIONS OF THE VALVES OF THE HEART

All oxygen-poor blood returning from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will enter the right side of the heart through two veins: the superior vena cava and the inferior vena cava (see figure). The superior vena cava will collect oxygen-poor blood from the upper half of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The inferior vena cava will collect oxygen-poor blood from the lower half of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The oxygen-poor blood will leave the superior vena cava and the inferior vena cava and it will enter the right atrium ❶ and go through a first process that was defined by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” at this right atrium and where it will take “specific parameters”.

When the right atrium will contract, the oxygen-poor blood resulting from this first process will go through the tricuspid valve and into the right ventricle ❷ and go through a second process that was defined by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” at this right ventricle and where it will take additional “specific parameters”.

When the right ventricle will contract, the oxygen-poor blood resulting from this second process will be pumped through the pulmonary valve ❸, into the pulmonary artery and into the lungs where, with its additional “specific parameters”, it will pick up oxygen, following a third process that was defined by

“THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” on this path to the lungs. It is so that, the right side of the heart will pump oxygen-poor blood to the lungs first to pick up oxygen, during the pulmonary circulation, before going to the left side of the heart where it will be returned to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” rich of oxygen.

Oxygen-rich blood will now return to the heart from the lungs by way of the pulmonary veins and it will go into the left atrium ④ and go through a fourth process that was defined by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” at this right atrium and where it will take “specific parameters”. When the left atrium will contract, the resulting oxygen-rich blood from this fourth process will travel through the mitral valve and into the left ventricle ⑤ and go through a fifth process that was defined by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” at this left ventricle and where it will take additional “specific parameters”.

The left ventricle is a very important chamber that will pump oxygen-rich blood, with its additional “specific parameters”, through the aortic valve ⑥ and into the aorta, following a sixth process that was defined by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” on this path to the aorta.

The aorta is the main artery of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The aorta will receive all the oxygen-rich blood that the heart has pumped out and through the aorta, the received oxygen-rich blood will be distribute to the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The left ventricle has a thicker muscle than any other heart chamber because it must pump blood to the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against much higher pressure in the general circulation (blood pressure).

The atria and ventricles work together, alternately contracting and relaxing to pump blood through the heart. This is accomplished through the “electrical conduction system” of the heart.

THE ELECTRICAL CONDUCTION SYSTEM OF THE HEART — the electrical conduction system of the heart is a network of specialised cardiac cells deployed through nodes and electrical conduction fibers to generate, supply, transfer, and use “electrical potentials for action” at a sustained rate in order to get cardiac “contractile cells” to perform their assigned “specific work”. The primary function of these specialised cardiac cells is the production and propagation (supply and transfer) of an appropriately generated impulse that represents the synergy of the “specific effects” and “specific behaviors” associated with the “electrical potentials for action” of its individual “electricity generation cells”. The electrical conduction system of the heart consists of the following components: a sinus node, internodal pathways and interatrial pathway, an atrioventricular node, an atrioventricular bundle, and Purkinje fibres.

The specialized cardiac cells, from which these components of the electrical conduction system of the heart have been built, have been endowed with high capacity to generate and propagate (supply and transfer) “electrical potentials for action” at a sustained rate and without any loss in electrical voltage through to their end recipients that have been constructed using “contractile cells”.

The sinus node, constructed using specialized cardiac primary “electricity generation cells”, is located beneath the epicardium, along the superior aspect of the sulcus terminalis, near the confluence of the superior vena cava, the sinus venosus, and the muscular right atrial free wall. These latter two structures are the reason why the sinus node is also designated as the sinoatrial node. It is elliptical in shape with the sinoatrial nodal artery running centrally through the nodal tissue.

The internodal pathways and the interatrial pathway, constructed using cardiac “conducting cells”, serve as preferential conduction pathways by which impulse propagation, which is the propagation of the synergy of the “specific effects” and “specific behaviors” associated with the “electrical potentials for action” of the individual “electricity generation cells” constituents of the sinus node, is transmitted from the sinus node to both (1) the atrioventricular node through the internodal pathways, and (2) the left atrial through the interatrial pathway, which resides on the inner wall of the left atrium and passes from the right atrium, between the superior vena cava and the ascending aorta, through to the left atrium.

The atrioventricular node, constructed using cardiac “conducting cells”, is located beneath the endocardium (rather than beneath the epicardium as it is the case with the sinus node) within the confluence of the tricuspid annulus (of the septal tricuspid leaflet), the ostium of the coronary sinus, and the tendon of Todaro. The atrioventricular node serves as an “electrical relay station” between the upper and lower chambers of the heart. Electrical impulses coming from the atria must undergo well designed and established “specific processing” at the atrioventricular node before transmission to the ventricles. After this “specific processing”, the resulting electrical impulses are transmitted to the next component of the electrical conduction system of the heart: the atrioventricular bundle.

The atrioventricular bundle, constructed using cardiac “conducting cells”, extends from the atrioventricular node, traveling through the central fibrous body, to the basal ventricular septum, adjacent to the membranous septum. There, it splits into two atrioventricular bundle branches, designated as the left and right bundle branches. The left bundle branch has two fascicles. The left bundle branch supplies the left ventricle, and the right bundle branch the right ventricle. Since the left ventricle is much larger than the right ventricle, the left bundle branch is also considerably larger than the right. Portions of the right bundle branch are found in the moderator band and supply the right papillary muscles. Because of this connection, each papillary muscle will receive the input “specific signal” originating from sinus node at approximately the same time, so that they can begin to perform their assign “specific work” simultaneously just prior to the remainder of the myocardial “contractile cells” of the ventricles. This will allow tension to develop on the chordae tendineae prior to right ventricular contraction. There is no corresponding moderator band on the left. Both bundle branches descend and reach the apex of the heart where they connect with specialized “cardiac neurons” designated as Purkinje neurons.

Purkinje neurons, also designated as Purkinje cells, are a unique type of multipolar neurons. They are remarkable (and instantly recognizable) for their massive, intricately branched, flat dendritic trees, which give them the ability to integrate large amounts of information and to learn by remodeling their dendrites.

The Purkinje neurons are specialized cardiac “conductive cells” that spread the impulse to the myocardial “contractile cells” in the ventricles. They extend throughout the myocardium from the apex of the heart toward the atrioventricular septum and the base of the heart. These specialized cardiac “conductive cells” have a fast inherent conduction rate, and the travelling electrical impulse reaches all of the ventricular muscle cells in about 75 ms. Since the electrical stimulus begins at the apex, the contraction also begins at the apex and travels toward the base of the heart, similar to squeezing a tube of toothpaste from the bottom. This allows the blood to be pumped out of the ventricles and into the aorta and pulmonary trunk. The total time elapsed from the initiation of the impulse in the sinus node — that is to say, the synergy of the “specific effects” and “specific behaviors” associated with the “electrical potentials for action” of the individual “electricity generation cells” constituents of the sinus node — until depolarization of the ventricles is approximately 225 ms.

Each specialized cardiac cell in each of these components of the electrical conduction system of the heart is able to spontaneously depolarize as the cell undergoes the process of cellular respiration and performs its assigned “specific work”. The electrical pattern of an “electricity generation cell” is distinct from the electrical pattern of a specialized cardiac “conductive cell”, which in turn is distinct from the electrical pattern of a specialized cardiac “contractile cell”.

By virtue of its position relative to: (1) the ions and molecules that are in the microenvironment both inside and outside of the cell, (2) stresses within itself, (3) its electric charge, and (4) relative to the position of other cell located outside of the sinus node, a specialized cardiac cell, designated as the cardiac primary “electricity generation cell”, at the sinus node will generate an “electrical potential for action” much higher than the “electrical potential for action” that a cell outside of the sinus node would generate.

During the process of cellular respiration and as a specialized cardiac cell will perform its assigned “specific work”, the “electrical potential for action” is caused by a transiently increased rapid permeability to sodium ions and a slightly longer lasting increase in permeability to calcium ions that results in their influx into the cytoplasm, thus changing the cell membrane electrical potential, as we have already explained in the brief descriptions on cellular biology. As this transient permeability terminates, the cell membranal potassium channels open, and rapid outward potassium flux results in hyperpolarization (along with sodium and calcium efflux), ultimately bringing the cell membrane electrical potential back to the steady state associated with the resting membrane electrical potential. During this period of time (refractory period), the specialized cardiac cell under consideration cannot depolarize again because of a special conformation of the cell membrane sodium channels that is transiently terminated with depolarization and regained only with hyperpolarization. Intrinsically, the resting membrane electrical potential of a specialized cardiac cell at the sinus node is more positive than that of a cell located outside of the sinus node. This difference is due to the “specific position” of the sinus node inside the heart and the ions and molecules that are in the microenvironment both inside and outside of each specialized cardiac cell at the sinus node.

Once each “electricity generation cell” at the sinus node has accomplished its assigned “specific work”, then the resulting impulse in the sinus node — that is to say, the synergy of the “specific effects” and “specific behaviors” associated with the “electrical potentials for action” of the individual “electricity generation cells” constituents of the sinus node — is transmitted through the intermodal pathways.

With unmatched precision, this whole process, which is at the basis of the cardiac cycle, has been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” so that all components of the electrical conduction system of the heart function in perfect synchronization. You (reading these writings) should understand that this is an incredible achievement given that the normal conditions in “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”, hence of “THE DIVINE”, and where “THE DIVINE FORCE” has performed HER office before the creation of the attribute “NON DIVINE”, are billions of times “three thousand six hundred forty billion” times brighter and more powerful than the substance of the solar Star. Thus, the construction by “THE DIVINE FORCE” of this electrical conduction system of the heart, as well as all the constituents of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” and inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, is almost similar to the art of drapery, in the field of clothing using the finest wool, the finest linen, softer and more solid, while remaining very fragile and billions of times “three thousand six hundred forty billion” times less brighter and less powerful than “THE DIVINE SUBSTANCE”.⁶³³ That is why it

⁶³³ If you manage to grasp these things, to truly understand who you are, to have a good idea of “THE SCIENCE” that is in you, to grasp the difference in scale that exists between you and “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and between you and “THE DIVINE”, then you will understand the depth of the “obscurity” and the stupidity in which these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” on both sides of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”, who self-proclaimed themselves to be “gods”, standing right there, watching the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you now wear coming into existence without understanding anything of what “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing, have immersed and locked up humanity and THE CREATION. Then you will also also understand to what extent these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” on both sides of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR” are pathetic and miserable, in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”. They have destroyed and killed so many human creatures since the first two, in order to hide their ignorance and own iniquities and they keep presenting themselves without shame and remorse, of the consequences of their destructive actions, as will be said in parables and about such achievement of “THE DIVINE FORCE” that:

Full with energy, SHE gets to work and activates Her arms. Her hands spin the wool and her fingers weave garments.

Both atria and both ventricles will contract and relax at the same time and atrial contraction will occur simultaneous to the late ventricular relaxation. The depolarization wave will also be conducted fast at certain points along the conduction pathway and slower at others. It is a perfect and scaled replica by metaphor of the movement of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

When the impulse is generated in the sinoatrial node and its associated synergetic “specific effect” and synergetic “specific behaviour” are transmitted throughout the internodal pathways to reach the atrioventricular node and throughout the interatrial pathway to reach the left atrial, these associated synergetic “specific effect” and synergetic “specific behaviour” are interpreted and also appropriately cascaded down as “input signals” through the specialized cardiac cells that constitute the internodal and interatrial conducting pathways so that they start elevated creatures, propelling themselves above human creatures. Well, now they are well aware of the forthcoming cleanup.

Stand in “PURITY” and speak to “THE DIVINE FORCE” and you will learn things. SHE is your “REAL MOTHER”! You, as human creatures, currently live on Earth as orphans, like those who are in the absence of knowledge from their parents. Why do you think that when you find yourself in terrible situations of life and death, whatever your beliefs, whatever the color of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, your soul calls directly, and you are aware of such call, to its “CREATOR”, “THE DIVINE”? Go to “THE DIVINE FORCE”! Once you find HER, you would instantly know who SHE is, and you would instantly know that you have known HER from birth, you, as human creatures, come into existence with such knowledge and placed directly at deep inside of you, and SHE will speak to you about your TRUE FATHER! Just as you would look for a lost treasure, or you would look for a loved one who is directly related to your birth and whom you have not known, go in search of “THE DIVINE FORCE”. How? Which way, you would ask? STAND IN PURITY AND HOLD YOUR GROUND! Remember the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”. NO ONE CAN ESCAPE IT. None of those who have embraced evil can understand this. For them, it is part of the realm of the incomprehensible.

performing their assigned “specific work” and send the output of their “specific work” to other targeted cardiac cells designated as cardiac “contractile cells” located in the atria.

It is so that, both right and left atria will contract simultaneously and in a coordinated manner that will allow for the pushing of blood into the ventricles. The conduction velocity is then slowed down when propagating through the atrioventricular node. The time it takes to conduct the propagating depolarization front of the impulse through the atrioventricular node and penetrating atrioventricular bundles is approximately four times longer than the time it takes for it to be conducted from the sinoatrial node to the atrioventricular node. This delay in conduction will serve to empty the atria from its blood content before that the cardiac “contractile cells” that constitute the ventricles start to perform their assigned “specific work”, the synergetic result of which will be the manifested contraction of the ventricles. It also so that the blood will flow unidirectionally between the atria and the ventricles, above and beyond the similar role played by the atrioventricular valves.

In the state of equilibrium, these contractions will occur regularly and at the rate of seventy (70) per minute. Each wave of contraction or period of activity (the diastole) will be followed by a period of rest (the systole); the two periods constituting the cardiac cycle.

Finally, the travelling “specific signal” carried by the propagating depolarization front of the impulse originally generated in the sinoatrial node is delivered through the atrioventricular bundle, bundle branches, and Purkinje neurons in a velocity approximately 150 times faster than that of the atrioventricular node. The bundle branches run along the subendocardium of the interventricular septum and free ventricular walls and give rise to Purkinje neurons that supply the myocardium in a subendocardial-to-epicardial direction. This organization allows for a rapid and synchronous contraction of both ventricles at an order that ultimately enables blood to be “squeezed” from apex to base, toward both outflow tracts.

THE CARDIAC CYCLE

The cardiac cycle refers to all of the series of events that occur from the beginning of the initiation of the impulse in the sinus node — that is to say, the synergy of the “specific effects” and “specific behaviors” associated with the “electrical potentials for action” of the individual “electricity generation cells” constituents of the sinus node — to the beginning of the next impulse in the sinus node. It can be divided into two parts: a period of relaxation designated as the “diastole” and a period of contraction designated as the “systole”.

Diastole is a complex sequence of interrelated events that are manifested as the synergetic result of the “specific work” accomplished by the “electricity generation cells”, the specialized cardiac “conduction cells”, and the specialized cardiac “contractile cells”. Diastole starts when the aortic valve closes and ends at mitral valve closure. It can also be divided into two phases designated as the isovolumetric and filling phases.

The isovolumetric phase is characterized by a rapid decline in intraventricular pressure following closure of the aortic valve and results from the decoupling of specialized cardiac “contractile cells”. The filling phase is further divided into an early rapid filling step, a diastasis step, and the atrial contraction step. The early filling phase will begin with the opening of the mitral valve when the left ventricular pressure will fall below the left atrium pressure. Following rapid filling, the ventricle will be quiescent for a period, when there will be no flow (diastasis). This will be followed by a sudden increase in left atrium pressure from atrial systole that will allow a terminal increase in the left ventricular filling in late diastole. Since the left ventricle will be already partially full by this time, further filling by atrial contraction will depend on structural compliance of the left ventricle or any external restraint to filling.

The two major determinants of left ventricular filling are ventricular relaxation and chamber compliance. Ventricular relaxation is the synergetic result that is manifested once the specialized cardiac “contractile cells” have completed their assigned “specific work”, assumed their predefined “specific behaviors”, and return to their “resting behaviors” (precontraction). Ventricular relaxation will begin during midsystole and it will continue throughout the first third of diastolic filling.

Each phase has factors that determine how the ventricle fills during this time. The isovolumetric phase depends on continuity with systole, energy available for initiating relaxation, and left atrium pressure. Early filling will reflect the left atrium-to-left ventricle pressure gradient, the left atrium volume, and elastic recoil.

In systole, the myocardium contracts as a manifestation of the synergetic result of the “specific work” accomplished by the specialized cardiac “contractile cells”. This contraction will lead to a rapid increase in intraventricular pressure. Because the aortic and pulmonary valves will be shut during diastole, the sudden rise in pressure will lead to closure of the atrioventricular valves. In this brief period, which will be designated as the “isovolumetric contraction”, the change in ventricular pressure will not lead to a change in ventricular volume because the blood will not yet be ejected into the aorta and pulmonary arteries. When the pressure in the ventricles will exceed the pressure in the great arteries, the aortic and pulmonary valves (semilunar valves) will open and the ejection of the blood through the right and left side outflow tracts will ensue (ejection phase). Simultaneously with the ejection phase, the atria will relax, atrial pressure falls, and blood will enter the atria and pool within it passively.

Thus it is that electrical conduction system of the heart is at the origin of the autonomous and incessant movement of the heart, once it is powered by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁶³⁴

⁶³⁴ It is a manifested metaphor into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” of the “Generative Power of ‘THE DIVINE’” as “THE DIVINE FORCE” has applied it to the inner and outer structures of the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” designated as the “Sun”, the “solar star”, as well as to the inner and outer structures of all the “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”, which have been produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in the “Plane Below” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, and of the countless others “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” which are designated as the “LUMINAIRES” (or the “STARS”; not the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who dwelt in there and carry the same designations). The inner and outer structures of all

Although the “electricity generation cells” of the sinus node generate the electrical impulse that causes the heart to beat, other nerves can change the rate at which these “electricity generation cells” of the sinus node generate those electrical impulse and the how strongly the heart contractions will be manifested. These nerves are part of the autonomic nervous system. The autonomic nervous system has two parts: the sympathetic nervous system and the parasympathetic nervous system. The sympathetic nerves increase the heart rate and increase the force of contraction. The parasympathetic nerves do the opposite.

As we have explained already, “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven (7) “Divine Particles” is characterized by one configuration in one movement and by one state of equilibrium which is obtained from the movement, and the frequency of emission of the products of the work accomplished by the seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” in this state of equilibrium is equal to 42 (6 x 7) emissions per “transformation sub-step”, in each of the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Divine Septenary Configuration” of one “Generative Divine Particle” and six (6) “Formative Divine Particles”.

In much the same, the frequency of emission of the products of the works accomplished by this inverted cone-shaped red viscera, in the equilibrium state that has been associated with it, has been expressed to the hundred-fold, resulting in 4200 beats per “transformation sub-step” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and for a “PERFECT” volemia — the total volume of “blood” flowing through the manifestation by the metaphor of the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” —. This “PERFECT” volemia is equal to 5 liters of “blood”. By using the current metrics, this frequency of emission of the products of the works accomplished by this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will correspond to those “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” radiant in their state of “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, and which we have already described in one previous chapter, function on this same principle that has been associated to those special group of cells of the heart muscle and which have been endowed with the ability to generate electrical activity on their own and once they are powered by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

We add all these explanations so that you (reading these scriptures) can reflect properly about “THE SCIENCE” which is inside you. Above all, we add all these explanations so that you can meditate on yourself regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE FORCE” and regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

70 beats per minute. It is thus that, this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will propel some 7000 liters of blood every day into the cardiovascular system.

Propelled by this inverted cone-shaped red viscera, the blood, which will represent 8% of the weight of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, will circulate throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through a vast network of blood vessels. Three types of vessels will transport blood: arteries, capillaries and veins. The rhythmic contractions of this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will propel the red liquid into the arteries. These will carry the blood from this inverted cone-shaped red viscera to all the regions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The capillaries, which are small networks intertwined with tiny very thin blood vessels, will then allow exchanges between the blood and the cells thanks to their extremely thin wall. The blood will then be redirected to this inverted cone-shaped red viscera by the veins.

THE BLOOD VESSELS

The blood vessels will form a network with a total length of 150000 km! They will be divided into two distinct circuits: the pulmonary circulation and the systemic circulation. The pulmonary circulation will ensure gas exchanges between the blood and the air that will be contained in the lungs. The systemic circulation will ensure the blood supply to all the organs and tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. When this inverted cone-shaped red viscera will contract, its two ventricles will simultaneously eject blood in the two circuits.

Mainly consisting of water, the blood’s function is to supply nutrients to the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will take care of the transport of oxygen and nutrients to the cells and will rid them of their waste. The circulation of the blood will participate in controlling the temperature of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as well as in regulating the volume of certain liquids in the tissues of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Blood will consist of cells and cell fragments floating in an aqueous liquid, plasma. The blood cells will consist of: red blood cells, white blood cells, plasma, serum and platelets. Platelets are not real cells but fragments of giant cells. White blood cells, red blood cells and platelets will all come from the same type of cell, hemocytoblasts, which will be produced by the red bone marrow. Below are brief descriptions of these cell fragments, and which you are already familiar with from the biology lessons and available encyclopaedia.

PLASMA

Plasma, a colorless liquid that contains the fatty components of the blood that will give it a yellowish color, consists of 90% water in which the blood cells and platelets circulate. It will represent 54% of the total volume of the blood and will contain almost everything that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will use and produce: nutritive substances coming from the digestion of food, minerals, proteins, hormones, antibodies⁶³⁵, growth factors and immunizing agents. The plasma will in particular ensure the transport of nutrients and hormones to the cells, as well as the distribution of heat in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The water of the plasma is freely exchangeable with that of cells and other extracellular fluids and is available to maintain the normal state of hydration of all tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Water, the single largest constituent of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, will be essential to the existence of every living cell that it contains.

The major solute of plasma is a heterogeneous group of proteins constituting about 7% of the plasma by weight. The principal difference between the plasma and the extracellular fluid of the tissues will be the high protein content of the plasma. Plasma protein will exert an osmotic effect by which water will tend to move from other extracellular fluid to the plasma. When dietary protein will be digested in the gastrointestinal tract, individual amino acids will be released from the polypeptide chains and will be absorbed. The amino acids will be transported through the plasma to all parts of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, where they will be taken up by cells and will be assembled in specific ways to form proteins of many types. These plasma proteins will be released into the blood from the cells in which they will be synthesized. Much of the protein of plasma will be produced in the liver.

The major plasma protein will be serum albumin, a relatively small molecule, the principal function of which will be to retain water in the bloodstream by its osmotic effect. The amount of serum albumin in the blood will be a determinant of the total volume of plasma. Depletion of serum albumin will permit fluid to leave the circulation and to accumulate and cause swelling of soft tissues (edema). Serum albumin will bind certain other substances, which will be transported in plasma and thus serves as a nonspecific carrier protein. Bilirubin, for example, will be bound to serum albumin during its passage through the blood. Serum albumin will have physical properties that permit its separation from other plasma proteins, which as a group will be called globulins. These will be a heterogeneous array of proteins of widely varying structure and function. The immunoglobulins, or antibodies, will be produced in response to a specific foreign substance, or antigen. Other plasma proteins will be concerned with the coagulation of the blood.

Many proteins will be involved in highly specific ways with the transport function of the blood. Blood lipids will be incorporated into protein molecules as lipoproteins, substances which will be important in lipid transport. Iron and copper will be transported in plasma by unique metal-binding proteins (transferrin and ceruloplasmin, respectively). Vitamin B12, which will be essential nutrient, will be bound to a specific carrier protein. Although hemoglobin will not be normally released into the plasma, a hemoglobin-binding protein (haptoglobin) will be available to transport hemoglobin to the reticuloendothelial system, should hemolysis (breakdown) of red cells occur. The serum haptoglobin level will be raised during inflammation and certain other conditions; it will be lowered in hemolytic disease and some types of liver disease. All this, all these proteins and all the functions of each of these proteins have been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”.

Several inorganic materials — among others sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium, iron, copper, zinc, bicarbonate, phosphate, and iodide — will also be essential constituents of plasma and each will have special functional attributes, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”:

- Sodium — the predominant cation (positively charged ion) of the plasma will be sodium, an ion that will occur within cells at a much lower concentration. Because of the effect of sodium on osmotic pressure and fluid movements, the amount of sodium in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be an influential determinant of the total volume of extracellular fluid. The amount of sodium in plasma will be controlled by the kidneys under the influence of the hormone aldosterone, which will be secreted by the adrenal gland;
- Potassium — Potassium will be the principal intracellular cation, will occur in plasma at a much lower concentration than sodium. The renal excretion of potassium will be influenced by aldosterone, which will cause retention of sodium and loss of potassium;
- Calcium — Calcium in plasma will be in part bound to protein and in part ionized. Its concentration will be under the control of two hormones: parathyroid hormone, which will cause the level to rise, and calcitonin, which causes it to fall;
- Magnesium — Magnesium, like potassium, will be a predominantly intracellular cation and it will occur in plasma in low concentration. Variations in the concentrations of these cations will have profound effects on the nervous system, the muscles, and the heart, effects which will normally be prevented by precise regulatory mechanisms;
- Iron, copper, and zinc — these will be required in trace amounts for synthesis of essential enzymes⁶³⁶; much more iron will be needed in ⁶³⁶ Enzymes are proteins that act as biological catalysts (biocatalysts). Catalysts accelerate chemical reactions. The molecules upon which enzymes may act are called substrates, and the enzyme converts the substrates into different molecules known as products. Almost all addition for production of hemoglobin and myoglobin, the oxygen-binding pigment of muscles. These metals will occur in plasma in low concentrations. The principal anion (negatively charged ion) of plasma will be chloride; sodium chloride will be its major salt;

- Bicarbonate — Bicarbonate will participate in the transport of carbon dioxide and in the regulation of pH⁶³⁷;
- Phosphate — Phosphate also has a buffering effect on the pH of the blood and will be vital for chemical reactions of cells and for the metabolism of calcium;
- Iodide — Iodide will be transported through plasma in trace amounts; it will be avidly taken up by the thyroid gland, which will incorporate it into thyroid hormone.

The hormones of all the endocrine glands will be secreted into the plasma and transported to their target organs, the organs on which they exert their effects. The plasma levels of these agents will reflect the functional activity of the glands that secrete them. Among the many other constituents of plasma will be numerous enzymes, each will have special functional attributes, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”.

THE RED BLOOD CELL

The red blood cell (also designated as erythrocytes, from Greek erythros for “red” and kytos for “hollow vessel”, with -cyte translated as “cell” in modern usage) is a small, flattened thin cell with concave faces. It is approximately 7.8 μm in diameter and has the form of biconcave disk, a shape that provides a large metabolic processes in the cell need enzyme catalysis in order to occur at rates fast enough to sustain life. Metabolic pathways depend upon enzymes to catalyze individual steps. Like all catalysts, enzymes increase the reaction rate by lowering its activation energy. Some enzymes can make their conversion of substrate to product occur many millions of times faster.

surface-to-volume ratio. The red blood cell is enclosed in a thin membrane that is composed of chemically complex lipids, proteins, and carbohydrates in a highly organized structure. Extraordinary distortion of the red cell occurs in its passage through minute blood vessels, many of which have a diameter less than that of the red cell. When the deforming stress is removed, the cell springs back to its original shape. The red cell readily tolerates bending and folding, but, if appreciable stretching of the membrane occurs, the cell is damaged or destroyed. The membrane is freely permeable to water, oxygen, carbon dioxide, glucose, urea, and certain other substances, but it is impermeable to hemoglobin, which it contains. The red blood cell is a living and concrete image of the “Generative Divine Particle”, which mimics the life carrying properties and effects of the “Generative Divine Particles” inside the manifestation by the metaphor of the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Red blood cells will be produced continuously in the marrow of certain bones. The principal sites of red blood cells production, called erythropoiesis, are the marrow spaces of the vertebrae, ribs, breastbone, and pelvis. Within the bone marrow the red blood cell will be derived from a primitive precursor, or erythroblast, a nucleated cell in which there is no hemoglobin. Proliferation will occur as a result of several successive cell divisions. During maturation, hemoglobin will appear in the cell, and the nucleus will become progressively smaller. After a few days the cell will lose its nucleus and will then be introduced into the bloodstream in the vascular channels of the marrow. Almost 1 percent of the red blood cells will be generated each day, and the balance between red blood cell production and the removal of aging red blood cells from the circulation will be maintained precisely. When blood will be lost from the circulation, the erythropoietic activity of marrow will increase until the normal number of circulating cells has been restored, as it has been established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”.

In the adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” the red blood cells of about half a litre of blood will be produced by the bone marrow every seven days, and in accordance with the manifestations of the “primary transformation”, the “secondary transformation”, the “tertiary transformation”, the “quaternary transformation”, the “quinary transformation”, the “senary transformation”, and the “‘end of cycle’ transformation” of the “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven (7) “Divine Particles”. A number of nutrient substances will be required to fulfill this production process. Some nutrients will be the building blocks of which the red blood cells will be composed. For example, amino acids will be needed in abundance for the construction of the proteins of the red blood cell, in particular of hemoglobin. Iron also will be a necessary component of hemoglobin. Approximately one-quarter of a gram of iron will be needed for the production of half a litre of blood. Other substances, required in trace amounts, will be needed to catalyze the chemical reactions by which red blood cells will be produced. Important among these will be several vitamins such as riboflavin, vitamin B12, and folic acid, necessary for the maturation of the developing red blood cell; and vitamin B6 (pyridoxine), required for the synthesis of hemoglobin. The secretions of several endocrine glands will also influence the production of red blood cells.

The red blood cell will have an average life span of 120 days in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. Because the red blood cell has not been endowed with the capacity to synthesize protein, reparative processes will not be applied on it. As the red blood cell will age, wear and tear will lead to loss of some of its protein, and the activity of some of its essential enzymes will decrease. Chemical reactions necessary for the survival of the cell will consequently be impaired. As a result, water will pass into the aging red blood cell, transforming its usual discoid shape into a sphere. These spherocytes are inelastic, and, as they sluggishly will move through the circulation in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, they will be engulfed by phagocytes.⁶³⁸

⁶³⁸ We have added such descriptive texts in order to lead you to meditate and understand the extent of “scientific modelling” activities, which “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “THE DIVINE FORCE”:

- Have developed and deployed before the creation of the attribute “NON DIVINE”, in order to conceive, understand, define, quantify, visualize, simulate, select and identify relevant aspects of the concept of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”, and the possible situations, which will be implemented inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”; and then
- Using different types of models for different aims, to better represent manifestations of metaphors of products that are produced as well as those that are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and their “specific behaviour”, which is regulated by the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, and to set those manifested products into operation; and
- Ultimately produce into models all the details of the particular parts or features of the systems, which constitute the creatures, which have been brought forth inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

Within the red blood cell, the major cation⁶³⁹ is potassium; in contrast, in plasma and extracellular fluids, the major cation is sodium. A “specific mechanism pumping”, driven by enzymes within the red blood cell, will help maintain its sodium and potassium concentrations. The red blood cell is subject to effects which are related to the osmosis. When it is suspended in very dilute (hypotonic) solutions of sodium chloride, the red blood cell will take in water, which will cause it to increase in volume and to become more spheroid; in concentrated salt solutions, it will lose water and shrink.

If it occurs that the membrane of the red blood cell gets damaged, hemoglobin and other dissolved contents may escape from the cell, leaving the membranous structure as “empty”. This process, which will be designated as hemolysis, will be produced not only by the effects which are related to the osmosis of water but also by numerous other “specific mechanisms” which have been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. These include: physical damage to red blood cell, as when blood will be heated, will be forced under great pressure through a small needle, or will be subjected to freezing and thawing; chemical damage to the red blood cell by external agents; and damage caused by immunologic reactions that may occur when antibodies will attach to red cells in the presence of complement. When such destruction will proceed at a greater than normal rate, then that, which is designated as hemolytic anemia will result.

The membrane of the red blood cell has on its surface a group of molecules that will confer the blood group specificity (that is to say, that will differentiate blood cells into groups). Most blood group substances are composed of carbohydrate

Do not neglect the vast amount of work, which “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “THE DIVINE FORCE” have deployed in order to bring you forth into existence. Be conscious of these things as well as all others things, which you see all around you and which you take for granted or to be self-obvious, and write them on the table of your heart.

Meditate on yourself regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE FORCE” and regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

⁶³⁹ A cation is an ion which, having lost one or more electrons, carries one or more positive electric charges: conversely, an anion contains more electrons than protons. It is so called because it is attracted, during electrolysis, by the negative electrode, called cathode, in the same way that the opposite charge poles of the magnets attract. For example, the sodium ion, denoted Na⁺, is the sodium atom that has lost an electron. In summary, a cation is positively charged while the anion is negatively charged.

linked to protein, and it will be the chemical structure of the carbohydrate portion that will determine the specific blood type.

Red blood cells will represent 45% of the total volume of blood. In addition to a large amount of water, they will contain mineral elements as well as hemoglobin, a protein responsible for transporting oxygen throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

HEMOGLOBIN (HEME + GLOBIN)

The designation “hemoglobin” is derived from the words “heme” and “globin”, reflecting the fact that each subunit of hemoglobin is a globular protein with an embedded heme group. Hemoglobin is a complex protein (heteroprotein⁶⁴⁰), which does not contain only amino acids. It has, in addition to the amino acids of its 4 protein chains (designated as “globins”), identical 2 to 2, 4 prosthetic groups or hemes (with an iron (Fe) atom), each being linked to a globin (by two His) and ⁶⁴⁰ Heteroprotein is a protein, which consists of a protein part designated as apoprotein (constituted by amino acids) and a non-protein part designated as a prosthetic group (permanently attached cofactors), which is a non-protein molecule. For example, hemoglobin, made up of a heme group.

Heteroproteins can be classified according to their prosthetic group and there are: nucleoproteins, glycoproteins, lipoproteins, phosphoproteins, chromoproteins (flavoproteins, hemoproteins, etc.) and metalloproteins.

Apoprotein is the protein part of a molecule that has a non-protein part. In the example of hemoglobin, globin is the apoprotein, heme the cofactor. The non-protein part can be an organic molecule, a metal ion, or an atomic aggregate, such as an iron-sulfur cluster. If the protein has enzymatic activity, we then speak of apoenzyme and coenzyme.

A prosthetic group is a non-protein organic compound maintained in a protein structure (then designated as apoprotein) by means of permanent covalent bonds, but also possibly weak bonds (eg: ionic bonds, hydrogen bonds).

Prosthetic groups belong to several molecular categories. The best known — designated as “heme” — is involved in most oxygen transport reactions (eg: hemoglobin, hemocyanin) and biological redox (eg: cytochrome, chlorophyll, bacteriochlorin). Heme (and other porphyrins) contains a metal atom (iron, sulfur, magnesium ...) — or several — generally located in the center, which comes into play for the biological action of the apoprotein.

Other prosthetic groups belong to the vitamin family (eg vitamin B12 (cobalamin), a corrin), playing the role of co-enzymes or co-factors. Prosthetic groups are also found in cellular respiration, more specifically when pyruvate is converted into acetyl-CoA. FAD (flavin adenine dinucleotide), thiamine pyrophosphate and lipoamide are all prosthetic groups active in this reaction.

located in a hydrophobic pocket. As you would know, Iron is a chemical element, symbol Fe. A neutral iron atom contains 26 protons and 30 neutrons plus 26 electrons in four different shells around the nucleus. As with other transition metals, a variable number of electrons from the two outermost shells of the iron atom are available to combine with other elements. Commonly, iron uses two (oxidation state +2) or three (oxidation state +3) of its available electrons to form compounds, although iron oxidation states ranging from -2 to +7 are present. The iron atom is essential for the transport of oxygen as well as for the formation of red blood cells in the blood. It is an essential constituent of mitochondria, as it is part of the composition of “cytochrome C”-heme.⁶⁴¹ It also plays a role in the manufacture of new cells, hormones and neurotransmitters.

HEME — A heme is an organic, ring-shaped molecule. Due to its special structure, a heme is capable of holding, or “hosting” an iron molecule. A heme is made from 4 pyrroles, which are small pentagon-shaped molecules made from 4 carbons and 1 nitrogen, and representing a metaphor of that, which is “PERFECT”. Four pyrroles together form a tetrapyrrole. If the tetrapyrrole has substitutions on the side chains which allow it to hold a metal ion, it is called a porphyrin. Thus, a heme is an iron-holding porphyrin.

In a heme, the iron molecule has six coordination sites, one of which can be occupied by oxygen, and it is held in place by the balanced attractive forces of the four nitrogen molecules. The nitrogen molecules all point toward the inside of the larger ring they create. The double and single bonds which connect the pyrroles are arranged evenly, so that the electrons stay balanced and the entire molecule remains stable.⁶⁴² This makes it an aromatic molecule.

⁶⁴¹ Cytochromes are redox-active proteins containing a heme, with a central Fe atom at its core, as a cofactor. They are involved in electron transport chain and redox catalysis. Cytochromes are classified according to the type of heme and its mode of binding. Cytochromes are classified into four types — A, B, C, and D — on the basis of the kind of the heme that they possess as the prosthetic group; A-type cytochrome or cytochrome A has heme A as the prosthetic group, cytochrome B has heme B (also known as protoheme IX, is the most abundant heme), cytochrome C has heme C, and cytochrome D has heme D. Cytochrome mainly participates in the energy conversion processes of the organisms, that is, it works in respiration. In respiration or cellular respiration, electrons liberated from a substrate are transferred to molecular oxygen via a respiratory chain that is composed of cytochromes, flavin enzymes, and nonheme iron proteins, and the free energy liberated during the electron transfer is trapped as ATP, which is utilized by the organisms for life processes. The cytochrome function is also linked to the reversible redox change from ferrous (Fe₂) to the ferric (Fe₃) oxidation state of the iron found in the heme core.

The synthesis of the heme group majorly will occur in the bone marrow (up to 85%). It will also be synthesized in the liver, the site of production of various other heme proteins like myoglobin⁶⁴³ and cytochromes, etc. The process of heme

⁶⁴² Always remember that these numbers are NOT RANDOM, but they are revealing aspects of products, which are formed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”; they are revealing aspects of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

⁶⁴³ Myoglobin (Mb) is a heme-containing globular protein, which is found in abundance in myocyte cells of heart and skeletal muscle. It functions as an oxygen-storage unit, providing oxygen to the working muscles. It contains one heme group per molecule and has a structure similar to that of hemoglobin monomers (that is to say, one of the β subunits of hemoglobin). Myoglobin also serves as a local oxygen reservoir, which can temporarily provide oxygen when blood oxygen delivery is insufficient during periods of intense muscular activity. The heme group, which contains iron, imparts a red-brown colour to the proteins and as a consequence of the interaction between iron and oxygen. The bond between oxygen and hemoglobin is more complex than that between oxygen and synthesis begins with glycine and succinyl CoA to form Aminolaevulinic acid (ALA). It is further modified via various intermediate chemical reactions to finally form heme. The first reaction and the last three reactions of this series will take place within the mitochondria of the cell. The rest of the steps will take place in the cytosol.

myoglobin and accounts for the dual ability hemoglobin has to transport oxygen as well as to store it.

In contact with venous blood, oxygen combines more readily with myoglobin than it does with hemoglobin, favouring the transfer of oxygen from blood to muscle cells. Thus, the oxygen that the working muscle requires for the energy-producing biochemical reactions is provided.

There are several biologically important kinds of heme. Heme B and its natural derivatives heme A, heme C, heme D and heme O belong to the family of cyclic, modified tetrapyrroles. As such, these molecules consist of a macrocycle composed of four pyrrole-derived rings, which are joined by methine bridges. All hemes possess a fully oxidized ring system, that is to say, they are true porphyrins, with the exception of heme D, which possesses a chlorine structure with a partially reduced pyrrole ring C. Moreover, all hemes contain a central iron ion, which is coordinated by the four pyrrole nitrogen atoms.

The characteristic side chains of heme B are methyl⁶⁴⁴ and vinyl⁶⁴⁵ groups on pyrrole rings A and B, and methyl and propionate groups on pyrrole rings C and D. The other hemes mentioned above are all derived from heme B, either via side chain modification or macrocycle derivatization.

Hemes A and O both carry a “hydroxyethyl farnesyl”⁶⁴⁶ group instead of the vinyl group on pyrrole ring A. Additionally, heme A carries a formyl⁶⁴⁷ group on ring D instead of a methyl group. Heme D is modified at pyrrole ring C and carries an additional hydroxyl⁶⁴⁸ group and a γ -spirolactone originating from the propionate ⁶⁴⁴ A methyl group is an alkyl derived from methane, containing one carbon atom bonded to three hydrogen atoms — CH₃. In formulas, the group is often abbreviated Me. Such hydrocarbon groups occur in many organic compounds. It is a very stable group in most molecules.

⁶⁴⁵ In chemistry, vinyl or ethenyl (abbreviated as Vi) is the functional group with the formula —CH=CH₂. It is the ethylene (IUPAC ethene) molecule (H₂C=CH₂) with one fewer hydrogen atom. The name is also used for any compound containing that group, namely R—CH=CH₂ where R is any other group of atoms.

⁶⁴⁸ Hydroxyl groups are simple structures consisting of an oxygen atom with two lone pairs bonded to a hydrogen atom. They readily participate in hydrogen bonding, generating either a net positively or negatively charged ion. The term hydroxyl group is used to side chain. In this heme D, one double bond in a pyrrole ring has been reduced, so it is actually a chlorin, rather than a real heme; it is a derivative of heme B, but in which the propionic acid side chain at the carbon of position 6, which is also hydroxylated, forms a γ -spirolactone. Ring III is also hydroxylated at position 5, in a conformation trans to the new lactone group; this heme D is the site for oxygen reduction to water of many types of bacteria at low oxygen tension. Finally, heme C is obtained from heme B by the covalent attachment of the molecule to the corresponding cytochrome through thioether-bond formation between cysteine thiols of the protein and the vinyl side chains of the tetrapyrrole; it is covalently bound to polypeptide via thioether bridges.

Isolated hemes are commonly designated by capital letters while hemes bound to proteins are designated by lower case letters. Cytochrome A refers to the heme A in specific combination with membrane protein forming a portion of cytochrome C oxidase.

Hemes have two main functions: to carry oxygen and to transport or store electrons. The heme molecule will be used in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, in complex with specially-shaped proteins, to transport oxygen and move electrons. These special proteins, like hemoglobin and myoglobin, are made to help the heme complex hold or release oxygen at the appropriate times. Hemoglobin is found in all blood cells, attached to the cell membrane, exposing the heme group to the blood plasma. Thus, when the blood cells pass through the lungs, they bind up as much oxygen as the iron in the heme can handle.

The blood cells then travel to various parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, such as the muscles. These cells will be actively using up oxygen and releasing carbon dioxide as a byproduct. Carbon dioxide will form an acid in the blood plasma, lowering the pH of the blood. Like all proteins, hemoglobin will react to changes in pH by changing shape. This change in shape will force the oxygen off of the heme complex, releasing the oxygen into the blood plasma. The oxygen will diffuse into the muscle cells, where it will be bound by myoglobin and be transported to the mitochondria to be used. Myoglobin also has a heme group, describe the $-OH$ functional group in an organic compound. Organic molecules containing hydroxyl groups are known as alcohols. Hydroxyl groups are especially important in biochemistry due to their tendency to form hydrogen bonds, as they contain both lone pairs of electrons and a weakly acidic proton. Hydroxyl groups are also able to form hydrogen bonds with water, a property that increases the hydrophilicity and solubility of molecules containing them. The carbohydrates are an example of a group of molecules that are extremely soluble due to hydroxyl functional groups.

but it will operate in a different way so that oxygen will remain bound until reaching the mitochondria.

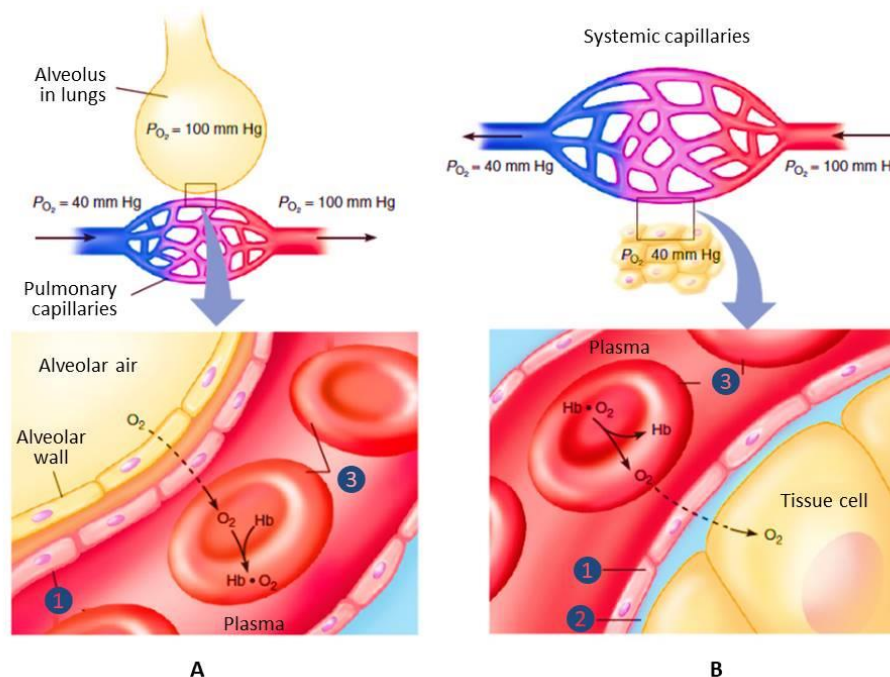

Figure: Illustration of the transport of oxygen by hemoglobin. (A) Formation of oxyhemoglobin. Once oxygen diffuses from alveolar air in pulmonary capillaries, it diffuses into erythrocytes and binds to hemoglobin for transport in the blood. (B) Dissociation of oxygen from hemoglobin. In systemic capillaries, hemoglobin in erythrocytes releases oxygen, which then diffuses from the blood into tissue cells. 1- Capillary wall, 2- Interstitial fluid, 3- Erythrocytes.

The second function of hemes is to hold electrons and facilitate reactions in the electron transport chain. During oxidative phosphorylation in the mitochondrial membrane, electrons must be passed down a series of reactions, which slowly extract their energy before depositing them in water and carbon dioxide. The energy gained is stored in the bonds of the molecule ATP, which will be used as a primary source of energy.

GLOBIN — Globins are small globular metalloproteins consisting of about 150 amino acids. Typically, globins comprise eight α -helical segments (named A through H) that display a characteristic 3-over-3 α -helical alternated structure. This conserved “globin fold” identifies them as members of a large protein superfamily, which also includes truncated versions whose globin fold consists of only four α -helices. Globins contain a heme prosthetic group (Fe-protoporphyrin IX), by which they can reversibly bind gaseous ligands like O₂, CO, and NO. Most known globins fulfill respiratory functions, supplying the cell with adequate amounts of O₂ for aerobic energy production via the respiratory chain in the mitochondria.

In the hemoglobin molecule, globin is the protein portion of hemoglobin, which harbors the porphyrin heme ring and permits the molecule to operate efficiently in oxygen transport and its other physiologic functions. Globin synthesis occurs in polyribosomes — which are clusters or strings of ribosomes held together by a molecule of messenger RNA that runs between the large and small ribosomal subunits, and forming the site of protein synthesis — in the cytosol. Hemoglobin synthesis takes place as erythroid cells are differentiating from immature red blood cells to mature red blood cells. It requires the coordinated production of heme and globin.

HEMOGLOBIN — Hemoglobin in red blood cells is the primary form of oxygen transport (which is added to dissolved oxygen in plasma). Hemoglobin synthesis takes place within the erythrocyte producing cells of the bone marrow. It involves the synthesis of the polypeptide chains (globin synthesis) as well as the synthesis of heme groups (heme synthesis). In the plasma, hemoglobin will bind to haptoglobin (Hp)⁶⁴⁹ synthesized by the liver. It is associated with globin A chain dimers.

STRUCTURE OF HEMOGLOBIN.— The structure of hemoglobin molecule can be considered at four levels; primary structure, secondary structure, tertiary structure, and quaternary structure.

The primary structure of hemoglobin is represented by the number and sequence of amino acids in its polypeptide chains. One molecule of hemoglobin is made up of four polypeptide chains; two α -chains and two β -chains. The number of amino acids is different in both types of polypeptide chains. Each α -chain contains 141 amino acids and each β -chain contains 146 amino acids. Thus, a total of 574 amino acids are present in one molecule of hemoglobin. The sequence of amino acids in α -chains is different than that of the β -chain. Any disturbance in the normal sequence of amino acids impairs the normal functioning of hemoglobin.

The secondary structure of hemoglobin is represented by the stable structures formed by its polypeptide chains. Each alpha and beta chain has an α -helical structure. These α -helices are held together via hydrogen bonding. They are terminated by the presence of either proline amino acid or by β -bends and loops connecting the different helices.

The tertiary structure of hemoglobin involves the folding of its polypeptide chains: its α - and β -chains undergo folding to attain a globular shape. This folding of polypeptide chains occurs in such a way that the hydrophilic amino acids are exposed on the surface of the hemoglobin molecule while the hydrophobic amino acids are buried inside the globular structure. The hemoglobin molecule thus formed is composed of four subunits and thus, is called a tetramer.

The quaternary structure of hemoglobin involves the arrangement of multiple polypeptide chains within the same molecule, which is composed of four subunits. Hemoglobin tetramer is considered to be composed of two identical dimers. Each dimer is formed by one α -chain and one β -chain. The two chains within each dimer are held together via hydrophobic interactions. On the other hand, the two dimers are linked to one another via weak polar interactions. These weak attractive forces allow the dimers to move relative to one another. As a result, the two dimers occupy different positions in oxygenated and deoxygenated forms of hemoglobin. Based on the oxygenation status, hemoglobin can have the following two forms:

- T form: The “T” form is the deoxy form of hemoglobin. During this state, the two dimers are held together via ionic and hydrogen bonds. These bonds limit the movement of the polypeptide chains, thus called the tense (T) form.
- R form: The oxygenated form of hemoglobin is called the “R” (relaxed) form. When oxygen binds to a molecule of hemoglobin, it causes the breaking of weaker polar forces among the two dimers. This allows the polypeptide chains to undergo some movement, thus called the relaxed (R) form.

These two forms of hemoglobin are interchangeable.

TYPES OF HEMOGLOBIN.— Hemoglobin is a family of related proteins. This “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” under production by “THE DIVINE FORCE” will have different types of haemoglobin, which will be present in it during its different phases of life. All these hemoglobin forms are tetramers having four polypeptide chains. The four important types of haemoglobin, which will be present in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, are:

- HbA or hemoglobin A. It will be the major hemoglobin present in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is composed of two α -chains and two β -chains. It is also designated as the adult hemoglobin. More than 90% of hemoglobin in an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be HbA.
- HbF or hemoglobin F, also designated as the fetal hemoglobin. It has two α -chains and two γ -chains. It will be the major hemoglobin during fetal life of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. After birth, the γ -globin chains will no longer be made, and its concentration will drop. In an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the concentration of HbF will amount to only 2% of the total hemoglobin.

- HbA2 is made up of two α -chains and two δ -chains. In an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, it amounts to 2% to 5% of the total hemoglobin.
- HbA1C is one of the many glycosylated hemoglobins, which will be present in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is composed of two α - and two β -chains but is in glycosylated form. Its concentration will vary from 3%-9% of the total hemoglobin in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. HbA1C will also indicate the blood glucose levels in the past period of 90 days (three months).

FUNCTIONS OF HEMOGLOBIN.— The main function of hemoglobin is to transport oxygen from the lungs to the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to transport in return carbon dioxide from the tissues back to the lungs. It will also act as extracellular buffer throughout the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and as a source of heme intermediates.

FOR THE TRANSPORT OF OXYGEN, one molecule of hemoglobin will bind four molecules of oxygen. There are four iron atoms in each molecule of hemoglobin, which, accordingly, can bind four atoms of oxygen. The complex porphyrin and protein structure will provide the proper environment for the iron atom so that it binds and releases oxygen appropriately under physiological conditions inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

When the O₂ molecule binds to the iron (Fe) atom of the heme, the hemoglobin changes shape. This change in shape — reversible or even unstable — facilitates the fixation of O₂ molecule on the deoxygenated form and the release of O₂ molecule from the oxygenated form. For this change of shape to be effective, it is necessary that it take place at the precise place where each phenomenon is necessary: taking charge of the O₂ molecule at the level of the pulmonary capillaries and rejection of the O₂ molecule in the vicinity of the cells which require it.

The physiological conditions of operation of the hemoglobin also depend on other factors, in particular the presence of substances capable of modifying the degree of oxidation of iron. Indeed, iron (Fe) can fix O₂ molecule if it is in the Fe²⁺ form, but not in the oxidized Fe³⁺ form, so it is necessary for the hemoglobin to be protected against oxidation (metHb is the inactive oxidized form of hemoglobin). In hemoglobin and myoglobin, the heme iron remains in the ferrous or Fe²⁺ state throughout the cycle of oxygen binding and release. In redox-active enzymes and in the cellular respiratory chain, heme will regularly go back and forth between the ferrous and the ferric or Fe^{3+} states, and sometimes also the ferryl or Fe^{4+} state.

When the O_2 molecule binds to Fe^{3+} , the iron (Fe) atom is pulled to the oxygen molecule slightly above the heme plane, which causes that the histidine to which iron (Fe) is covalently bonded below of the heme plane, is in turn pulled towards the Fe- O_2 group, which causes the rotational movement of the whole chain.

The four heme groups present in hemoglobin demonstrate cooperative oxygen binding. The binding of oxygen to one heme group increases the oxygen affinity of ⁶⁵⁰ We have added such schematics to lead you to look beyond the relationships, which are described in these schematics, and to see a vision of the GREATNESS of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, by which HE has revealed Himself through this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is been sculpted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and as an integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”: a GREATNESS beyond words and letters; a GREATNESS that dominates the murmur of syllables and sounds.

other heme groups present in the same hemoglobin molecule. This effect is known as the heme-heme interaction. The oxygen molecules are not permanently bound to the heme groups. Rather, hemoglobin reversibly binds the oxygen molecules meaning that oxygen can be released and can bound again to the heme groups any time. The oxygen affinity of hemoglobin depends upon the following factors:

- Partial pressure of oxygen (direct relationship);
- Partial pressure of carbon dioxide (indirect relationship);
- pH of the environment (direct relationship);
- Availability of 2,3-bisphosphoglycerate (indirect relationship).

When the blood passed through the lungs having a much greater partial pressure of oxygen, the oxygen affinity of hemoglobin increases, and it readily binds the oxygen molecules. As the partial pressure of carbon dioxide is higher in the tissue fluid, the oxygen affinity of hemoglobin decreases and oxygen molecules are released in the tissues.

The affinity of hemoglobin for oxygen is so great that: at the oxygen pressure in the lungs, about 95 percent of the hemoglobin is saturated with oxygen. As the oxygen tension will fall, as it will do in the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, oxygen will dissociate from hemoglobin and will be available to move by diffusion through the red blood cell membrane and the plasma to sites where it will be used inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The proportion of hemoglobin saturated with oxygen is not directly proportional to the oxygen pressure. As the oxygen pressure will decline, hemoglobin will give up its oxygen with disproportionate rapidity, so that the major fraction of the oxygen can be released with a relatively small drop in oxygen tension.

The affinity of hemoglobin for oxygen will primarily be determined by the structure of hemoglobin, but it will also be influenced by other conditions within the red blood cell, in particular the pH and certain organic phosphate compounds, which will be produced during the chemical breakdown of glucose, especially 2,3-diphosphoglycerate.

Hemoglobin has a much higher affinity for carbon monoxide than for oxygen. Carbon monoxide produces its lethal effects by binding to hemoglobin and preventing oxygen transport. The oxygen-carrying function of hemoglobin can be disturbed in other ways. The iron of hemoglobin will normally be in the reduced or ferrous state, in both oxyhemoglobin and deoxyhemoglobin. If the iron itself becomes oxidized to the ferric state, then hemoglobin will change to methemoglobin, a brown pigment incapable of transporting oxygen. The red blood cells contain enzymes capable of maintaining the iron in its normal state, but under abnormal conditions large amounts of methemoglobin may appear in the blood.

AS EXTRACELLULAR BUFFER, hemoglobin facilitates the regulation of the pH of the blood by a process known as “Bohr’s Effect”⁶⁵¹. In this process, the carbon dioxide produced as a result of metabolism reacts with water to form carbonic acid. The carbonic acid disassociates to release hydrogen ions. These hydrogen ions bind to the amino acid side chains in hemoglobin. This causes the hemoglobin to release oxygen in the metabolizing tissues. The hydrogen ions are thus buffered by the hemoglobin, which prevents any decrease in the pH of the blood. If the buffering effect of hemoglobin is not present, cellular metabolism will result in decreasing the pH of the blood.

FOR THE TRANSPORT OF CARBON DIOXIDE, hemoglobin facilitates the carbon dioxide from the tissues back to the lungs. Carbon dioxide formed as a result of metabolism is immediately converted into carbonic acid by reacting with water. The protons of the carbonic acid will be buffered by hemoglobin while the bicarbonate ions will dissolve in the blood.

⁶⁵¹ The Bohr Effect refers to the observation that increases in the carbon dioxide partial pressure of blood or decreases in blood pH result in a lower affinity of hemoglobin for oxygen. This manifests as a right-ward shift in the Oxygen-Hemoglobin Dissociation Curve described in Oxygen Transport and yields enhanced unloading of oxygen by hemoglobin.

Decreases in blood pH, meaning increased H⁺ concentration, are likely the direct cause of lower hemoglobin affinity for oxygen. Specifically, the association of H⁺ ions with the amino acids of hemoglobin appear to reduce hemoglobin's affinity for oxygen. Because changes in the carbon dioxide partial pressure can modify blood pH, increased partial pressures of carbon dioxide can also result in right-ward shifts of the oxygen-hemoglobin dissociation curve. The relationship between carbon dioxide partial pressure and blood pH is mediated by carbonic anhydrase which converts gaseous carbon dioxide to carbonic acid that in turn releases a free hydrogen ion, thus reducing the local pH of blood.

The Bohr Effect allows for enhanced unloading of oxygen in metabolically active peripheral tissues such as exercising skeletal muscle. Increased skeletal muscle activity results in localized increases in the partial pressure of carbon dioxide which in turn reduces the local blood pH. Because of the Bohr Effect, this results in enhanced unloading of bound oxygen by hemoglobin passing through the metabolically active tissue and thus improves oxygen delivery. Importantly, the Bohr Effect enhances oxygen delivery proportionally to the metabolic activity of the tissue. As more metabolism takes place, the carbon dioxide partial pressure increases thus causing larger reductions in local pH and in turn allowing for greater oxygen unloading.

Carbon dioxide will be carried to the lungs in the form of bicarbonate ions. When the blood reaches the lungs, the increased partial pressure of oxygen displaces the hydrogen ions from hemoglobin. These hydrogen ions combine with bicarbonate ions to form carbonic acid. The carbonic acid is acted upon by the carbonic anhydrase enzyme which cleaves the acid into water and carbon dioxide. The partial pressure of carbon dioxide in the blood is greater than that in the air. It diffuses from the blood in the lungs to the air present in the air sacs.

Besides this indirect role, hemoglobin will also transport a small amount of carbon dioxide directly bound to its globin chains. This form of hemoglobin is known as carbamino hemoglobin.

AS SOURCE OF HEME INTERMEDIATES, hemoglobin provides important heme intermediates such as bilirubin and biliverdin etc. upon degradation of red blood cells. Red cell destruction will occur after a mean life span of 120 days. When a red blood cell, hence hemoglobin, undergoes degradation, the heme and the globin parts are separated. The globin chains will be either recycled or broken down into individual amino acids by the action of proteases enzymes. The resulting amino acids will be reutilized for general protein synthesis in the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment". The heme groups will be degraded to form bilirubin by the microsomal enzymes in the macrophages. Heme degradation will involve the following steps:

- Heme oxygenase enzyme converts heme into biliverdin;
- Biliverdin reductase enzyme reduces biliverdin to form bilirubin.

The bilirubin thus formed will be released into the blood. As bilirubin is water-insoluble, it will be immediately bound by albumin to form a bilirubin-albumin complex. This complex will transport bilirubin to the hepatocytes where it will be converted into water-soluble bilirubin diglucuronide. The liberated bilirubin will circulate to the liver where it will be conjugated to glucuronides, which will be excreted into the gut via bile and converted to stercobilinogen and stercobilin (excreted in feces). Stercobilinogen and stercobilin will be partially reabsorbed and excreted in urine as urobilinogen and urobilin. A small fraction of protoporphyrin will be converted to carbon monoxide (CO) and excreted via the lungs.

The breakdown of the heme group will also liberate the iron (Fe) atom for recirculation through plasma and transferring to marrow erythroblasts.

WHITE BLOOD CELL

A white blood cell, also called white corpuscle, is a cellular component of the blood that lacks hemoglobin. It has a nucleus, and is capable of motility⁶⁵². The designation “white blood cell” derives from the physical appearance of a blood sample after centrifugation. White cells are found in the “buffy coat”, a thin, typically white layer of nucleated cells between the sedimented red blood cells and the blood plasma. The term “leukocyte”, which also refers to a “white blood cell”, is derived from the Greek root leukos- meaning “white, clear”, itself from the Proto-Indo-European (PIE)⁶⁵³ language root leuk- meaning “light, brightness” and the Greek root cyte- meaning “cell”. The white blood cell is a living and concrete image of the “Formative Divine Particle”, which mimics the purifying properties and effects of the “Formative Divine Particles” inside the manifestation by the metaphor of the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The white blood cells are much less numerous than the red blood cells. They are highly differentiated for their specialized functions, they will not undergo cell division (mitosis) in the bloodstream, but some will retain the capability of mitosis. The number of white cells in normal blood will range between 4500 and 11000 per cubic millimetre. Fluctuations will occur during the day; lower values will be obtained during rest and higher values during physical exercise of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Intense physical exertion of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will also cause the count to exceed 20000 per cubic millimetre. As they are capable of motility, most of the white cells will be outside the circulation, and the few in the bloodstream will be in transit from one site to another, to accomplish their mission. As living cells, their survival will also depend on their continuous production of energy. The chemical pathways which will be utilized by the white blood cells will be more complex than those of the red cells and will be similar to those of other tissue cells. White cells, containing a nucleus and able to produce ribonucleic acid (RNA), can synthesize protein.

⁶⁵² Motility, in this context, refers to the ability of the white blood cell, as a living organism, to move independently, using metabolic energy. Motility, in this context, contrasts to mobility, which describes the ability of an object to be moved. Motility of an organism is an application of the concept of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”.

⁶⁵³ Most languages in Europe, and others in areas stretching as far as India, are called Indo-European languages, and they descend from an extinct common ancient language of which the linguistic reconstruction is designated as the Proto-Indo-European (PIE) language. The prefix “proto” implies that there are no surviving texts in the language and thus that linguists reconstructed the language by comparing similarities and systematic differences between the languages descended from it.

As a group, the white blood cells will be involved in the defense mechanisms and reparative activity of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning. As you would understand already, every healthy tissue of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” bears the mark of IHVH, and the white blood cells have been “programmed” to recognize that mark of IHVH and to neutralise and annihilate anything that distinguishes from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning: it is the mission designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and assigned to these white blood cells. It is a manifestation of the “INTELLIGENCE” designed for these brave “fighters” by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “programmed” and embedded into them by “THE DIVINE FORCE” to mimic the purifying properties and effects of the “Formative Divine Particles” inside the manifestation by the metaphor of the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; it is a demonstration of “intelligent behaviour” inside a marvel of miniaturization and compressed complexity, a demonstration of “THE SCIENCE”, which is found in any structure of “created energy”. It is thereby a demonstration of “THE INTELLIGENCE” of “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Three classes of white cells will be distinguished, each unique as to structure and function, and will be designated as: granulocytes, monocytes, and lymphocytes.

Granulocytes, the most numerous of the white cells, will be larger than red cells (approximately 12–15 μm in diameter). They will have a multilobed nucleus and contain large numbers of cytoplasmic granules (i.e., granules in the cell substance outside the nucleus). Granulocytes will be important mediators of the inflammatory response. There are three types of granulocytes: neutrophils, eosinophils, and basophils. Each type of granulocyte is identified by the colour of the granules when the cells are stained with a compound dye. The granules of the neutrophil are pink, those of the eosinophil are red, and those of the basophil are blue-black. About 50 to 80% of the white cells are neutrophils, while the eosinophils and basophils together constitute no more than 3%.

The neutrophils are fairly uniform in size with a diameter between 12 and 15 μm . The nucleus consists of two to five lobes joined together by hairlike filaments. Neutrophils move with amoeboid motion. They extend long projections called pseudopodium into which their granules flow; this action is followed by contraction of filaments based in the cytoplasm, which draws the nucleus and rear of the cell forward. In this way neutrophils rapidly advance along a surface. The bone marrow of an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will produce about 100 billion neutrophils daily. It will take seven days to form a mature neutrophil from a precursor cell in the marrow; yet, once in the blood, the mature cells will live only a few hours after migrating to the tissues. To guard against rapid depletion of the short-lived neutrophils (for example, during infection), the bone marrow will hold a large number of neutrophils in reserve to be mobilized in response to inflammation or infection. Within the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the neutrophils will migrate to areas of infection or tissue injury. The force of attraction that determines the direction in which neutrophils will move is known as chemotaxis and will be attributed to substances liberated at sites of tissue damage. Of the 100 billion neutrophils which will circulate outside the bone marrow, half will reside in the tissues and half will reside in the blood vessels. Of those in the blood vessels, half will be within the mainstream of rapidly circulating blood, and the other half will move slowly along the inner walls of the blood vessels (marginal pool), ready to enter tissues on receiving a chemotactic signal from the blood vessels.

Neutrophils are actively related to the phagocytosis⁶⁵⁴ process; they have all been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT

⁶⁵⁴ Phagocytosis (from Ancient Greek φαγεῖν (phagein), meaning “to eat”, and κύτος, (kytos), meaning “cell”) is the process by which a cell uses its plasma membrane to engulf a large particle ($\geq 0.5 \mu\text{m}$), giving rise to an internal compartment called the phagosome. It is one type of endocytosis. Endocytosis is a cellular process in which substances are brought into the cell. The material to be internalized is surrounded by an area of cell membrane, which then buds off inside the cell to form a vesicle containing the ingested material. Endocytosis includes pinocytosis (cell drinking) and phagocytosis (cell eating). It is a form of active transport.

Endocytosis pathways can be subdivided into four categories: namely, receptor-mediated endocytosis (also known as clathrin-mediated endocytosis), caveolae, pinocytosis, and phagocytosis.

Clathrin-mediated endocytosis is mediated by the production of small (approximately 100 nm in diameter) vesicles that have a morphologically characteristic coat made up of the cytosolic protein clathrin. Clathrin-coated vesicles (CCVs) are found in virtually all cells and form domains of the plasma membrane termed clathrin-coated pits.

Caveolae are the most commonly reported non-clathrin-coated plasma membrane buds, which exist on the surface of many, but not all cell types. They consist of the cholesterol-binding protein caveolin (Vip21) with a bilayer enriched in cholesterol and glycolipids. Caveolae are small (approximately 50 nm in diameter) flask-shape pits in the membrane that resemble the shape of a cave (hence the name caveolae).

Pinocytosis, which usually occurs from highly ruffled regions of the plasma membrane, is the invagination of the cell membrane to form a pocket, which then pinches off into the cell to form a vesicle (0.5–5 μm in diameter) filled with a large volume of extracellular fluid and molecules within it (equivalent to ~100 CCVs). The filling of the pocket occurs in a non-specific manner.

MASTER” to disaggregate and nullify from existence anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The granules of the neutrophil are microscopic packets of potent enzymes capable of digesting many types of cellular materials. When an element distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be engulfed by a neutrophil, it will be encased in a vacuole lined by the invaginated membrane. The granules will discharge their contents into the vacuole containing the engulfed element. As this will occur, the granules of the neutrophil will be disaggregated (degranulation). A metabolic process within the granules will produce hydrogen peroxide and a highly active form of oxygen (superoxide), which will destroy the ingested element. Final digestion and nullification from existence of the ingested element will be accomplished by enzymes.

Phagocytosis is the process by which cells bind and internalize particulate matter larger than around 0.75 μm in diameter, such as small-sized dust particles, cell debris, microorganisms and apoptotic cells. These processes involve the uptake of larger membrane areas than clathrin-mediated endocytosis and caveolae pathway.

We add such explanations in order to lead you (you who are reading these writings) to understand that NOTHING in the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was done at random; ditto for all the other creatures that have been produced into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” and whose models we have described. Everything, to the least details, was designed and established in “ABSOLUTE PURITY” by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and in “ABSOLUTE PURITY” “THE DIVINE FORCE” has implemented it into existence.

Much more, we add such explanations in order to lead you (you who are reading these writings) to understand and be conscious about who you are; in order to lead you to understand that those things, inside you, are what the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have labelled as the “secrets” of Heaven and Earth; and that you understand that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have “BETRAYED” “THE CONFIDENCE OF THE DIVINE”, have labelled you (you who are reading these writings) as a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” and that must be deleted from existence, and they went ahead with their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” and destroyed the work that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, has deployed through “THE DIVINE FORCE” with the creation of this Earth in which you live, and with your creation as the human creature, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” are the reservoirs and disciples of “obscurity”. In their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, they are reservoirs of absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

Eosinophils, like other granulocytes, will be produced in the bone marrow until they are released into the circulation. Although about the same size as neutrophils, the eosinophil will contain larger granules, and the chromatin will be generally concentrated in only two nonsegmented lobes. Eosinophils will leave the circulation within hours of release from the marrow and will migrate into the tissues (usually those of the skin, lung, and respiratory tract) through the lymphatic channels. Like neutrophils, eosinophils will respond to chemotactic signals released at the site of cell destruction. They will be actively motile and related to the phagocytosis. Eosinophils will be involved in defense of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against parasites, and they will participate in hypersensitivity and inflammatory reactions, primarily by dampening their destructive effects.

Basophils are the least numerous of the granulocytes, and their large granules almost will completely obscure the underlying double-lobed nucleus. Within hours of their release from the bone marrow, basophils will migrate from the circulation to the barrier tissues (e.g., the skin and mucosa), where they will synthesize and will store histamine, a natural modulator of the inflammatory response. When aggravated, basophils will release, along with histamine and other substances, leukotrienes, which will cause bronchoconstriction during anaphylaxis (a hypersensitivity reaction). Basophils will incite immediate hypersensitivity reactions in association with platelets, macrophages, and neutrophils.

Monocytes are the largest cells of the blood (averaging 15–18 μm in diameter), and they make up about 7% of the leukocytes. The nucleus of monocytes will be relatively big and will tend to be indented or folded rather than multilobed. Their cytoplasm will contain large numbers of fine granules, which will appear to be more numerous near the cell membrane. Monocytes will be actively motile and related to the phagocytosis. They will be capable of ingesting infectious agents as well as red cells and other large particles, but they will not replace the function of the neutrophils in the removal and destruction of an element distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Monocytes usually will enter areas of inflamed tissue later than the granulocytes. Often they will be found at sites of chronic infections in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In the bone marrow, granulocytes and monocytes will arise from a common precursor under the influence of the granulocyte-macrophage colony-stimulating factor. Monocytes will leave the bone marrow and will circulate in the blood. After a period of hours, the monocytes will enter the tissues, where they will develop into macrophages, the tissue phagocytes that constitute the reticuloendothelial system (or macrophage system).

Lymphocytes constitute about 28–42% of the white cells of the blood, and they will be part of the immune response to foreign substances in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Most lymphocytes will be small, only slightly larger than erythrocytes, with a nucleus that will occupy most of the cell. Some will be larger and have more abundant cytoplasm that will contain a few granules. Lymphocytes will be sluggishly motile, and their paths of migration outside of the bloodstream will be different from those of granulocytes and monocytes. Lymphocytes will be found in large numbers in the lymph glands, spleen, thymus, tonsils, and lymphoid tissue of the gastrointestinal tract. They will enter the circulation through lymphatic channels that drain principally into the thoracic lymph duct, which has a connection with the venous system. Unlike other blood cells, some lymphocytes will be able to leave and reenter the circulation, surviving for about one year or more. The principal paths of recirculating lymphocytes will be through the spleen or lymph glands. Lymphocytes will freely leave the blood to enter lymphoid tissue, passing barriers that prevent the passage of other blood cells. When they will be stimulated by antigen and certain other agents, some lymphocytes will be activated and will become capable of cell division (mitosis).

PLATELETS AND SERUM

The blood platelets are the smallest cells of the blood, averaging about 2 to 4 μm in diameter. Although much more numerous (150000 to 400000 per cubic millimetre) than the white cells, they occupy a much smaller fraction of the volume of the blood because of their relatively minute size. Like the red cells, they lack a nucleus and are incapable of cell division (mitosis), but they have a more complex metabolism and internal structure than have the red cells. When seen in fresh blood they will appear spheroid, but they will have a tendency to extrude hairlike filaments from their membranes, in which case they will be cell-like, half-moon-like structures. They will adhere to each other but not to red cells and white cells. Tiny granules within platelets contain substances important for the clot-promoting activity of platelets.

The function of the platelets is related to hemostasis, the prevention and control of bleeding. When the endothelial surface (lining) of a blood vessel will be injured, several “specific mechanisms” will combine and trigger the “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING” in order to restore the vessel to the functional state without damage. Platelets in large numbers immediately will attach to the injured surface and to each other, forming a tenaciously adherent mass of platelets.

The effect of the platelet response will be to stop the bleeding and to form the site of the developing blood clot, or thrombus. If platelets are absent, this important defense reaction cannot occur, and protracted bleeding from small wounds (prolonged bleeding time) results.⁶⁵⁵ The normal resistance of capillary membranes to leakage of red cells will be dependent upon platelets. Severe deficiency of platelets will reduce the resistance of the capillary walls, and abnormal bleeding from the capillaries occurs, either spontaneously or as the result of minor injury. Platelets also will contribute substances essential for the normal coagulation⁶⁵⁶ of the blood, and they will cause the shrinking, or retraction, of a clot after it has been formed.

⁶⁵⁵ To avoid finding yourself, through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, in the absence of platelets, you must regularly consume honey. Honey is the symbol of purification; it is a natural by-product from flower nectar and the aero-digestive tract of the honey bee. It has a complex chemical and biochemical composition including sugars, proteins, amino acids, phenolics, vitamins and minerals. Honey is a natural medicinal agent with antioxidant, anti-bacterial, antifungal, anti-malarial and anti-tumor properties.

⁶⁵⁶ Coagulation, also known as clotting, is the process by which blood changes from a liquid to a gel, forming a blood clot. It potentially results in hemostasis, the cessation of blood loss

Platelets will be formed in the bone marrow by segmentation of the cytoplasm (the cell substance other than the nucleus) of cells known as megakaryocytes, the largest cells of the marrow. Within the marrow the abundant granular cytoplasm of the megakaryocyte will divide into many small segments that break off and will be released as platelets into the circulating blood. After about 10 days in the circulation, platelets will be removed and destroyed. There will be no reserve stores of platelets except in the spleen, in which platelets will occur in higher concentration than in the peripheral blood. Some platelets will be consumed in exerting their hemostatic effects, and others, reaching the end of their life span, will be removed by reticuloendothelial cells (any of the tissue phagocytes). The rate of platelet production will be controlled but not so precisely as the control of red cell production. A hormonelike substance called thrombopoietin is the chemical mediator that regulates the number of platelets in the blood by stimulating an increase in the number and growth of megakaryocytes, thus controlling the rate of platelet production.

Blood Serum is the fluid and solute component of blood which does not play a role in the “specific mechanism of coagulation”. Serum will include all proteins not used in blood coagulation; all electrolytes, antibodies, antigens, hormones; and any exogenous substances. Serum does not contain white blood cells (leukocytes), red blood cells (erythrocytes), platelets, or coagulation factors.

All of these, the blood vessels and red blood cells, white blood cells, plasma, serum and platelets inside the blood vessels and the many “specific processes”, were designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” in great detail and in order to manifest a metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the “Specific ‘NON-SPIRITUAL’ Environment” defined by the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”: a true masterpiece of divine engineering.

In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was sewing the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”; directly creating the layers of structures and organs of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to match those that would acquire “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when from a damaged vessel, followed by repair. The “specific mechanism of coagulation” involves activation, adhesion and aggregation of platelets, as well as deposition and maturation of fibrin.

they approach the end of physical adolescence, and directly sewing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence. In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was manifesting into existence all these smallest details of the metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, for the purpose that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, disciples of obscurity and who were present and watching the accomplishment of this work of “divine surgery”, can understand who they are themselves, how they came into existence and the purpose of the tasks that had been assigned to them.⁶⁵⁷

The diffusion of oxygen and other nutrients from the blood to cells, tissues and organs, will take place through the capillaries. They will also return blood that is poor in oxygen and nutrients to this inverted cone-shaped red viscera. The capillary networks will be at the end of the arteries and at the beginning of the veins.

Understanding the flow of blood through the cardiovascular system is like reading a road map. Think of red blood cells as vehicles on a busy highway. You can easily follow their journey through the heart and in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Healthy and richly oxygenated blood cells will begin their journey on the road to the cardiovascular system leaving the left ventricle. After this ventricle has contracted, the blood there will get the green light to enter the aorta through the aortic valve.

The aorta is the most voluminous artery of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and constitutes a motorway of choice for the transport of blood. Due to high pressure and the thickness of the arterial muscle walls, blood will quickly pass into the aorta which will end in smaller arterial branches. These are exits through which the blood will leave this communication channel to go to different areas of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The pathways followed by blood will narrow as they move away from the heart, like highways that become avenues, then increasingly narrow neighborhood streets. The same is true of the arteries which will lead to smaller vessels which, in turn, will be connected to the capillaries. These very thin vessels will surround vital organs and tissues, while supplying them with nutrients and oxygen.

When they reach their final destination, the red blood cells will have to make the return journey to the heart and lungs, at a rate much slower compared to their accelerated passage through the aorta.

While the arteries are like a “highway” for transporting blood, the veins are more like a “side road”. Due to lower pressure, the speed limit is lower than in the arteries. These last ones will be able to quickly propel the blood in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” thanks to their tight structure. It is different with larger and looser veins. The blood will flow there very slowly to engage in the direction of the heart in the circulation coming from everywhere in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

All venous blood will enter the heart through the lower or upper vena cava. The blood in the lower part of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will go to the lower vena cava, the larger vein of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, while the blood in the upper part of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be channeled to the superior vena cava. Each of the cellular veins empties into the right atrium of the heart.

This cavity will collect blood to propel it into the right ventricle through the tricuspid valve. Rapidly expelled from the right ventricle, blood travels to the pulmonary artery through the half-moon shaped pulmonary valve.

Once in the pulmonary artery, blood will flow through the lungs, using the capillary network to replenish its oxygen stores. The blood will then be redirected to the heart through the pulmonary vein to end up in the left atrium. The bicuspid valve is the last barrier through which blood passes to return to the “highway” of the cardiovascular system and completely repeat the same circuit in the body.

Each milliliter of blood contains an average of 4.5 to 5.5 million red blood cells and 7500 white blood cells. About 2.5 million red blood cells are consumed every second and about 2.5 million new cells are made at the same time.

The time it takes for the blood to travel through the entire blood network when the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is at rest is one minute. Circulation can speed up during exercise and the blood can then travel 4 to 6 times through the entire blood system in one minute.

The blood will not circulate at the same speed everywhere in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”: at the exit of the heart, it will engage in the aorta at the speed of 33 cm per second, then slows down until 0.3 cm per second when it reaches the capillaries. This speed of 33 cm per second marks the beginning of the mission of the blood through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

THE NERVOUS SYSTEM

CHAPTER 172

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE “SECOND PHASE” OF THE HOLY PROJECT – THE SEVENTH DECREE

THE NERVOUS SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

הצורהCentral Nervous System

The central nervous system (CNS) manages the body's essential functions. Made up of the brain and spinal cord, the CNS receives sensory information and coordinates an appropriate response.

Peripheral Nervous System

The peripheral nervous system (PNS) connects the CNS to the rest of the body. Nerves branch out from the brain and spinal cord, extending to the organs, muscles, and other parts of the body.

Neurons are highly specialized cells that transmit chemical and electrical information in the body. Neurons use short, branched extensions called dendrites to receive nerve impulses from surrounding cells. These messages then travel through the cell body to the axon, a threadlike structure. The impulse moves through the axon and is transmitted via chemical or electrical signals that pass through a synapse.

Neuron

Neurotransmitters are chemicals that relay signals between neurons and bodily tissues. Neurotransmitters include adrenaline, dopamine, and endorphins.

THE NERVOUS SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

In order to allow the prehension of the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, external and immediate, around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with several specialized structures. Among these specialized structures are sensory organs, also known as sensory receptors.

Signals (also called stimuli) emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” are therefore collected differently on the basis of their properties, by these sensory organs and transformed into impulses.

It is so that, a same signal emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” can be collected by different structures of “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The nervous system in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, is the complex network of “specific nerves” and specialized cells known as neurons.

As we have indicated already, these “specific nerves” — which are actually structures that “THE DIVINE FORCE” will build from “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, and which are receivers and transmitters of signals — are in contact with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and allow to facilitate the exchange of communication (reception and transmission of instructions, specific signals) both between the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which itself will be in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”, and the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and between that “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”.

The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be made of approximately 60% water. 40% of this water will be found inside the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and in a substance called intracellular fluid. The remainder will be found outside the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and in areas such as blood, spinal fluid and between cells, in a substance called extracellular fluid. The amount of water in the intracellular fluid and extracellular fluid will be affected by their concentration of electrolytes⁶⁵⁸, especially potassium and sodium. Potassium will be the main electrolyte in the intracellular fluid, and it will determine the amount of water inside the cells. Conversely, sodium will be the main electrolyte in the extracellular fluid, and it will determine the amount of water outside the cells.

The nervous system contains two main categories or types of cells: neurons and glial cells. The neuron, or nerve cell, is the smallest living part of the nervous system responsible for the transmission of nerve impulses. Nerve impulses are generated by sodium ions moving into cells and potassium ions moving out of cells. The movement of ions changes the voltage of the cell, which activates a nerve impulse. A drop in blood levels of potassium can affect the ability of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to generate a nerve impulse. It is the main component of nervous tissue and it communicates with other cells via specialized connections called synapses. There are billions of neurons everywhere in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. There are several forms of neurons, but they all have three basic structures: the axon, the cell body and the dendrites.

Axons are unique to each neuron. The length of the axon is very variable from one neuron to another, so that it is absent in some, while in others it is nearly one meter. These long axons are called neurofibers or nerve fibers. At its extremities, the neuron is linked on the one hand to the cell body by the implantation cone and on the other hand, it branches out, but usually maintains a constant diameter, in order to transmit nerve impulses (via neurotransmitters) to one or more neurons, or a motor structure. The nerve impulse moves in the neuron’s membrane. To limit the loss of influx, the axons are covered with an insulating sheath called myelin sheath. The axon leaves the soma at a swelling called the axon hillock, and travels for as far as 1 meter in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. At the farthest tip of the branches of the axon are axon terminals, where the neuron can transmit a signal across the synapse to another cell.

⁶⁵⁸ Broadly speaking, liquid mixtures can be classified as either solutions of electrolytes or solutions of nonelectrolytes. Electrolytes are substances that can dissociate into electrically charged particles called ions, while nonelectrolytes consist of molecules that bear no net electric charge. Thus an electrolyte conducts electric current as a result of a dissociation into positively and negatively charged particles called ions, which migrate toward and ordinarily are discharged at the negative and positive terminals (cathode and anode) of an electric circuit, respectively.

The cell body, also called pericaryon or soma, is the central part of the neuron. It is delimited by the cell membrane and it contains the cytoplasm and nucleus. The soma of a neuron can vary from 4 to 100 micrometers in diameter. As it contains the nucleus, most protein synthesis will occur in there. The nucleus can range from 3 to 18 micrometers in diameter. It contains the usual organelles found in a cell, with the exception of centrioles. The cell body is the place in the cell where the materials needed to create new dendritic and axonal extensions are created during the embryonic phase. Finally, the cell body also generally participates directly in the reception of information by other neurons.

The dendrites, which are counted by the hundreds, are small branches around the cell body. They form a very branched tree of plasma prolongations near the cell body. It is the receptor structure of nerve impulses, neurotransmitters, and stimuli from other neurons. The point of contact between two neurons, which is in fact a very narrow space where neurotransmitters are released, is called a synapse. The received signals are transmitted to the cell body.

Neurons will typically be classified into three types based on their function. Sensory neurons will respond to stimuli such as touch, sound, or light that affect the cells of the sensory organs, and they will send signals to the spinal cord or to the brain. Motor neurons will receive signals from the brain and from spinal cord to control everything from muscle contractions to glandular output. Interneurons will connect neurons to other neurons within the same region of the brain or spinal cord. A group of connected neurons is called a neural circuit.

Most neurons will receive signals via the dendrites and soma and send out signals down the axon. At the majority of synapses, signals will cross from the axon of one neuron to a dendrite of another. However, synapses can connect an axon to another axon or a dendrite to another dendrite.

The signaling process will be partly electrical and partly chemical. Neurons are electrically excitable, due to maintenance of voltage gradients across their membranes. If the voltage changes by a large enough amount over a short interval, the neuron will generate an “all-or-nothing” electrochemical pulse called an “action potential”. This potential will travel rapidly along the axon, and will activate synaptic connections as it will reach them. Synaptic signals may be excitatory or inhibitory, increasing or reducing the net voltage that reaches the soma.

In most cases, neurons will be generated by neural stem cells during brain development and childhood phase of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Neurogenesis will largely cease during adulthood phase of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in most areas of the brain.

Glial cells (named from the Greek word for “glue”) are non-neuronal cells that provide support and nutrition, maintain homeostasis, form myelin, and participate in signal transmission in the nervous system. The functions of the glial cells are: to support neurons and hold them in place; to supply nutrients to neurons; to insulate neurons electrically; to destroy pathogens and remove dead neurons; and to provide guidance cues directing the axons of neurons to their targets. A very important set of glial cell (the oligodendrocytes) will generate layers of a fatty substance called myelin, which will wrap around axons and will provide electrical insulation that allows them to transmit signals much more rapidly and efficiently.

The nervous system in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will serve many purposes. It will act as:

1. The interface of communication between the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which itself will be in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” and which will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.
2. The “grid” on which the “Specific ‘EARTHLY←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” has been fastened through “Specific ‘EARTHLY←SPIRITUAL’ Binding Sites” — which are segments of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier”, which bind to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to keep the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in position —, allowing the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to act as container of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” (the living “energy” that flows freely inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”).
3. The “sensory grid system” that uses well defined “specific wavelength”, as defined and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, for the prehension of both the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” and the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’

Environment”, external and immediate, around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.⁶⁵⁹

As we have indicated already, it is the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” (in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” and) that will be contained in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (in the “Specific ‘NON-SPIRITUAL’ Environment” defined by the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”), in this model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which will enliven the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This is accomplished through the nervous system functioning as interface of communication. Without this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is only a lifeless sculpture in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

The critical juncture between the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” and the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is determined by the nervous system of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” will wear.

Neurons are the primary components of the nervous system, along with the glial cells that give them structural and metabolic support. Structurally, the nervous system has two components: the central nervous system and the peripheral nervous system. These two components work together to collect data from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” internal and external environments, and which will be transmitted to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” for further processing.

THE CENTRAL NERVOUS SYSTEM

The central nervous system is responsible for collecting sensory information which is sent, for further processing, to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which itself is in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”. The result of such processing by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” is sent in return to this central nervous system, which will decode it and forward the decoded message through electrochemical stimuli from sensory receptors to appropriate locations of the “Subjective ⁶⁵⁹ When this “sensory grid system” detects changes of various kinds from the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”, people have come to designate the component of this “sensory grid system” that detects changes from the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” as the “sixth sense”, the “radar system” of the human creature.

This central nervous system consists of two main components: The spinal cord and the organ designated as the “brain”. Both are surrounded by protective membranes called the meninges, and both float in a crystal-clear cerebrospinal fluid. The brain is encased in a bony vault, the neurocranium, while the cylindrical and elongated spinal cord, which serves as a conduit for signals between the “brain” and the remaining parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, lies in the vertebral canal, which is formed by successive vertebrae connected by dense ligaments.

THE BRAIN

The brain is the organ that will serve as the center of the nervous system. It is located in the head, close to the sensory organs for senses such as vision. It is the most complex organ in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the cerebral cortex will contain approximately 14–16 billion neurons, and the cerebellum will contain approximately 55–70 billion. Each neuron is connected by synapses to several thousand other neurons. These neurons communicate with one another by means of the axons, the long protoplasmic fibers, which carry trains of signal pulses, also designated as action potentials, to distant parts of the brain or the targeting specific recipient cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Physiologically, the brain will exert the centralized control over the other organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will act on the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” both by generating patterns of muscle activity and by driving the secretion of chemicals called hormones. This centralized control will allow rapid and coordinated responses to changes in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” immediate and around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. Some basic types of responsiveness such as reflexes will be mediated by the spinal cord or peripheral ganglia, but sophisticated purposeful control of behavior based on complex sensory input will require the information integrating capabilities performed through the brain.

The brain in an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” weighs about 1500 grams and constitutes about 2% of total weight of an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It consists of three major divisions: (1) the massive paired hemispheres of the cerebrum, (2) the brainstem, consisting of the thalamus, hypothalamus, epithalamus, subthalamus, midbrain, pons, and medulla oblongata, and (3) the cerebellum.

The cerebrum, derived from the telencephalon, is the largest, uppermost portion of the brain. It is involved with sensory integration, control of voluntary movement, and higher intellectual functions, such as speech and abstract thought. The outer layer of the duplicate cerebral hemispheres is composed of a convoluted (wrinkled) outer layer of gray matter, called the cerebral cortex.

Beneath the cerebral cortex is an inner core of white matter, which is composed of myelinated commissural nerve fibres connecting the cerebral hemispheres via the corpus callosum, and association fibres connecting different regions of a single hemisphere. Myelinated fibres projecting to and from the cerebral cortex form a concentrated fan-shaped band, known as the internal capsule. The internal capsule consists of an anterior limb and a larger posterior limb and is abruptly curved, with the apex directed toward the centre of the brain; the junction is called the genu. The cerebrum also contains groups of subcortical neuronal masses known as basal ganglia.

The cerebral hemispheres are partially separated from each other by a deep groove called the longitudinal fissure. At the base of the longitudinal fissure lies a thick band of white matter called the corpus callosum. The corpus callosum provides a communication link between corresponding regions of the cerebral hemispheres.

Each cerebral hemisphere supplies motor function to the opposite, or contralateral, side of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from which it receives sensory input. In other words, the left hemisphere controls the right half of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and the right hemisphere controls the left half of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Each hemisphere will also receive impulses conveying the senses of touch and vision, largely from the contralateral half of the body, while auditory input will come from both sides. Pathways conveying the senses of smell and taste to the cerebral cortex are ipsilateral (that is, they do not cross to the opposite hemisphere).

THE SPINAL CORD

The spinal cord, as shown in one previous figure, is an elongated cylindrical structure, just about 45 cm long, 1 cm in diameter, weighing a mere 35 g. It extends from the medulla oblongata to a level between the first and second lumbar vertebrae of the backbone. The terminal part of the spinal cord is called the conus medullaris.

Externally, the spinal cord is protected by 26 bones called vertebrae, which are sandwiched between cartilage disks to cushion the cord from any jarring caused by the movement of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Just like the brain itself, the spinal cord is also protected by three layers of meninges (membranes).

Internally, the spinal cord is composed of long tracts of myelinated nerve fibres (known as white matter) arranged around the periphery of a symmetrical butterfly-shaped cellular matrix of gray matter.

The gray matter contains cell bodies, unmyelinated motor neuron fibres, and interneurons connecting either the two sides of the cord or the dorsal and ventral ganglia. Many interneurons have short axons distributed locally, but some have axons that extend for several spinal segments. Some interneurons may modulate or change the character of signals, while others play key roles in transmission and in patterned reflexes.

The gray matter forms three pairs of horns throughout most of the spinal cord: (1) the dorsal horns, composed of sensory neurons, (2) the lateral horns, well defined in thoracic segments and composed of visceral neurons, and (3) the ventral horns, composed of motor neurons. The horns in the front contain motor neurons, which will carry information from the brain and spinal cord to the body of muscles, and will stimulate their movement. The horns in the back contain sensory neurons which will carry sensory information — about, for example, touch, pressure or pain — from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, back to the spinal cord and the brain. The spinal cord grey matter is enveloped in a column of white matter, which contains axons that allow different parts of the spinal cord to communicate smoothly. These axons will travel in both directions — some will carry signals from parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” other than the brain, to the brain, while others will deliver signals from the brain to neurons located elsewhere in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The white matter forming the ascending and descending spinal tracts is grouped in three paired funiculi, or sectors: the dorsal or posterior funiculi, lying between the dorsal horns; the lateral funiculi, lying on each side of the spinal cord between the dorsal-root entry zones and the emergence of the ventral nerve roots; and the ventral funiculi, lying between the ventral median sulcus and each ventral-root zone.

Two rows of spinal nerves — bundles of axons — emerge on either side of the cord through the bony ridges of the vertebrae. There are 31 pairs of these nerves, each representing a segment of the spinal cord which is further divided into five regions. From top to bottom, these are: 8 cervical (C), 12 thoracic (T), 5 lumbar (L), 5 sacral (S), and 1 coccygeal (Coc).

SPINAL NERVES

Spinal nerve roots emerge via intervertebral foramina; lumbar and sacral spinal roots, descending for some distance within the subarachnoid space before reaching the appropriate foramina, produce a group of nerve roots at the conus medullaris known as the cauda equina. Two enlargements of the spinal cord are evident: (1) a cervical enlargement (C5 through T1), which provides innervation for the upper extremities, and (2) a lumbosacral enlargement (L1 through S2), which innervates the lower extremities.

Sensory input from the surface of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, from joint, tendon, and muscle receptors, and from internal organs, will pass centrally through the dorsal roots of the spinal cord. Fibres from motor cells in the spinal cord will exit via the ventral roots and course to their peripheral targets (autonomic ganglia or skeletal muscle). Each spinal nerve is formed by the joining of a dorsal root and a ventral root, and it is the basic structural and functional unit of the peripheral nervous system.

CELLULAR LAMINAE

The gray matter of the spinal cord is composed of nine (9) distinct cellular layers, or laminae, indicated by Roman numerals. Laminae I to V, forming the dorsal horns, will receive sensory input. Lamina VII will form the intermediate zone at the base of all horns. Lamina IX will be composed of clusters of large alpha motor neurons, which will innervate striated muscle, and small gamma motor neurons, which will innervate contractile elements of the muscle spindle. Axons of both alpha and gamma motor neurons emerge via the ventral roots. Laminae VII and VIII will have variable configurations, and lamina VI will be present only in the cervical and lumbosacral enlargements. In addition, cells surrounding the central canal of the spinal cord will form an area often referred to as lamina X.

All primary sensory neurons that enter the spinal cord will originate in ganglia that are located in openings in the vertebral column called the intervertebral foramina. Peripheral processes of the nerve cells in these ganglia will convey sensation from various receptors, and central processes of the same cells will enter the spinal cord as bundles of nerve filaments. Fibres conveying specific forms of sensation will follow separate pathways. Impulses involved with pain and noxious stimuli largely will end in laminae I and II, while impulses associated with tactile sense will end in lamina IV or on processes of cells in that lamina. Signals from stretch receptors (i.e., muscle spindles and tendon organs) will end in parts of laminae V, VI, and VII; collaterals of these fibres associated with the stretch reflex will project into lamina IX.

Virtually all parts of the spinal gray matter will contain interneurons, which will connect various cell groups. Many interneurons will have short axons distributed locally, but some will have axons that extend for several spinal segments. Some interneurons may modulate or change the character of signals, while others will play key roles in transmission and in patterned reflexes.

THE PERIPHERAL NERVOUS SYSTEM

The peripheral nervous system is a channel for the relay of sensory and motor impulses between the central nervous system on one hand and the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” surface, skeletal muscles, and internal organs on the other hand. It is composed of (1) spinal nerves, (2) cranial nerves, and (3) certain parts of the autonomic nervous system.⁶⁶⁰ Unlike the brain and the spinal cord of the central nervous system that are protected by the vertebrae and the skull, the ⁶⁶⁰ Think of the entire nervous system from the perspective of an electric grid, the central nervous system would represent the powerhouse. The peripheral nervous system would represent long cables that connect the powerhouse to the outlying cities (limbs, glands and organs), of the country designated as “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to bring them electricity and send information back about their status.

As with the central nervous system, the basic cell units of the peripheral central nervous system are neurons (that is, nerve cell bodies and their axons and dendrites) and synapses, the points at which one neuron communicates with the next. Axons of the peripheral nervous system run together in bundles called fibres, and multiple fibres form the nerve, the cable of the electric circuit. The nerves, which also contain connective tissue and blood vessels, reach out to the muscles, glands and organs in the entire “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Sensory ganglia are oval swellings located on the dorsal roots of spinal nerves and on the roots of certain cranial nerves. The sensory neurons making up these ganglia are unipolar. Shaped much like a golf ball on a tee, they have round or slightly oval cell bodies with concentrically located nuclei, and they give rise to a single fibre that undergoes a T-shaped bifurcation, one branch going to the periphery and the other entering the brain or spinal cord. There are no synaptic contacts between neurons in a sensory ganglion.

have irregular shapes and eccentrically located nuclei and which project several dendritic and axonal processes. Preganglionic fibres originating from the brain or spinal cord will enter motor ganglia, where they will synapse on multipolar cell bodies. These postganglionic cells, in turn, will send their processes to visceral structures.

The peripheral nervous system will connect the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as a whole to the central nervous system through 31 pairs of spinal nerves, which link to the spinal cord, and 12 pairs of cranial nerves, which link directly to the brain itself. Peripheral nervous system nerves will often extend a great length from the central nervous system to reach the periphery of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The longest nerve in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the sciatic nerve, originates around the lumbar region of the spine and its branches reach until the tip of the toes, measuring a meter or more in an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The peripheral nervous system can be divided into somatic, autonomic and enteric nervous systems, determined by the function of the parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” they connect to.

THE SOMATIC NERVOUS SYSTEM

The somatic nervous system, also known as the voluntary nervous system, is the part of the peripheral nervous system responsible for carrying sensory and motor information to and from the central nervous system. It is responsible for transmitting sensory information as well as for voluntary movement. This system contains two major types of neurons:

- Sensory neurons (or afferent neurons), which will carry information from the “specific nerves” to the central nervous system. It is these sensory neurons, which will allow the collection of sensory information and send it to the brain and spinal cord, for further encoding, and the encoded information will be sent to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”.
- Motor neurons (or efferent neurons), which will carry the response of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, and which is decoded and sent by the brain and spinal cord to the muscle fibers throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and at which point the decoded response is manifested into existence in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”.

THE AUTONOMIC NERVOUS SYSTEM

העצה

The autonomic nervous system is the part of the peripheral nervous system which is responsible for regulating involuntary functions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, such as blood flow, heartbeat, digestion, and breathing. In other words, it is the autonomic system that collects data about aspects of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that are usually not under voluntary control. This system will allow such functions to take place without needing to consciously think about them happening.

The autonomic nervous system is regulated by the hypothalamus and is required for cardiac function, respiration, and other reflexes, including vomiting, coughing, and sneezing. It can be divided into sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous systems. These two, the sympathetic and parasympathetic nervous systems, have opposite actions. Sympathetic fibres, located in spinal nerves are responsible for the self-defense response, which is an acute response that takes place in case of an imminent harmful event against the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. To activate this response, the sympathetic fibres will use the neurotransmitter noradrenaline to activate the blood flow in skeletal muscles and lungs, dilating lungs and blood vessels and raise the heart rate. On the contrary, parasympathetic fibres will regulate resting responses such as heart rate, salivation, lacrimation (secreting tears), digestion, with the only exception being sexual arousal. Parasympathetic motor fibres are found in four of the 12 pairs of cranial nerves.

Although most of the autonomic nervous system responses will be involuntary, they can integrate with the somatic nervous system, which is responsible for the voluntary movements.

THE ENTERIC NERVOUS SYSTEM

The enteric nervous system is the intrinsic nervous system of the gastrointestinal tract. It contains complete reflex circuits that will detect the physiological condition of the gastrointestinal tract, integrate information about the state of the gastrointestinal tract, and provide outputs to control gut movement, fluid exchange between the gut and its lumen, and local blood flow. It is the only part of the peripheral nervous system which will contain extensive neural circuits that are capable of local, autonomous function. The enteric nervous system has extensive, two-way, connections with the central nervous system, and it will work in concert with the central nervous system to control the digestive system in the context of local and whole body physiological demands. Because of its extent and its degree of autonomy, the enteric nervous system will also be referred to as a second brain. The roles of the enteric nervous system are much more restricted than the actual brain, and so this analogy has limited utility.

The enteric nervous system is composed of thousands of small ganglia that will lie within the walls of the esophagus, stomach, small and large intestines, pancreas, gallbladder and biliary tree, the nerve fibres that connect these ganglia, and nerve fibres that supply the muscle of the gut wall, the mucosal epithelium, arterioles and other effector tissues. Large numbers of neurons will be contained in the enteric nervous system, about 200-600 million in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This is far more neurons than occurs in any other peripheral organ and is similar to the number of neurons in the spinal cord.

The ganglia contain neurons and glial cells, but not connective tissue elements, and in many respects they will be similar in structure to the central nervous system, except that there will be no significant blood-enteric nervous system barrier. Nerve fibre bundles within the enteric nervous system will consist of the axons of enteric neurons, axons of extrinsic neurons that project to the gut wall, and glial cells. Two major sets of ganglia will be found, the myenteric ganglia between the external muscle layers, and the submucosal ganglia. The myenteric plexus will form a continuous network, around the circumference of the gut and extending from the upper esophagus to the internal anal sphincter. The ganglionated submucosal plexus will be present in the small and large intestines, but will be absent from the esophagus and will contain only very few ganglia in the stomach.

The enteric nervous system originates from neural crest cells that colonise the gut during intra-uterine life. It will become functional in the last third of gestation of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and will continue to develop following birth.

The enteric nervous system will receive inputs from the parasympathetic and sympathetic parts of the nervous system, and the gastrointestinal tract also will receive a plentiful supply of afferent nerve fibres, through the vagus nerves and spinal afferent pathways. Thus, there will be a rich interaction, in both directions, between the enteric nervous system, sympathetic prevertebral ganglia and the central nervous system.

The gastrointestinal tract also will harbor an extensive endocrine signaling system, and many gastrointestinal functions will be under dual neuronal and endocrine control. Enteric neurons also will interact with the extensive intrinsic immune system of the gastrointestinal tract.

THE TWELVE CRANIAL NERVES

As you would know already, “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” can be considered from different perspectives associated with the events taking place in it. This includes the structural positioning of the twelve redundant “Divine Equilibrium Regions” or the twelve gates (the six “Entry Gates” and the six “Exit Gates”) along the complete flow path of the “Generative Divine Particle” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, the flow of the products of the work performed by each and all of the seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, the flow of the many others uniquely identified information transported by the flow of “energy”, the flow of products that are formed, the flow of products that are consumed, the flow of the unique movement, etc... It is so that “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” can be decomposed along these perspectives and the different decompositions can be linked together through appropriated relations of adequacy, relations of convenience, which exist between those constitutive perspectives, to form separate unique expressions, which are based on those relations of adequacy. Such unique expressions will form the basic layout of a unique “entities” or unique “creatures”, or “living images” of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, which are expressed into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” and through manifestations by metaphors. The twelve cranial nerves are a manifestation by metaphors of the twelve gates (the six “Entry Gates” and the six “Exit Gates”) along the complete flow path of the “Generative Divine Particle” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, from the perspective of the collection and transfer of information from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” wearing that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” for ultimate processing.

There are 12 pairs of cranial nerves which are linked directly to the brain, without having to pass through the spinal cord. Therefore, these allow sensory information to pass from the organs of the head, such as the ears and eyes, to the brain. These also convey motor information from the brain to these organs, such as giving directions to the mouth to move in order to eat or speak.

All the cranial nerves originate from nuclei in the brain. Two of the cranial nerves, the optic nerve and the olfactory nerve, originate from the cerebrum. The accessory nerve has a nucleus in the spinal cord. The rest of the cranial nerves originate from the brain stem. These can arise from a specific region of the brain stem, either the midbrain, pons, or medulla, or they may arise from a junction between two parts.

The olfactory nerve (CN I) and optic nerve (CN II) originate from the cerebrum. Cranial nerves III – XII arise from the brain stem. They can arise from a specific part of the brain stem (midbrain, pons or medulla), or from a junction between two parts:

- Midbrain — the trochlear nerve (IV) comes from the posterior side of the midbrain. It has the longest intracranial length of all the cranial nerves.
- Midbrain-pontine junction — oculomotor (III).
- Pons — trigeminal (V).
- Pontine-medulla junction — abducens, facial, vestibulocochlear (VI-VIII).
- Medulla oblongata — posterior to the olive: glossopharyngeal, vagus, accessory (IX-XI). Anterior to the olive: hypoglossal (XII).

The functions of the cranial nerves are typically described as being either sensory or motor in function. The sensory cranial nerves are involved with the senses, such as sight, smell, hearing, and touch.

Whereas the motor nerves are responsible for controlling the movements and functions of muscles and glands, cranial nerves supply sensory and motor information to areas of the head and neck. One nerve, the vagus nerve, extends beyond the neck to the thoracic and abdominal organs.

Each type of cranial nerve either has sensory functions, motor functions, or both. The types of information that cranial nerves transport can all differ. There are seven types of modalities of information that can be sent, with three of these being unique to cranial nerves.

THE OLFACTORY NERVE.— The olfactory nerve (CN I) is the first and shortest cranial nerve. It is a special visceral afferent nerve, which transmits information relating to smell. The olfactory nerve is derived from the olfactory placode (a thickening of the ectoderm layer), which also give rise to the glial cells which support the nerve. The smell molecules in the nasal cavity trigger nerve impulses that pass along this nerve to the olfactory bulb, then on to limbic areas. The type of modality is sensory, of the special visceral sensory variety. The anatomical course of the olfactory nerve describes the transmission of special sensory information from the nasal epithelium to the primary olfactory cortex of the brain. The olfactory nerves are associated with the function of smell.

The sense of smell is detected by olfactory receptors located within the nasal epithelium. Their axons (fila olfactoria) assemble into small bundles of true olfactory nerves, which penetrate the small foramina in the cribriform plate of the ethmoid bone and enter the cranial cavity.

Once in the cranial cavity, the fibres enter the olfactory bulb, which lies in the olfactory groove within the anterior cranial fossa. The olfactory bulb is an ovoid structure which contains specialised neurones, called mitral cells. The olfactory nerve fibres synapse with the mitral cells, forming collections known as synaptic glomeruli. From the glomeruli, second order nerves then pass posteriorly into the olfactory tract.

The olfactory tract travels posteriorly on the inferior surface of the frontal lobe. As the tract reaches the anterior perforated substance (an area at the level of the optic chiasm) it divides into medial and lateral stria:

- Lateral stria — carries the axons to the primary olfactory cortex, located within the uncus of temporal lobe.
- Medial stria — carries the axons across the medial plane of the anterior commissure, where they meet the olfactory bulb of the opposite side.

The primary olfactory cortex sends nerve fibres to many other areas of the brain, notably the piriform cortex, the amygdala, olfactory tubercle and the secondary olfactory cortex. These areas are involved in the memory and appreciation of olfactory sensations.

The sensory function of the olfactory nerve is achieved via the olfactory mucosa. This mucosal layer not only senses smell, but it also detects the more advanced aspects of taste. It is located in the roof of the nasal cavity and is composed of pseudostratified columnar epithelium which contains a number of cells:

- Basal cells — form the new stem cells from which the new olfactory cells can develop.
- Sustentacular cells — tall cells for structural support. These are analogous to the glial cells located in the central nervous system.
- Olfactory receptor cells — bipolar neurons which consist of two processes:
 - Dendritic process projects to the surface of the epithelium, where they project a number of short cilia, the olfactory hairs, into the mucous membrane. These cilia react to odors in the air and stimulate the olfactory cells.
 - Central process (also designated as the axon) projects in the opposite direction through the basement membrane.

THE OPTIC NERVE.— The optic nerve (CN II) is the sensory nerve associated with the function of vision. Visual information from the retinas of the eyes is conveyed to the brain by the optic nerves at the back of the eye. Both optic nerves from the eyes meet to form something called an optic chiasm. At the optic chiasm, signals from both fields of vision are sent to opposite sides of the brain via two separate optic tracts. These signals will then eventually reach the visual cortex at the back of the brain. The type of modality of the optic nerve is sensory, of the special somatic sensory variety.

The optic nerve is developed from the optic vesicle, an outpocketing of the forebrain. The optic nerve can therefore be considered part of the central nervous system, and examination of the nerve enables an assessment of intracranial health. Due to its unique anatomical relation to the brain, the optic nerve is surrounded by the cranial meninges (not by epi-, peri- and endoneurium like most other nerves).

The anatomical course of the optic nerve describes the transmission of special sensory information from the retina of the eye to the primary visual cortex of the brain. It can be divided into extracranial (outside the cranial cavity) and intracranial components.

In the extracranial, the optic nerve is formed by the convergence of axons from the retinal ganglion cells. These cells in turn receive impulses from the photoreceptors of the eye (the rods and cones). After its formation, the nerve leaves the bony orbit via the optic canal, a passageway through the sphenoid bone. It enters the cranial cavity, running along the surface of the middle cranial fossa (in close proximity to the pituitary gland).

In the intracranial (The Visual Pathway), within the middle cranial fossa, the optic nerves from each eye unite to form the optic chiasm. At the chiasm, fibres from the nasal (medial) half of each retina cross over to the contralateral optic tract, while fibres from the temporal (lateral) halves remain ipsilateral:

- Left optic tract — contains fibres from the left temporal (lateral) retina, and the right nasal (medial) retina.
- Right optic tract — contains fibres from the right temporal retina, and the left nasal retina.

Each optic tract travels to its corresponding cerebral hemisphere to reach the lateral geniculate nucleus (LGN), a relay system located in the thalamus; the fibres synapse here.

Axons from the LGN then carry visual information via a pathway known as the optic radiation. The pathway itself can be divided into:

- Upper optic radiation — carries fibres from the superior retinal quadrants (corresponding to the inferior visual field quadrants). It travels through the parietal lobe to reach the visual cortex.
- Lower optic radiation — carries fibres from the inferior retinal quadrants (corresponding to the superior visual field quadrants). It travels through the temporal lobe, via a pathway known as Meyers' loop, to reach the visual cortex.

Once at the visual cortex, the brain processes the sensory data and responds appropriately.

THE OCULOMOTOR NERVE.— The oculomotor nerve is the third cranial nerve (CN III) and it is associated with vision. This nerve provides motor function to most of the muscles around the eyes to help them move and to focus on objects. This nerve also functions in pupillary response to help control the size of the pupils as it responds to light, to dilate and constrict the pupils. This nerve originates from the front of the midbrain, which is part of the brain stem, moving from this area until it reaches the area of the eye sockets. The modality of this cranial nerve is motor, of the general somatic and general visceral motor variety.

The oculomotor nerve originates from the oculomotor nucleus, which is located within the midbrain of the brainstem, ventral to the cerebral aqueduct. It emerges from the anterior aspect of the midbrain, passing inferiorly to the posterior cerebral artery and superiorly to the superior cerebellar artery. The nerve then pierces the dura mater and enters the lateral aspect of the cavernous sinus. Within the cavernous sinus, it receives sympathetic branches from the internal carotid plexus. These fibres do not combine with the oculomotor nerve; they merely travel within its sheath. The oculomotor nerve leaves the cranial cavity via the superior orbital fissure. At this point, it divides into superior and inferior branches:

- Superior branch — provides motor innervation to the superior rectus and levator palpebrae superioris. Sympathetic fibres run with the superior branch to innervate the superior tarsal muscle.
- Inferior branch — provides motor innervation to the inferior rectus, medial rectus and inferior oblique. Also supplies pre-ganglionic parasympathetic fibres to the ciliary ganglion, which ultimately innervates the sphincter pupillae and ciliary muscles.

The oculomotor nerve innervates many of the extraocular muscles. These muscles move the eyeball and upper eyelid.

Superior Branch:

- Superior rectus — elevates the eyeball
- Levator palpebrae superioris — raises the upper eyelid.
- Additionally, there are sympathetic fibres that travel with the superior branch of the oculomotor nerve. They innervate the superior tarsal muscle, which acts to keep the eyelid elevated after the levator palpebrae superioris has raised it.

Inferior Branch:

- Inferior rectus — depresses the eyeball
- Medial rectus — adducts the eyeball

- Inferior oblique — elevates, abducts and laterally rotates the eyeball

THE TROCHLEAR NERVE.— The trochlear nerve (CN IV) is the fourth paired cranial nerve. It is the smallest cranial nerve (by number of axons), yet has the longest intracranial course. It arises from the trochlear nucleus of the brain, emerging from the posterior aspect of the midbrain (it is the only cranial nerve to exit from the posterior midbrain). It runs anteriorly and inferiorly within the subarachnoid space before piercing the dura mater adjacent to the posterior clinoid process of the sphenoid bone.

The nerve then moves along the lateral wall of the cavernous sinus (along with the oculomotor nerve, the abducens nerve, the ophthalmic and maxillary branches of the trigeminal nerve and the internal carotid artery) before entering the orbit of the eye via the superior orbital fissure.

The trochlear nerve innervates a single muscle: the superior oblique, which is a muscle of oculomotion. As the fibres from the trochlear nucleus cross in the midbrain before they exit, the trochlear neurones innervate the contralateral superior oblique.

The tendon of the superior oblique is tethered by a fibrous structure known as the trochlea, giving the nerve its name. Although the mechanism of action of the superior oblique is complex, it is sufficient to understand that the overall action of the superior oblique is to depress and intort the eyeball.

The trochlear nerve controls the superior oblique muscles, which are the muscles that are responsible for downward, outward, and inward eye movements. This nerve travels from the back of the midbrain to the eye sockets where it stimulates these superior oblique muscles. The trochlear nerve is motor in modality, of the general somatic motor variety.

THE TRIGEMINAL NERVE.— The trigeminal nerve (CN V) is the fifth paired cranial nerve. It is also the largest of the cranial nerves and has both sensory and motor functions.

It has three divisions, which are:

- Ophthalmic. The ophthalmic division sends sensory information from the upper part of your face, including your forehead, scalp, and upper eyelids.

- Maxillary. This division communicates sensory information from the middle part of your face, including your cheeks, upper lip, and nasal cavity.
- Mandibular. The mandibular division has both a sensory and a motor function. It sends sensory information from your ears, lower lip, and chin. It also controls the movement of muscles within your jaw and ear.

The trigeminal nerve originates from a group of nuclei, which is a collection of nerve cells, in the midbrain and medulla regions of the brainstem. Eventually, these nuclei form a separate sensory root and motor root.

The sensory root of your trigeminal nerve branches into the ophthalmic, maxillary, and mandibular divisions. The motor root of your trigeminal nerve passes below the sensory root and is only distributed into the mandibular division.

THE ABDUCENS NERVE.— The abducens nerve (CN VI) is the sixth paired cranial nerve. The abducens nerve arises from the abducens nucleus in the pons of the brainstem. It exits the brainstem at the junction of the pons and the medulla. It then enters the subarachnoid space and pierces the dura mater to travel in an area known as Dorello's canal. At the tip of petrous temporal bone, the abducens nerve leaves Dorello's canal and enters the cavernous sinus (a dural venous sinus). It travels through the cavernous sinus and enters the bony orbit via the superior orbital fissure. Within the bony orbit, the abducens nerve terminates by innervating the lateral rectus muscle.

The abducens nerve provides innervation to the lateral rectus muscle; one of the extraocular muscles. The lateral rectus originates from the lateral part of the common tendinous ring, and attaches to the anterolateral aspect of the sclera. It acts to abduct the eyeball (i.e. to rotate the gaze away from the midline).

THE FACIAL NERVE.— The facial nerve (CN VII) is the seventh paired cranial nerve. The course of the facial nerve is very complex. There are many branches, which transmit a combination of sensory, motor and parasympathetic fibres.

Anatomically, the course of the facial nerve can be divided into two parts: intracranial and extracranial.

Intracranial — the course of the nerve through the cranial cavity, and the cranium itself. The nerve arises in the pons, an area of the brainstem. It begins as two roots; a large motor root, and a small sensory root (the part of the facial nerve that arises from the sensory root is sometimes known as the intermediate nerve). The two roots travel through the internal acoustic meatus, a 1cm long opening in the petrous part of the temporal bone. Here, they are in very close proximity to the inner ear. Still within the temporal bone, the roots leave the internal acoustic meatus, and enter into the facial canal. The canal is a "Z" shaped structure. The facial nerve exits the facial canal (and the cranium) via the stylomastoid foramen. This is an exit located just posterior to the styloid process of the temporal bone.

Extracranial — the course of the nerve outside the cranium, through the face and neck. After exiting the skull, the facial nerve turns superiorly to run just anterior to the outer ear. The first extracranial branch to arise is the posterior auricular nerve. It provides motor innervation to the some of the muscles around the ear.

Immediately distal to this, motor branches are sent to the posterior belly of the digastric muscle and to the stylohyoid muscle. The main trunk of the nerve, now termed the motor root of the facial nerve, continues anteriorly and inferiorly into the parotid gland. Within the parotid gland, the nerve terminates by splitting into five branches: Temporal branch, Zygomatic branch, Buccal branch, Marginal mandibular branch, and Cervical branch. These branches are responsible for innervating the muscles of facial expression.

The branches of the facial nerve are responsible for innervating many of the muscles of the head and neck. All these muscles are derivatives of the second pharyngeal arch. The first motor branch arises within the facial canal; the nerve to stapedius. The nerve passes through the pyramidal eminence to supply the stapedius muscle in the middle ear. Between the stylomastoid foramen, and the parotid gland, three more motor branches are given off:

- Posterior auricular nerve — Ascends in front of the mastoid process, and innervates the intrinsic and extrinsic muscles of the outer ear. It also supplies the occipital part of the occipitofrontalis muscle.

- Nerve to the posterior belly of the digastric muscle — Innervates the posterior belly of the digastric muscle (a suprahyoid muscle of the neck). It is responsible for raising the hyoid bone.
- Nerve to the stylohyoid muscle — Innervates the stylohyoid muscle (a suprahyoid muscle of the neck). It is responsible for raising the hyoid bone.

Within the parotid gland, the facial nerve terminates by bifurcating into five motor branches. These innervate the muscles of facial expression:

- Temporal — Innervates the frontalis, orbicularis oculi and corrugator supercilii.
- Zygomatic — Innervates the orbicularis oculi.
- Buccal — Innervates the orbicularis oris, buccinator and zygomaticus.
- Marginal mandibular — Innervates the depressor labii inferioris, depressor anguli oris and mentalis.
- Cervical — Innervates the platysma.

Facial nerves have both sensory and motor functions such as collecting information from the taste buds of the tongue, controlling muscle movements required for facial expressions, and supplying glands which produce saliva and secrete tears. Facial nerves originate from the pons area of the brainstem, where it has both motor and sensory roots, before fusing together to form the facial nerve.

The sensations from part of the external ear are of the general somatic sensory modality, taste is part of the special visceral sensory modality, the muscles of facial expressions are part of the special visceral sensory modality, and the lacrimal and mucous glands of the eyes, mouth, and nose are of the general visceral motor modality.

THE VESTIBULOCOCHLEAR NERVE.— The Vestibulocochlear Nerve (CN VIII) is the eighth paired cranial nerve. It is comprised of two parts: vestibular fibres and cochlear fibres. The vestibular and cochlear portions of the vestibulocochlear nerve are functionally discrete, and so originate from different nuclei in the brain:

- Vestibular component — arises from the vestibular nuclei complex in the pons and medulla.
- Cochlear component — arises from the ventral and dorsal cochlear nuclei, situated in the inferior cerebellar peduncle.

Both sets of fibres combine in the pons to form the vestibulocochlear nerve. The nerve emerges from the brain at the cerebellopontine angle and exits the cranium via the internal acoustic meatus of the temporal bone.

Within the distal aspect of the internal acoustic meatus, the vestibulocochlear nerve splits, forming the vestibular nerve and the cochlear nerve. The vestibular nerve innervates the vestibular system of the inner ear, which is responsible for detecting balance. The cochlear nerve travels to cochlea of the inner ear, forming the spiral ganglia which serve the sense of hearing.

The vestibulocochlear nerve is unusual in that it primarily consists of bipolar neurones. It is responsible for the special senses of hearing (via the cochlear nerve), and balance (via the vestibular nerve).

In the sense of hearing, the cochlea facilitates detection of the magnitude and frequency of sound waves. The inner hair cells of the organ of Corti activate ion channels in response to vibrations of the basilar membrane. Action potentials travel from the spiral ganglia, which house the cell bodies of neurones of the cochlear nerve. The magnitude of the sound determines how much the membrane vibrates and thereby how often action potentials are triggered. Louder sounds cause the basilar membrane to vibrate more, resulting in action potentials being transmitted from the spiral ganglia more often, and vice versa. The frequency of the sound is coded by the position of the activated inner hair cells along the basilar membrane.

In the equilibrium (balance) sense, the vestibular apparatus senses changes in the position of the head in relation to gravity. The vestibular hair cells are located in the otolith organs (the utricle and saccule), where they detect linear movements of the head, as well as in the three semicircular canals, where they detect rotational movements of the head. The cell bodies of the vestibular nerve are located in the vestibular ganglion which is housed in the outer part of the internal acoustic meatus.

THE GLOSSOPHARYNGEAL NERVE.— The Glossopharyngeal Nerve (CN IX) is the ninth paired cranial nerve. The glossopharyngeal nerve originates in the medulla oblongata of the brain. It emerges from the anterior aspect of the medulla, moving laterally in the posterior cranial fossa. The nerve leaves the cranium via the jugular foramen. At this point, the tympanic nerve arises. It has a mixed sensory and parasympathetic composition.

Immediately outside the jugular foramen lie two ganglia (collections of nerve cell bodies). They are known as the superior and inferior (or petrous) ganglia; they contain the cell bodies of the sensory fibres in the glossopharyngeal nerve.

Extracranial, the glossopharyngeal nerve descends down the neck, anterolateral to the internal carotid artery. At the inferior margin of the stylopharyngeus, several branches arise to provide motor innervation to the muscle. It also gives rise to the carotid sinus nerve, which provides sensation to the carotid sinus and “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The nerve enters the pharynx by passing between the superior and middle pharyngeal constrictors. Within the pharynx, it terminates by dividing into several branches: lingual, tonsil and pharyngeal.

The glossopharyngeal nerve provides sensory innervation a variety of structures in the head and neck. The tympanic nerve arises as the nerve traverses the jugular foramen. It penetrates the temporal bone and enters the cavity of the middle ear. Here, it forms the tympanic plexus, which is a network of nerves that provide sensory innervation to the middle ear, internal surface of the tympanic membrane and Eustachian tube. At the level of the stylopharyngeus, the carotid sinus nerve arises. It descends down the neck to innervate both the carotid sinus and carotid body, which provide information about blood pressure and oxygen saturation respectively. The glossopharyngeal nerve terminates by splitting into several sensory branches:

- Pharyngeal branch — combines with fibres of the vagus nerve to form the pharyngeal plexus. It innervates the mucosa of the oropharynx.
- Lingual branch — provides the posterior 1/3 of the tongue with general and taste sensation
- Tonsillar branch — forms a network of nerves, known as the tonsillar plexus, which innervates the palatine tonsils.

The glossopharyngeal nerve has both motor and sensory functions originating from a part of the brainstem called the medulla oblongata, extending into the neck and throat. It sends sensory information from the external ear and middle ear cavity (general somatic sensory modality), the back part of the tongue (special visceral sensory modality), and from the sinuses at the back of the throat (general visceral sensory modality). It also sends motor information from two salivary glands call parotid glands (general visceral motor modality) and movement from a muscle at the back of the throat called the stylopharyngeus (special visceral motor modality).

THE VAGUS NERVE.— The Vagus Nerve (CN X) is the tenth cranial nerve. The vagus nerve is the longest and most complex of the 12 pairs of cranial nerves that emanate from the brain. The Vagus Nerve has a variety of functions and is the most branched of all the cranial nerves with sensory, motor, and autonomic fibers. It receives sensory information from the ear canal as well as the larynx and pharynx, which are parts of the throat (general somatic sensory modality), information from the organs of the chest and trunk such as the heart and intestines (general visceral sensory modality), and a sense of taste from the root of the tongue (special visceral sensory modality). It also receives motor information from the smooth muscles of parts of the throat (general visceral motor modality), as well as most of the muscles of the throat (special visceral motor modality). The designation “vagus” comes from the Latin term for “wandering.” This is because the vagus nerve wanders from the brain into organs in the neck, chest, and abdomen.

In the head, the vagus nerve originates from the medulla of the brainstem. It exits the cranium via the jugular foramen, with the glossopharyngeal and accessory nerves (CN IX and XI respectively).

Within the cranium, the auricular branch arises. This supplies sensation to the posterior part of the external auditory canal and external ear.

In the neck, the vagus nerve passes into the carotid sheath, travelling inferiorly with the internal jugular vein and common carotid artery. At the base of the neck, the right and left nerves have differing pathways:

- The right vagus nerve passes anterior to the subclavian artery and posterior to the sternoclavicular joint, entering the thorax.
- The left vagus nerve passes inferiorly between the left common carotid and left subclavian arteries, posterior to the sternoclavicular joint, entering the thorax.

Several branches arise in the neck:

- Pharyngeal branches — Provides motor innervation to the majority of the muscles of the pharynx and soft palate.
- Superior laryngeal nerve — Splits into internal and external branches. The external laryngeal nerve innervates the cricothyroid muscle of the larynx. The internal laryngeal provides sensory innervation to the laryngopharynx and superior part of the larynx.
- Recurrent laryngeal nerve (right side only) — Hooks underneath the right subclavian artery, then ascends towards to the larynx. It innervates the majority of the intrinsic muscles of the larynx.

In the thorax, the right vagus nerve forms the posterior vagal trunk, and the left forms the anterior vagal trunk. Branches from the vagal trunks contribute to the formation of the oesophageal plexus, which innervates the smooth muscle of the oesophagus. Two other branches arise in the thorax:

- Left recurrent laryngeal nerve — it hooks under the arch of the aorta, ascending to innervate the majority of the intrinsic muscles of the larynx.
- Cardiac branches — these innervate regulate heart rate and provide visceral sensation to the organ.

The vagal trunks enter the abdomen via the oesophageal hiatus, an opening in the diaphragm.

In the abdomen, the vagal trunks terminate by dividing into branches that supply the oesophagus, stomach and the small and large bowel (up to the splenic flexure).

There are somatic and visceral components to the sensory function of the vagus nerve. Somatic refers to sensation from the skin and muscles. This is provided by the auricular nerve, which innervates the skin of the posterior part of the external auditory canal and external ear. Viscera sensation is that from the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The vagus nerve innervates:

- Laryngopharynx — via the internal laryngeal nerve.
- Superior aspect of larynx (above vocal folds) — via the internal laryngeal nerve.
- Heart — via cardiac branches of the vagus nerve.
- Gastro-intestinal tract (up to the splenic flexure) — via the terminal branches of the vagus nerve.

In the thorax and abdomen, the vagus nerve is the main parasympathetic outflow to the heart and gastro-intestinal organs.

In the heart, cardiac branches arise in the thorax, conveying parasympathetic innervation to the sino-atrial and atrio-ventricular nodes of the heart. These branches stimulate a reduction in the resting heart rate. They are constantly active, producing a rhythm of 60–80 beats per minute. If the vagus nerve was lesioned, the resting heart rate would be around 100 beats per minute.

In the Gastro-Intestinal System, the vagus nerve provides parasympathetic innervation to the majority of the abdominal organs. It sends branches to the oesophagus, stomach and most of the intestinal tract, up to the splenic flexure of the large colon. The function of the vagus nerve is to stimulate smooth muscle contraction and glandular secretions in these organs. For example, in the stomach, the vagus nerve increases the rate of gastric emptying, and stimulates acid production.

THE ACCESSORY NERVE.— The Accessory Nerve (CN XI) is the eleventh paired cranial nerve. It is divided into spinal and cranial parts.

The spinal part arises from neurones of the upper spinal cord, specifically C1-C5/C6 spinal nerve roots. These fibres coalesce to form the spinal part of the accessory nerve, which then runs superiorly to enter the cranial cavity via the foramen magnum.

The nerve traverses the posterior cranial fossa to reach the jugular foramen. It briefly meets the cranial portion of the accessory nerve, before exiting the skull (along with the glossopharyngeal and vagus nerves).

Outside the cranium, the spinal part descends along the internal carotid artery to reach the sternocleidomastoid muscle, which it innervates. It then moves across the posterior triangle of the neck to supply motor fibres to the trapezius.

The cranial part is much smaller and arises from the lateral aspect of the medulla oblongata. It leaves the cranium via the jugular foramen, where it briefly contacts the spinal part of the accessory nerve.

Immediately after leaving the skull, cranial part combines with the vagus nerve (CN X) at the inferior ganglion of vagus nerve (a ganglion is a collection of nerve cell bodies). The fibres from the cranial part are then distributed through the vagus nerve. For this reason, the cranial part of the accessory nerve is considered as part of the vagus nerve.

The spinal accessory nerve has motor functions associated with the muscles and movements of the head, neck, and shoulders. This also stimulates the muscles of the larynx and pharynx, which are responsible for swallowing. Movements of the head and shoulders are of the general somatic motor modality, whereas the internal movements are of the special visceral motor modality.

THE HYPOGLOSSAL NERVE.— The Hypoglossal Nerve (CN XII) is the twelfth paired cranial nerve. Its name is derived from ancient Greek, “hypo”, which means “under”, and “glossal”, which means “tongue”. The hypoglossal nerve arises from the hypoglossal nucleus in the medulla oblongata of the brainstem. It then passes laterally across the posterior cranial fossa, within the subarachnoid space. The nerve exits the cranium via the hypoglossal canal.

Now extracranial, the nerve receives a branch of the cervical plexus that conducts fibres from C1/C2 spinal nerve roots. These fibres do not combine with the hypoglossal nerve; they merely travel within its sheath.

It then passes inferiorly to the angle of the mandible, crossing the internal and external carotid arteries, and moving in an anterior direction to enter the tongue.

The hypoglossal nerve is responsible for most of the movements in the tongue. These originate in the medulla oblongata and move down into the jaw, reaching the tongue. This nerve is of the general somatic motor modality.

In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was building all the nervous system of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” up to the least details as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, directly creating the layers of structures and organs of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to match those that would acquire “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when they approach the end of physical adolescence, and directly sewing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence. THE LYMPHATIC SYSTEM

THE LYMPHATIC SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will contain different more refined structures called liquids, all with different names depending on where they are.

The blood, circulating in the blood vessels, contains the plasma. As blood will pass through a network of capillaries, a portion of the plasma will escape from the capillaries and will fill the gap between the capillaries and the surrounding cells. At this point, the liquid will be called an interstitial fluid or extracellular fluid, and it will contain oxygen, glucose, amino acids, and other nutrients needed by tissue cells.

In the capillary network, there will be also thin-walled vessels (tubes) structured like blood vessels, that will carry a fluid which is designated as “lymph” and will be essentially composed of water, but also will contain white blood cells. These lymph vessels will be lined by endothelial cells, and will have a thin layer of smooth muscle, and adventitia that will bind the lymph vessels to the surrounding tissue. These lymph vessels will be devoted to the propulsion of the lymph from the lymph capillaries, which will be mainly concerned with absorption of interstitial fluid from the tissues. Lymph capillaries will be slightly larger than their counterpart capillaries of the vascular system. Lymph vessels that will carry lymph to a lymph gland will be designated as “afferent lymph vessels”, and those that will carry it from a lymph gland will be designated as “efferent lymph vessels”, from where the lymph may travel to another lymph gland, may be returned to a vein, or may travel to a larger lymph duct. Lymph ducts will drain the lymph into one of the subclavian veins and thus return it to general circulation.

The lymph vessels are exceedingly delicate, and their coats are so transparent that the fluid they contain is readily seen through them. They will be interrupted at intervals by constrictions, which will give them a knotted or beaded appearance; these constrictions will correspond to the situations of valves in their interior. Lymphatic vessels will be found in nearly every texture and organ of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Such non-vascular structures as cartilage, the nails, cuticle, and hair will have none, but with these exceptions, all parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be found to be permeated by these vessels.

The lymphatic system is the complex network of lymph vessels, capillaries, tissues, and organs, which intervene for the circulation of lymph through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”: through the lymphatic system, lymph will be (1) collected in the various organs and tissues; (2) conducted from the capillaries to the large veins of the neck at the junction of the internal jugular and subclavian veins, where the lymph will be poured into the blood stream; and (3) filtered through lymphatic glands or nodes which are interspaced in the pathways of the collecting vessels, as it passes through them and contributing lymphocytes to it.

The fluid and proteins within the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will begin their journey back to the bloodstream by passing into the tiny lymphatic capillaries that infuse almost every tissue of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Only a few regions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, including the epidermis of the skin, the mucous membranes, the bone marrow, and the central nervous system, will be free of lymphatic capillaries, whereas regions such as the lungs, gut, genitourinary system, and dermis of the skin will be densely packed with these vessels. Once within the lymphatic system, the extracellular fluid, which is now called lymph, will drain into lymph vessels. These vessels will converge to form one of two large vessels called lymphatic trunks, which will be connected to veins at the base of the neck. One of these trunks, the right lymphatic duct, will drain the upper right portion of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, returning lymph to the bloodstream via the right subclavian vein. The other trunk, the thoracic duct, will drain the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into the left subclavian vein. Lymph will be transported along the system of vessels by muscle contractions, and valves will prevent lymph from flowing backward. The lymph vessels will be punctuated at intervals by small masses of lymph tissue, called lymph glands, which will remove foreign materials such as infectious microorganisms from the lymph filtering through them.

STRUCTURE OF LYMPHATIC VESSELS

The larger lymphatic vessels will be each composed of three coats. The internal coat is thin, transparent, slightly elastic, and consists of a layer of elongated endothelial cells with wavy margins by which the contiguous cells are dovetailed into one another; the cells are supported on an elastic membrane. The middle coat is composed of smooth muscular and fine elastic fibers, disposed in a transverse direction. The external coat consists of connective tissue, intermixed with smooth muscular fibers longitudinally or obliquely disposed; it forms a protective covering to the other coats, and serves to connect the vessel with the neighboring structures. In the smaller vessels there will be no muscular or elastic fibers, and the wall will consist only of a connective-tissue coat, lined by endothelium. The thoracic duct will have a more complex structure than the other lymphatic vessels; it will present a distinct subendothelial layer of branched corpuscles, similar to that, which will be found in the arteries; in the middle coat there will be, in addition to the muscular and elastic fibers, a layer of connective tissue with its fibers arranged longitudinally. The lymphatic vessels will be supplied by nutrient vessels, which will be distributed to their outer and middle coats; and here also many non-medullated nerves in the form of a fine plexus of fibrils will be found.

The valves of the lymphatic vessels are formed of thin layers of fibrous tissue covered on both surfaces by endothelium which presents the same arrangement as on the valves of veins. In form the valves are semilunar; they are attached by their convex edges to the wall of the vessel, the concave edges being free and directed along the course of the contained current. Two such valves, of equal size, will be found opposite one another; but exceptions will occur, especially at or near the anastomoses of lymphatic vessels. Thus, when one valve will be of small size and the other will increase in proportion.

In the lymphatic vessels the valves will be placed at much shorter intervals than in the veins. They will be most numerous near the lymphatic glands, and will be found more frequently in the lymphatic vessels of the neck and upper extremity than in those of the lower extremity. The wall of the lymphatic vessel immediately above the point of attachment of each segment of a valve will be expanded into a pouch or sinus⁶⁶¹ which will give to these vessels, when distended, the knotted or beaded appearance already referred to. Valves are wanting in the vessels composing the plexiform net-work in which the lymphatic vessels usually originate on the surface of the body.

ORGANS OF THE LYMPHATIC SYSTEM

The organs which intervene for the circulation of lymph through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” are constituted by the maturation sites of B and T cells as well as the organs in which further differentiation of lymphocytes will occur.

The sites of B and T cell maturation include the thymus, bone marrow, and fetal liver. The thymus is a bi-lobed organ located in the thorax. Each lobe is subdivided into lobules, each containing an outer cortex and an inner medulla. The cortex will have more immature cells and the medulla more mature cells. It is in the thymus that immature T cells will be exposed to self-antigens and a selective pressure will develop such that cells that can respond to self are destroyed. Endothelial cells will be prominent in the thymus, and high endothelial venules will be critical for cell traffic. While the thymus will be very large in an infant “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, it will involute with age. The atrophy will begin in the cortical region as a result of the corticosteroid sensitivity of the cells.

All lymphocytes will derive from stem cells in the bone marrow (from the already described skeletal system). Stem cells destined to become B lymphocytes will remain in the bone marrow as they mature, while prospective T cells will migrate to the thymus to undergo further growth. Mature B and T lymphocytes will exit the sites of B and T cell maturation and will be transported via the bloodstream to the organs, in which further differentiation of lymphocytes will occur, and where they will become activated by contact with anything distinguished from the ⁶⁶¹ Sinus is Latin for “bay”, “pocket”, “curve”, or “bosom”. In anatomy, the term is used in various contexts. A sinus is a sac or cavity in any organ or tissue, or an abnormal cavity or passage caused by the destruction of tissue. In common usage, “sinus” will refer to the paranasal sinuses, which are air cavities in the cranial bones, especially those near the nose and connecting to it.

“Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning.

The organs which intervene for the circulation of lymph through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and in which further differentiation of lymphocytes will occur, are constituted by the lymphatic glands, the spleen, and small masses of lymph tissue such as Peyer’s patches, the appendix, the tonsils, and selected regions of the areas of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which will be lined with mucous membranes.

THE LYMPHATIC GLANDS (LYMPHOGLANDULAE)

⁶⁶² As we drew your attention in one previous annotation, here too, take a close look at that lymphatic gland, see beyond the diagram and try to get an idea about: (1) the logic that is in that cell; (2) the in-depth reflection and the scope of the “INTELLECTUAL” work that was deployed to design such a cell; (3) “THE SCIENCE” which is in such a cell and the origin of that “SCIENCE”.

The lymphatic glands are small oval or bean-shaped bodies, situated in the course of lymphatic and lacteal vessels so that the lymph and chyle pass through them on their way to the blood. They range in size from 0.1 to 2.5 cm long. Each generally will present on one side a slight depression — the hilus — through which the bloodvessels enter and leave the interior. The efferent lymphatic vessel also emerges from the gland at this spot, while the afferent vessels enter the organ at different parts of the periphery. Each lymph gland is surrounded by a fibrous capsule, which extends inside a lymph gland to form trabeculae.

A lymphatic gland consists of (1) a fibrous envelope, or capsule, from which a frame-work of processes (trabeculae) proceeds inward, imperfectly dividing the gland into open spaces freely communicating with each other; (2) a quantity of lymphoid tissue occupying these spaces without completely filling them; (3) a free

Remember also that you are “in the box”, inside the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which you live right now. Since you cannot receive “VISIONS” communication to see the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” is performing, you can still picture it as follows: close your eyes, focus and project yourself (in mind) outside of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and observe what “THE DIVINE FORCE” is achieving; at the microscopic scale and below, SHE is “sewing” this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”: that is, SHE is “working out” a cohesive subset and carved in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”. When CHRIST had explained these things to human creatures, when HE was still living here on Earth, HE had used the terminology of “tilled ground” in His parables.

From that pictured idea, see a vision of the GREATNESS of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, by which HE has revealed Himself through this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is been sculpted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and as an integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”: a GREATNESS beyond words and letters; a GREATNESS that dominates the murmur of syllables and sounds.

Meditate on “THE ‘DIVINE’ REASON”, which is associated to “THE ‘DIVINE’ LOGIC”. Meditate about “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, from the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle”, designed and established such highly specialized filtering unit at microscopic scale. Meditate about “THE DIVINE FORCE” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, manifested and implemented all the variants of such a highly specialized filtering unit on a microscopic scale inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as human creature, wear. Above all, meditate on yourself regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE FORCE” and regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

supply of bloodvessels, which are supported in the trabeculae; and (4) the afferent and efferent vessels communicating through the lymph paths in the substance of the gland. The nerves passing into the hilus will be few in number and will be chiefly distributed to the bloodvessels supplying the gland.

A lymphatic gland will contain lymphocytes, which are primarily made up of B cells and T cells. B cells will be mainly found in the outer cortex where they will be clustered together as follicular B cells in lymphoid follicles, and T cells and dendritic cells will be mainly found in the paracortex. There will be fewer cells in the medulla than the cortex. The medulla will contain plasma cells, as well as macrophages which will be present within the medullary sinuses⁶⁶³.

The capsule will be composed of connective tissue with some plain muscle fibers, and from its internal surface are given off a number of membranous processes or trabeculae, consisting of connective tissue with a small admixture of plain muscle fibers. They will pass inward, radiating toward the center of the gland, for a certain distance — that is to say, for about one-third or one-fourth of the space between the circumference and the center of the gland. The larger trabeculae springing from the capsule will break up into finer bands, and these interlace to form a mesh-work in the central or medullary portion of the gland. In these spaces formed by the interlacing trabeculae will be contained the proper gland substance or lymphoid tissue. The gland pulp will not, however, completely fill the spaces, but it will leave, between its outer margin and the enclosing trabeculae, a channel or space of uniform width throughout. This is termed the lymph path or lymph sinus. Running across it will be a number of finer trabeculae of retiform connective tissue, the fibers of which will be, for the most part, covered by ramifying cells.

On account of the peculiar arrangement of the frame-work of the organ of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the gland pulp in the cortical portion will be disposed in the form of nodules, and in the medullary part in the form of rounded cords. It will consist of ordinary lymphoid tissue, being made up of a delicate network of retiform tissue, which is continuous with that in the lymph paths, but marked off from it by a closer reticulation; the reticular tissue of the gland pulp and the lymph paths will be continuous with that of the trabeculae, and ultimately with that of the capsule of the gland.

⁶⁶³ As we have indicated in one previous annotation, sinus is Latin for “bay”, “pocket”, “curve”, or “bosom”. In anatomy, the term is used in various contexts. A sinus is a sac or cavity in any organ or tissue, or an abnormal cavity or passage caused by the destruction of tissue. In common usage, “sinus” will refer to the paranasal sinuses, which are air cavities in the cranial bones, especially those near the nose and connecting to it.

In its meshes, in the nodules and cords of lymphoid tissue, are closely packed lymph corpuscles. The gland pulp is traversed by a dense plexus of capillary bloodvessels. The nodules or follicles in the cortical portion of the gland frequently will show, in their centers, areas where karyokinetic figures indicate a division of the lymph corpuscles. These areas are termed germ centers. The cells composing them have more abundant protoplasm than the peripheral cells.

The afferent vessels, as stated above, will enter at all parts of the periphery of the gland, and after branching and forming a dense plexus in the substance of the capsule, open into the lymph sinuses of the cortical part. In doing this they will lose all their coats except their endothelial lining, which is continuous with a layer of similar cells lining the lymph paths. In like manner the efferent vessel will commence from the lymph sinuses of the medullary portion. The stream of lymph carried to the gland by the afferent vessels thus will pass through the plexus in the capsule to the lymph paths of the cortical portion, where it will be exposed to the action of the gland pulp; flowing through these it will enter the paths or sinuses of the medullary portion, and finally it will emerge from the hilus by means of the efferent vessel. The stream of lymph in its passage through the lymph sinuses will be much retarded by the presence of the reticulum, hence morphological elements, either normal or morbid, will be easily arrested and deposited in the sinuses. Many lymph corpuscles will pass with the efferent lymph stream to join the general blood stream. The arteries of the gland will enter at the hilus, and either go at once to the gland pulp, to break up into a capillary plexus, or else run along the trabeculae, partly to supply them and partly running across the lymph paths, to assist in forming the capillary plexus of the gland pulp. This plexus will traverse the lymphoid tissue, but will not enter into the lymph sinuses. From it the veins will commence and will emerge from the organ at the same place as that at which the arteries enter.

Thousands of lymphatic glands will be found throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” along the lymphatic routes, and they will be especially prevalent in areas around the armpits (axillary nodes), groin (inguinal nodes), neck (cervical nodes), and knees (popliteal nodes). The lymphatic glands will contain lymphocytes, which will enter from the bloodstream via specialized vessels called the high endothelial venules. T cells will congregate in the inner cortex (paracortex), and B cells will be organized in germinal centres in the outer cortex. Lymph, along with antigens, will drain into the node through afferent lymphatic vessels and will percolate through the lymph gland, where it will come in contact with and will activate lymphocytes. Activated lymphocytes, will carry in the lymph, exit the node through the efferent vessels and eventually they will enter the bloodstream, which will distribute them throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

SPLEEN

The spleen will be found in the abdominal cavity of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, behind the stomach. Although structurally similar to a lymph gland, the spleen filters blood rather than lymph. One of its main functions will be to bring blood into contact with lymphocytes. The functional tissue of the spleen is made up of two types of cells: the red pulp, which contains cells called macrophages that remove bacteria, old blood cells, and debris from the circulation; and surrounding regions of white pulp, which contain great numbers of lymphocytes. The splenic artery enters the red pulp through a web of small blood vessels, and blood-borne microorganisms will be trapped in this loose collection of cells until they are gradually washed out through the splenic vein. The white pulp will contain both B and T lymphocytes. T cells will congregate around the tiny arterioles that will enter the spleen, while B cells will be located in regions called germinal centres, where the lymphocytes will be exposed to antigens and induced to differentiate into antibody-secreting plasma cells.

THE MUCOSA-ASSOCIATED LYMPHOID TISSUES

Another group of important lymphoid structures which intervene for the circulation of lymph through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and in which further differentiation of lymphocytes will occur, is the mucosa-associated lymphoid tissues. These tissues will be associated with mucosal surfaces of almost any organ of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but especially those of the digestive, genitourinary, and respiratory tracts, which constantly will be exposed to a wide variety of potentially harmful microorganisms and therefore require their own system of antigen capture and presentation to lymphocytes. For example, Peyer’s patches, which are mucosa-associated lymphoid tissues of the small intestine, will sample passing antigens and will expose them to underlying B and T cells. Other, less-organized regions of the gut also will play a role as secondary lymphoid tissue.

Unlike blood, which flows throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in a continue loop, lymph flows in only one direction — upward toward the neck of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Lymphatic vessels will connect to two subclavian veins, which are located on either sides of the neck near the collarbones, and the fluid re-enters the circulatory system.

Such tasks performed by these multitude of organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, are to some extent the same tasks, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” — THE INVISIBLE SHEPHERD OF PURITY AND HOLINESS — had assigned to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” as rational activities, which were carried out in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, before the announcement of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. Those were the rational activities in which they have all failed to discern the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in those rational activities that SHE had assigned to each of them.

THE RESPIRATORY SYSTEM

THE RESPIRATORY SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

Lungs and Diaphragm

Human lungs are sponge-like organs found in the thoracic (chest) cavity. The right lung has 3 lobes and is larger than the bilobed left lung, as the heart occupies more space on the left side.

The diaphragm is a domed, sheet-like muscle that separates the thoracic and abdominal cavities.

Breathing

During inhalation, the diaphragm contracts, and air is pulled through the conducting airways into the lungs. During exhalation, the diaphragm relaxes, and air is pushed from the lungs.

Bronchi, Bronchioles, and Alveoli

Air enters the lungs from the trachea through the right and left bronchus. These branching airways lead to bronchioles and end in microscopic air sacs called alveoli. The alveoli are the sites of gas exchange between the cardiovascular and respiratory systems.

THE RESPIRATORY SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The respiratory system is the set of organs whose role is to facilitate the gas exchange by supplying oxygen to the blood and expelling gaseous waste, which will consist mainly of carbon dioxide, from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The movement of air in and out of the lungs and the exchange of gases are designated as the “respiration”. It includes two processes: external and internal respiration. External respiration refers to all processes involved in the absorption of oxygen and the removal of carbon dioxide from the air spaces in the lung and pulmonary capillaries. Internal respiration refers to the absorption of oxygen and the removal of carbon dioxide from tissue cells by the blood surrounding the capillaries.

For external respiration, the air must be physically moved from the atmosphere into the lungs. This involves increasing and decreasing the size of the thoracic cavity by movement of the chest wall and action of the respiratory muscles. This process is known as pulmonary ventilation, or breathing. The process of drawing air into the lungs is termed inspiration or inhalation, and the process of moving the air out of the lungs is referred to as expiration or exhalation.

The rate at which air flows is not only influenced by the pressure differences between the atmosphere and the thoracic cavity but also by the surface tension in the alveoli, the compliance of the lungs (the ease with which the lungs expand), and the resistance offered by the airways.

The respiratory system is made up of passages that conduct air from the environment into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and respiratory organs that are involved in gas exchange. The respiratory system is classically divided into the upper and lower respiratory tracts. The upper respiratory tract includes the nose, nasal cavity, paranasal sinus, and the pharynx (throat).

The lower respiratory tract (larynx and below) includes all structures below the pharynx and includes the larynx (voice box), trachea (wind pipe), bronchi, bronchioles, and the alveoli of the lungs. Functionally, the respiratory system has two parts: the conducting part and the respiratory part. The conducting part includes those structures that are only involved in conducting the air from the atmosphere to the lungs. All structures from the nose to the last part of the bronchioles belong to this category. The respiratory part includes the structures where gas exchange takes place and includes the last part of the bronchioles and distal structures.

THE UPPER RESPIRATORY TRACT

THE NOSE AND NASAL CAVITY

The air that reaches the lungs enters the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through the nose. The external part of the nose is made up of bone, hyaline cartilage, muscle, adipose tissue, and skin and is lined internally by mucous membrane. The superior part of the nose is bony; made up of the frontal, nasal, and maxillary bones. The inferior part is cartilaginous and more flexible. The openings on the inferior aspect of the nose are known as the nostrils, or external nares. The nostrils open internally into a wider area known as the nasal cavity. The nasal cavity is divided into the right and the left regions by the nasal septum. The anterior and inferior portion of the nasal septum is made of hyaline cartilage (feel it); the superior part is made up of bone. Inferiorly, the nasal cavity is separated from the oral cavity by the maxillary and palatine bones; this is the hard palate, the hard portion of the roof of the mouth. From the posterior part of the hard palate, a fleshy partition — the soft palate — separates the pharynx into the nasopharynx and oropharynx.

The first portion of the nasal cavity widens into the vestibule, which is the part seen when looking up the nostrils. This region is covered with coarse hairs that extend across the nostrils and help prevent larger particles, such as sand and sawdust, from entering the nasal cavity.

The nasal cavity is divided into smaller chambers by three, irregular, shelflike projections from the lateral wall of the nose known as the superior, middle, and inferior conchae. The air passes through the passages — the superior, middle, and inferior meatus — that are present between the conchae. The meandering, turbulent pathway for air created by the conchae helps churn the air that has entered and enables large particles to stick to the mucus lining, slowing entry and providing sufficient time for the air to be altered to the body temperature and become saturated with water. In addition, the eddy produced carries air to the superior region of the nasal cavity where the smell receptors (olfactory receptors) are located. The posterior part of the nasal cavity opens into the pharynx through the internal nares.

Other than the external and internal nares, the nasal cavity has many other openings. One of them is the nasolacrimal duct (also called the tear duct), which will carry tears from the lacrimal sac of the eye into the nasal cavity. The duct begins in the eye socket between the maxillary and lacrimal bones, from where it passes downwards and backwards. The opening of the nasolacrimal duct into the inferior nasal meatus of the nasal cavity is partially covered by a mucosal fold (valve of Hasner or plica lacrimalis). This is the reason why the nose will become “leaky” when a person cries. The tears that enter the nose keep the cavity moist. The openings of the paranasal sinus are located in the nose.

THE RESPIRATORY EPITHELIUM

The respiratory epithelium is a structure of ciliated columnar epithelium found lining most of the respiratory tract, where it serves to moisten and protect the airways. It is not present in the vocal cords of the larynx, or the oropharynx and laryngopharynx, where instead the epithelium is stratified squamous. The respiratory epithelium is suited to clean the air that enters the nasal cavity and to bring it to the temperature and humidity of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The respiratory epithelium is a highly effective barrier to filtering the air that enters the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Conducting airways are lined with pseudostratified columnar epithelial cells that become cuboidal as the branches extend to the alveoli. Specialized structures called tight junctions will separate the epithelial monolayer into apical (luminal) and basolateral components that form an important barrier to the passive passage of molecules and microbes from the airway lumen or alveolar space.

In addition to this important physical barrier function, epithelial cells, including ciliated cells, goblet cells, serous cells, basal cells, and Clara cells, are integral to the normal function of the mucociliary escalator, the production of a variety of antimicrobial molecules, and the initiation and regulation of inflammatory responses.

The respiratory epithelium has a total surface area about the size of a tennis court. It may be divided functionally and pathologically into three zones. From the trachea through the major bronchi the normal lining is made of squamous cells with interspersed neuroendocrine cells, which appear most commonly at airway bifurcations. Terminal alveoli are lined predominantly with type I and type II pneumocytes. Intermediate bronchi and bronchioles show a transition between squamous and adenomatous lining cells.

Interspersed among the ciliated columnar cells are goblet cells, which will secrete sticky mucus. The cilia of the epithelium will help move the mucus, together with any adhering dust and pathogens, toward the back of the nose. The movement of the cilia and mucus, similar to the movement of a conveyor belt, will also be referred to as the mucous escalator. From the back of the nose, the mucus will enter the pharynx and will be eventually swallowed.

Remember also that you are “in the box”, inside the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which you live right now. Since you cannot receive “VISIONS” communication to see the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” is performing, you can still picture it as follows: close your eyes, focus and project yourself (in mind) outside of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and observe what “THE DIVINE FORCE” is achieving; at the microscopic scale and below, SHE is “sewing” this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”: that is, SHE is “working out” a cohesive subset and carved in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”. When CHRIST had explained these things to human creatures, when HE was still living here on Earth, HE had used the terminology of “tilled ground” in His parables.

From that pictured idea, see a vision of the GREATNESS of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, by which HE has revealed Himself through this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is been sculpted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and as an integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”: a GREATNESS beyond words and letters; a GREATNESS that dominates the murmur of syllables and sounds.

Meditate on “THE ‘DIVINE’ REASON”, which is associated to “THE ‘DIVINE’ LOGIC”. Meditate about “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, from the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle”, designed and established such highly specialized air filtering unit at microscopic scale. Meditate about “THE DIVINE FORCE” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, manifested and implemented all the variants of such a highly specialized air filtering unit on a microscopic scale inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as human creature, wear. Above all, meditate on yourself regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE FORCE” and regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

The connective tissue lining the epithelium (lamina propria) contains many mucous glands, which will secrete mucus into the nasal cavity, and a large network of blood vessels. These vessels will help bring warm blood close to the surface. This mechanism will help warm and humidify the cool, dry air that enters. This process is important because the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be able to lose a lot of heat and moisture via the breathed air.

THE OLFACTORY MUCOSA

The superior part of the nasal cavity has specialized tissue that contains the nerve endings of the first cranial nerve, which is the olfactory nerve. These nerve endings, receptors for the sense of smell, are located along the superior nasal conchae, the superior portion of the nasal septum, and the inferior part of the cribriform plate. The receptors are stimulated by chemicals in the air that dissolve in the mucous secretion. The olfactory nerves penetrate the tiny openings in the cribriform plate and carry the sense of smell to the brain. To get a better sense of a smell, we sniff forcefully to draw air in and reach the portion of the nasal cavity that houses the olfactory epithelium.

PARANASAL AIR SINUSES

The nose opens into the nasal passageway, or cavity. This cavity is a space that runs along the top of the roof of the mouth (the palate, which separates your nose from your mouth) and then turns downward to join the passage from the mouth to the throat.

Paranasal air sinuses are a group of four paired air-filled cavities in the bones that adjoin the nose. They are outgrowths from the nasal cavity and retain their communications with it by means of drainage openings, or ostia. The maxillary sinuses are located under the eyes; two frontal sinuses are situated in the frontal bone immediately above and between the eye sockets, or orbits; the ethmoidal sinuses are between the eyes and the sphenoidal sinuses are behind the eyes. The sinuses are named for the facial bones in which they are located.

The maxillary sinuses, the largest of the paranasal sinuses, are under the eyes, in the maxillary bones open in the back of the semilunar hiatus of the nose. The semilunar hiatus or hiatus semilunaris, itself is a crescent-shaped groove in the lateral wall of the nasal cavity just inferior to the ethmoid bulla. It is the location of the openings for maxillary sinus. It is bounded inferiorly and anteriorly by the sharp concave margin of the uncinate process of the ethmoid bone, superiorly by the ethmoid bulla, and posteriorly by the middle nasal concha. The maxillary sinuses are innervated by the trigeminal nerve, which is a nerve responsible for sensation in the face and motor functions such as biting and chewing; it is the most complex of the cranial nerves.

The frontal sinuses, superior to the eyes, in the frontal bone, which forms the hard part of the forehead, are one of the four pairs of paranasal sinuses that are situated behind the brow ridges. Sinuses are mucosa-lined airspaces within the bones of the face and skull. Each opens into the anterior part of the corresponding middle nasal meatus of the nose through the frontonasal duct which traverses the anterior part of the labyrinth of the ethmoid. These structures then open into the semilunar hiatus in the middle meatus. The frontal sinuses are also innervated by the trigeminal.

The ethmoidal sinuses, which are formed from several discrete air cells within the ethmoid bone between the nose and the eyes, and which arise from the nasociliary nerve, supply the ethmoidal cells; the posterior branch leaves the orbital cavity through the posterior ethmoidal foramen and gives some filaments to the sphenoidal sinus.

There are two ethmoidal nerves on each side of the face: the posterior ethmoidal nerve and the anterior ethmoidal nerve. The ethmoidal sinuses are innervated by the ethmoidal nerves, which branch from the nasociliary nerve of the trigeminal nerve.

The sphenoidal sinuses, in the sphenoid bone, will be one of the four paired paranasal sinuses that are contained within the body of the sphenoid bone. The sphenoid sinuses vary in size and shape, and owing to the lateral displacement of the intervening septum, which may insert on the carotid canal, they are rarely symmetrical. They cannot be palpated during an extraoral examination. The sphenoidal sinuses are innervated by the trigeminal nerve.

These paranasal air sinuses are lined with respiratory epithelium and they will have various functions, including lightening the weight of the head, humidifying and heating inhaled air, increasing the resonance of speech, and serving as a crumple zone to protect vital structures in the event of facial trauma.

THE PHARYNX

The pharynx, or throat, is the passageway leading from the mouth and nose to the esophagus and larynx. The pharynx permits the passage of swallowed solids and liquids into the esophagus, or gullet, and conducts air to and from the trachea, or windpipe, during respiration. The pharynx also connects on either side with the cavity of the middle ear by way of the Eustachian tube and provides for equalization of air pressure on the eardrum membrane, which separates the cavity of the middle ear from the external ear canal. The pharynx has roughly the form of a flattened funnel. It is attached to the surrounding structures but is loose enough to permit gliding of the pharyngeal wall against them in the movements of swallowing. The principal muscles of the pharynx, involved in the mechanics of swallowing, are the three pharyngeal constrictors, which overlap each other slightly and form the primary musculature of the side and rear pharyngeal walls.

There are three main divisions of the pharynx: the oral pharynx, the nasal pharynx, and the laryngeal pharynx. The latter two are airways, whereas the oral pharynx is shared by both the respiratory and digestive tracts. On either side of the opening between the mouth cavity and the oral pharynx is a palatine tonsil, so called because of its proximity to the palate. Each palatine tonsil is located between two vertical folds of mucous membrane called the glossopalatine arches. The nasal pharynx, above, is separated from the oral pharynx by the soft palate. Another pair of tonsils is located on the roof of the nasal pharynx. The pharyngeal tonsils, also known as the adenoids, are part of the body's immune system. When the pharyngeal tonsils become grossly swollen (which occurs often during childhood) they occlude the airway. The laryngeal pharynx and the lower part of the oral pharynx are hidden by the root of the tongue.

THE ESOPHAGUS

The esophagus, which passes food from the pharynx to the stomach, is about 25 cm in length; the width varies from 1.5 to 2 cm. The esophagus lies behind the trachea and heart and in front of the spinal column; it passes through the diaphragm before entering the stomach.

The esophagus contains four layers: the mucosa, submucosa, muscularis, and tunica adventitia. The mucosa is made up of stratified squamous epithelium containing numerous mucous glands. The submucosa is a thick, loose fibrous layer connecting the mucosa to the muscularis. Together the mucosa and submucosa form long longitudinal folds, so that a cross section of the esophagus opening would be star-shaped (NOTHING WAS DONE AT RANDOM!⁶⁶⁵). The muscularis is composed of an inner layer, in which the fibres are circular, and an outer layer of longitudinal fibres. Both muscle groups are wound around and along the alimentary tract, but the inner one has a very tight spiral, so that the windings are virtually circular, whereas the outer one has a very slowly unwinding spiral that is virtually longitudinal. The outer layer of the esophagus, the tunica adventitia, is composed of loose fibrous tissue that connects the esophagus with neighbouring structures. Except during the act of swallowing, the esophagus is normally empty, and its lumen, or channel, is essentially closed by the longitudinal folds of the mucosal and submucosal layers.

The upper third of the esophagus is composed of striated (voluntary) muscle. The middle third is a mixture of striated and smooth (involuntary) muscle, and the

Thus URIEL showed me twelve gates which opens for the chariot of the sun in heaven, from which flow the infinities of rays.

...

I saw twelve gates in heaven at the ends of the Earth, through which the Sun and the Moon and “STARS” and all the heaven works proceed at their rising and setting.

lower third consists only of smooth muscle. The esophagus has two sphincters, circular muscles that act like drawstrings in closing channels. Both sphincters normally remain closed except during the act of swallowing. The upper esophageal sphincter is located at the level of the cricoid cartilage (a single ringlike cartilage forming the lower part of the larynx wall). This sphincter is called the cricopharyngeus muscle. The lower esophageal sphincter encircles the 3 to 4 cm of the esophagus that pass through an opening in the diaphragm called the diaphragmatic hiatus. The lower esophageal sphincter is maintained in tension at all times, except in response to a descending contraction wave, at which point it relaxes momentarily to allow the release of gas (belching) or vomiting. The lower esophageal sphincter has an important role, therefore, in protecting the esophagus from the reflux of gastric contents with changes in body position or with alterations of intragastric pressure.

Transport through the esophagus is accomplished by the primary esophageal peristaltic contractions, which, as noted above, originate in the pharynx. These contractions are produced by an advancing peristaltic wave that creates a pressure gradient and sweeps the bolus ahead of it. Transport of material through the esophagus takes approximately 10 seconds. When the bolus arrives at the junction with the stomach, the lower esophageal sphincter relaxes and the bolus enters the stomach. If the bolus is too large, or if the peristaltic contraction is too weak, the bolus may become arrested in the middle or lower esophagus. When this occurs, secondary peristaltic contractions originate around the bolus in response to the local distension of the esophageal wall and propel the bolus into the stomach.

THE LOWER RESPIRATORY TRACT

THE LARYNX

The Larynx, also called voice box, is a hollow, tubular structure connected to the top of the windpipe (trachea). It will serve a dual function: (1) as an air canal to the lungs and a controller of its access, to prevent the passage of food and other foreign particles into the lower respiratory tracts; and (2) as the organ of phonation. Sound will be manifested by forcing air through a sagittal slit formed by the vocal cords, the glottis. This will cause not only the vocal cords but also the column of air above them to vibrate.

The larynx is composed of an external skeleton of cartilage plates that prevents collapse of the structure. The plates are fastened together by membranes and muscle fibres. The front set of plates, called thyroid cartilage, has a central ridge and elevation commonly known as the Adam's apple.

The epiglottis, at the upper part of the larynx, is a flaplike projection into the throat. As food is swallowed, the whole larynx structure rises to the epiglottis so that the passageway to the respiratory tract is blocked. After the food passes into the esophagus (food tube), the larynx relaxes and resumes its natural position.

The centre portion of the larynx is reduced to slitlike openings in two sites. Both sites represent large folds in the mucous membrane lining the larynx. The first pair is known as the false vocal cords, while the second is the true vocal cords (glottis). Muscles attached directly and indirectly to the vocal cords permit the opening and closing of the folds. Speech is normally produced when air expelled from the lungs moves up the trachea and strikes the underside of the vocal cords, setting up vibrations as it passes through them; raw sound emerges from the larynx and passes to the upper cavities, which act as resonating chambers, and then passes through the mouth for articulation by the tongue, teeth, hard and soft palates, and lips. If the larynx is removed, the esophagus can function as the source for sound, but the control of pitch and volume is lacking.

THE VOCAL CORDS

The two true vocal cords (or folds) represent the chief mechanism of the larynx in its function as a valve for opening the airway for breathing and to close it during swallowing. The vocal cords are supported by the thyroarytenoid ligaments, which extend from the vocal process of the arytenoid cartilages forward to the inside angle of the thyroid wings. This anterior insertion occurs on two closely adjacent points, the anterior commissure. The thyroarytenoid ligament is composed of elastic fibres that support the medial or free margin of the vocal cords.

The inner cavity of the larynx is covered by a continuous mucous membrane, which closely follows the outlines of all structures. Immediately above and slightly lateral to the vocal cords, the membrane expands into lateral excavations, one ventricle of Morgagni on each side. This recess opens anteriorly into a still smaller cavity, the laryngeal sacculæ or appendix. As the mucous membrane emerges again from the upper surface of each ventricle, it creates a second fold on each side: the ventricular fold, or false cord. These two ventricular folds are parallel to the vocal cords but slightly lateral to them so that the vocal cords remain uncovered when inspected with a mirror. The false cords close tightly during each sphincter action for swallowing; when this primitive mechanism is used for phonation, it causes the severe hoarseness of false-cord voice (ventricular dysphonia).

The mucous membrane ascends on each side from the margins of the ventricular folds of the upper border of the laryngeal vestibule, forming the aryepiglottic folds. These folds extend from the apex of the arytenoids to the lateral margin of the epiglottis. Laterally from this ring enclosing the laryngeal vestibule, the mucous membrane descends downward to cover the upper-outer aspects of the larynx where the mucous membrane blends with the mucous lining of the piriform sinus of each side. These pear-shaped recesses mark the beginning of the entrance of the pharyngeal foodway into the esophagus.

The vocal cords also mark the division of the larynx into an upper and lower compartment. These divisions reflect the development of the larynx from several embryonal components called branchial arches. The supraglottic portion differs from the one beneath the vocal cords in that the upper portion is innervated sensorially by the superior laryngeal nerve and the lower (infraglottic) portion by the recurrent (or inferior) laryngeal nerve. The lymphatic vessels from the upper portion drain in an upward lateral direction, while the lower lymphatics drain in a lateral downward direction.

The space between the vocal cords is called rima glottidis, glottal chink, or simply glottis (Greek for tongue). When the vocal cords are separated (abducted) for respiration, the glottis assumes a triangular shape with the apex at the anterior commissure. During phonation, the vocal cords will be brought together (adducted or approximated), so that they will be more or less parallel to each other. The glottis will be the origin of the manifested sound, although not in the form of a “fluttering tongue”.

THE TRACHEA

The trachea, colloquially called the windpipe, is a cartilaginous tube that connects the larynx to the bronchi of the lungs, allowing the passage of air. The trachea extends from the T5 vertebra, the larynx, and branches into the two primary bronchi: the right and left primary bronchi. At the top of the trachea, the cricoid cartilage will attach it to the larynx. This will be the only complete tracheal ring; the others will be incomplete rings of reinforcing cartilage. The posterior part of the trachea is closed off by a smooth muscle, the trachealis muscle. The cartilage will prevent the trachea from collapsing every time there is a pressure change produced between the inside of the trachea and the atmosphere (in the neck region) as the movements of respiration will be manifested through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The softer, posterior aspect of the trachea will allow for expansion of the esophagus as food will pass. The trachealis muscle joins the ends of the rings and these are joined vertically by bands of fibrous connective tissue: the annular ligaments of trachea. The epiglottis closes the opening to the larynx during swallowing.

In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” the trachea is about 15 centimetres long and 2 to 3 centimetres in diameter. The trachea will serve as passage for air, it will moisten and warm it while it will pass into the lungs, and protect the respiratory surface from an accumulation of foreign particles. The trachea is lined with a moist mucous-membrane layer composed of cells containing small hairlike projections called cilia.

THE BRONCHI AND BRONCHIOLES

The trachea branches into the right and left primary bronchi at the level of the second costal cartilage at the sternal angle (superior border of the fifth thoracic vertebra)⁶⁶⁶ in the mediastinum. Both bronchi have cartilage similar to the ⁶⁶⁶ Those numbering are not random at all and they are part of the learning that you are called to discern. They are part of the manifested metaphor of the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, from which arises “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and which “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

trachea, with the right bronchus wider and more in line with the trachea. The bronchi enter the lungs at the hilus, the medial region of the lung, through which blood vessels, nerves, lymphatics, and bronchi enter.

The primary bronchi divide repeatedly to form smaller bronchi and bronchioles. The bronchi located outside the lungs are known as extrapulmonary bronchi and the remainder, intrapulmonary bronchi. The primary bronchi divide into three on the right and two on the left known as lobar, or secondary, bronchi.

Recall what we have indicated in the chapter concerning the link of attachment to “THE DIVINE”? The complex geometric figure, which will be designated by a word that is pronounced: “TREE” and which will be deployed with the passage of time and the manifestations of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which will be expressed in the attribute “NON DIVINE”? How is that link of attachment to “THE DIVINE” called again? Yes, “THE TREE OF LIFE”, it is designated. And who is “THE TREE OF LIFE” inside this attribute “NON DIVINE”? Yes, “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and your lungs represent a concrete and living “image”, a manifestation of a metaphor, of “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

Also keep in mind that through in this process of “sewing” this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence, as integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was effectively writing down the details of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, has consolidated in HIMSELF.

Each bronchus moves air in and out of the respective lobes of the lungs. The lobar bronchi become smaller and branch again to form the tertiary, or segmental, bronchi. The tertiary bronchi branch further to form tiny, terminal bronchioles, which are about 0.3 to 0.5 mm wide.

The lung tissue supplied by each tertiary bronchus is called a bronchopulmonary segment. There are ten bronchopulmonary segments in each lung, each made of many lobules. Each lobule is wrapped in elastic connective tissue and has an arteriole, venule, lymphatic vessel, and a branch from the terminal bronchiole.

All structures from the nasal cavity to the terminal bronchiole serve only as conducting passages for the air that enters. Exchange of gases between the air and the blood only takes place in the region of the respiratory bronchioles and beyond.

Bronchi walls will lose cartilage as they branch and become smaller. Instead, the walls will have more smooth muscle. Contraction and relaxation of these smooth muscles will alter the caliber of the bronchi and bronchioles regulating the volume of air entering different regions of the lungs. The smooth muscles of the bronchi and bronchioles are innervated by the autonomic system. The sympathetic nerves will relax the smooth muscles and increase the caliber of the passages, making it easier for air to enter the lungs; the parasympathetic nerves will have the opposite action. In addition to nerves, chemicals such as leukotrienes and substance P, secreted locally by white blood cells and other cells, will have an effect on bronchial smooth muscles.

THE ALVEOLI

The respiratory bronchioles are connected to larger spaces, called alveolar ducts, into which open smaller chambers known as the alveoli. The alveoli are lined by a single layer of squamous cells. The alveoli walls contain elastic fibers that will help reduce the volume of the alveoli when air will be breathed out. The alveoli give the lungs a spongy appearance. The alveoli increase the surface area for exchange of gases; each lung will contain about 150 million alveoli. The total surface area made available for gas exchange by the alveoli is approximately 150 m². The alveoli are surrounded by an extensive network of capillaries. Thus, the air that will enter the alveoli will be separated from the blood by only the thin, single layer of endothelium of the capillaries, a basement membrane, and the thin wall of the alveoli: a distance of about 0.1µm. These layers that separate air from blood will be designated as the respiratory membrane.

THE PULMONARY CIRCULATION

The blood reaching the alveoli is that of the pulmonary circulation. Blood that has circulated through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, with most of the oxygen removed, enters the right ventricle via the superior and inferior vena cava. Contraction of the right ventricle will pump this blood into the pulmonary trunk. The pulmonary trunk divides into right and left branches, which take the blood to the right and left lungs, respectively. As in all organs, the arteries will divide to form arterioles and capillaries. It is this network of capillaries that surround the alveoli and participate in gas exchange. The capillaries will join and rejoin to form venules and veins. Ultimately, four pulmonary veins will transport the oxygenated blood into the left atrium, where they will enter the left ventricle and then will be pumped into the aorta and distributed to the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Bronchial arteries, which are branches from the aorta, will bring oxygenated blood to the bronchi and other lung tissue. Most blood from the bronchial arteries will return to the heart via the pulmonary veins. Some will reach the heart through veins that ultimately reach the heart via the superior vena cava.

The blood vessels in the lungs, unlike those in other tissue, will constrict when there is less oxygen in the surrounding region. This will also help direct blood to better-ventilated parts of the lung.

THE LUNGS

The paired lungs are organs comprised of bronchi, bronchioles, alveoli, connective tissue, blood vessels, lymphatics, and nerves. The right and left lungs are situated on either side of the mediastinum (the part of the thoracic cavity that is located between the lungs). The lung is somewhat conical, with the apex projecting just above the first rib. The base of the lung is related to the superior surface of the diaphragm, which separates the thorax from the abdomen. The lungs take the same contour as the inner wall of the thorax, and the lung surface in contact with the thoracic wall is known as the costal surface. Medially, the mediastinal surface of the lung is in contact with the structures of the mediastinum.

The lungs are the primary organs of the respiratory system in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. They are cone-shaped organs located in the chest cavity and protected by the ribs. The apex of each is under the clavicle or collarbone, and the broad base rests on the muscular diaphragm. There are two lungs, a right lung and a left lung, situated within the thoracic cavity of the chest in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Their function in the respiratory system is to extract oxygen from the atmosphere and transfer it into the bloodstream, and to release carbon dioxide from the bloodstream into the atmosphere, in a process of gas exchange.

The lungs are separated into lobes by deep fissures. The right lung has three lobes (the superior, middle, and inferior); the left lung has only two lobes (the superior and inferior). A deep, oblique fissure separates the superior and the inferior lobe. In the right, a horizontal fissure separates the superior and the middle lobes. The right lung appears larger than the left lung; in the left, a lot of space is taken by the heart and great blood vessels. The right lung is shorter, however, because the diaphragm is higher in the right as a result of the presence of the liver inferiorly.

Each lung is enclosed within a pleural sac that contains pleural fluid, which allows the inner and outer walls to slide over each other whilst breathing takes place, without much friction. This sac also divides each lung into sections called lobes. Each lung consists of three lobes. The right lung will appear to be larger than the left lung, for two reasons, which both depend on each other:

- The right lung has three visible lobes, compared to the left lung which has two visible and one invisible.
- The left lung also has three lobes, but only two are visible because the position of the heart — the heart is an expression of the metaphor of the “Generative Divine Particle”, the “Generative Power of ‘THE DIVINE’”, in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” — which is the result of a projection in the space called the thoracic cage, coincides with the position of this third lobe and has thus been superimposed on this position of this third lobe — this third lobe being also an expression of a unique metaphor of the “Formative Divine Particle” as well as the metaphor of the “Formative Divine State” associated with it, in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

The heart takes the “place” of this third lobe; therefore, it is said that the left lung has two visible lobes, and that the heart is left, while in truth, the left lung also has three lobes and the heart is placed in the center of the two lungs, but its ventricles and apex (its tip) are directed to the left.

It is of importance to bear in mind that these organs represent also projections into a two-dimensional “flatness”, and with appropriate linkages between them as projected elements, of aspects of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that is found in a seven-dimensional domain, including manifestations of metaphors of the products that are formed and those which are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

The lobes are further divided into bronchopulmonary segments and pulmonary lobules. The lungs have a unique blood supply, receiving deoxygenated blood from the heart in the pulmonary circulation for the purposes of receiving oxygen and releasing carbon dioxide, and a separate supply of oxygenated blood to the tissue of the lungs, in the bronchial circulation.

In the lungs, the exchange of respiratory gases will take place between the air contained in the pulmonary alveoli and the blood circulating in the capillaries: the blood will be charged in oxygen and will discharge carbon dioxide which will be released into the air alveolar.

At the level of the organs, gas exchanges are reversed and take place between the blood and the intracellular medium: arterial blood oxygen passes capillaries towards the cells while carbon dioxide, waste of the cellular metabolism is rejected in the venous blood.

Air-blood exchanges are carried out in the alveoli by means of a very fine and very extensive membrane (about 80 square meters), the alveolocapillary membrane, through which the gases diffuse: the oxygen moves from the alveoli to blood and carbon dioxide, blood to the alveoli. The blood from the venous system, poor in oxygen and rich in carbon dioxide, comes from the right heart by the pulmonary arteries, which ramify into a very fine network of capillaries coating the alveoli; once enriched with oxygen and freed from carbon dioxide, it goes back through the pulmonary veins to the left heart.

THE PLEURA MEMBRANE

The pleura is a vital part of the respiratory tract whose role it is to cushion the lungs and reduce any friction which may develop between the lungs, rib cage, and chest cavity. The pleura consists of a two-layered membrane that covers each lung. The layers are separated by a small amount of viscous lubricant known as pleural fluid.

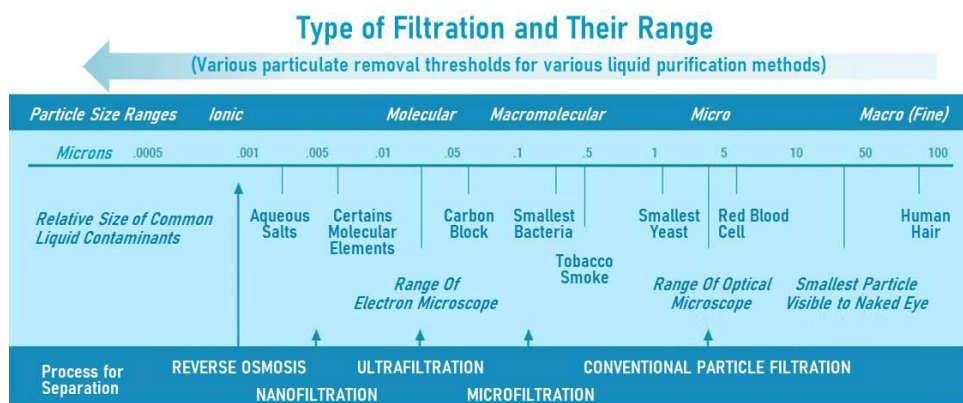

There are two pleurae, one for each lung, and each pleura is a single membrane that folds back on itself to form two layers. The space between the membranes (called the pleural cavity) is filled with a thin, lubricating liquid (called pleural fluid). The pleura is comprised of two distinct layers:

- The visceral pleura is the thin, slippery membrane that covers the surface of the lungs and dips into the areas separating the different lobes of the lungs (called the hilum);
- The parietal pleura is the outer membrane that lines the inner chest wall and diaphragm (the muscle separating the chest and abdominal cavities).

The visceral and parietal pleurae meet at the hilar root of the lung, the hilum, which also serves as the point of entry for the bronchus, blood vessels, and nerves. The normal pleural space will be of approximately 18 mm wide at its least dependent point and widens to about 20 μ m in the dependent regions. Under normal conditions, the pleural space will contain 0.1 to 0.2 mL/kg of fluid with a protein concentration of less than 1.5 g/dL, which will be secreted by the mesothelial cells, will ultrafiltrate⁶⁶⁷ from the pleural capillaries, and will flow and microfiltration, in order of increasing pore size. Each process for separation has the same procedure: solutes pass through a semipermeable membrane, depending on the pore size certain elements are removed whilst others pass through.

⁶⁶⁷ A membrane filtration is a pressure or concentration gradients driven purification process that separates particulate matter, of a feed liquid, from soluble components. Solutes of a feed liquid and whose sizes are greater than the pore size of the membrane and all suspended solids are retained and concentrated. Water, salts and smaller molecular weight constituents pass through, or permeate, the membrane. The pore structure of the membrane acts as a molecular filter that does not become plugged because the retained components of the feed are rejected at the surface and do not permeate the membrane. There are four commonly accepted types of membrane filtration. These are defined on the basis of the size of material they are required to separate from the feed liquid. The four types of membrane filtration are known as reverse osmosis, nanofiltration, ultrafiltration

Microfiltration (MF) uses membranes whose pore diameter is between 0.1 and 10 μm . These membranes stop relatively large particles such as suspended particles, bacteria and fat globules. They can also stop certain ions as well as colloids if the latter attach to larger particles by complexation, precipitation or flocculation. However, the main objective of microfiltration is a solid-liquid separation. Microfiltration is used as a pretreatment before ultrafiltration.

In the case of ultrafiltration (UF), the pores of the membranes have a diameter of between 1 and 100 nm. Such membranes allow small molecules such as salts to pass through and stop molecules with a high molar mass, thus producing a high-quality fluid. The porous structure of the membrane acts as a molecular filter that does not clog because the retained components of the filler are rejected on the surface and do not pass through the membrane. The membrane barrier will eliminate particles as small as 0.01 microns, including bacteria, colloidal particles (clays, silica, TiO_2 ...) and many deleterious particles.

Ultrafiltration therefore makes it possible to retain the larger suspended particles that escape microfiltration. Ultrafiltration produces at the outlet what is called an “ultrafiltrate”, the fraction of the treated liquid that passes through the ultrafiltrating membrane. This “ultrafiltrate” is a clear liquid and free of any pathogens on the one hand, and concentrated in small molecules on the other hand: it retains the properties of the input microfiltrate fluid and which thus becomes purer as a result of ultrafiltration.

Ultrafiltration is a baro-membrane process: the transfer takes place under the effect of pressure. This transmembrane pressure (PTM) is between 1 and 10 bar. These membranes are then said to be of “low pressures”. The separation mechanism in ultrafiltration is a sieving: it results from the difference in size between the components and that of the pores of the membrane, typically between 2 and 50 nm (mesopores).

down, in accordance with well defined mathematical relationships and by gradients which depend on gravity. The pleural membranes and the space, which they define, will play an integral function in respiration.

Several different forces will either promote or oppose fluid filtration from the pleural capillaries. The net movement of fluid from the pleural capillaries to the pleural space will depend on the magnitudes of these counterbalancing forces. The hydrostatic pressure in the capillary will promote movement of fluid out of the vessel and into the pericapillary space, whereas the colloid osmotic pressure (the osmotic pressure exerted by protein drawing in fluid) will hinder movement of liquid out of the capillary. Likewise, hydrostatic and colloid osmotic pressures

Ultrafiltration is used to separate dissolved materials while microfiltration is used to separate suspended particles.

Ultrafiltration is used in the food industry to purify or concentrate solutions of macromolecules (103 to 106 Da):

- Industrial dairy products: ultrafiltration makes it possible to extract the water, and to retain in what is intended to become an industrial cheese elements that, in the traditional process, escape into the whey. The result is a reduction in the draining time of the curd and a better valorization of the milk.
- Industrial processed fruits: clarification of fruit juice. Clarification is an operation consisting in making a cloudy substance that contains suspended particles crystal clear and clear. This substance can be, for example, a fruit juice, a wine, a sauce, or a broth. The process used can be, for example, filtration, centrifugation or bonding. These processes allow the separation, from the liquid phase, of the solid elements (pectin ...) which generally disturb the substance.

In the production of drinking water from wastewater and polluted effluents, ultrafiltration is used at the end of the chain as a clarifier. By using a filtration threshold of the order of 10 nm, all pollens, algae, parasites, bacteria, viruses, germs and large organic molecules are stopped. The ultrafiltrate obtained is clarified and disinfected water without the use of chemicals. However, if the consumption is not immediate, it is still necessary to treat the water with chlorine so that it remains drinkable.

Nanofiltration (NF) allows the separation of compounds of size close to that of the nanometer. Ionized salts with a molar mass of less than about 300 g/mol are not retained by this type of membranes. Multivalent ionized salts (calcium, magnesium, aluminum, sulfates, etc.) and non-ionized organic compounds with a molar mass greater than about 300 g/mol are, on the other hand, strongly retained.

Finally, the last of these filtrations is reverse osmosis (RO). They are membranes that can only be passed through by water. Reverse osmosis is therefore widely used for the desalination of seawater and to concentrate food products.

in the pericapillary space will comprise the opposing forces that act on liquid within the pericapillary region.

The pleura allows for mechanical coupling of the lung and chest wall throughout the respiratory cycle, providing support to the lung tissue while allowing the lung to move extensively in relation to the chest wall.

The pleural cavity, also known as the intrapleural space, contains pleural fluid, which will be secreted by the mesothelial cells. The fluid will allow the layers to glide over each other as the lungs inflate and deflate during respiration.

The structure of the pleura is essential to respiration; for, it will provide the lungs with the lubrication and cushioning needed to inhale and exhale. The intrapleural space contains roughly 4 cubic centimeters (ccs) to 5 ccs of pleural fluid which reduces friction whenever the lungs expand or contract.

The pleura fluid itself has a slightly adhesive quality that will help draw the lungs outward during inhalation rather than slipping round in the chest cavity. In addition, pleural fluid will create surface tension that will help maintain the position of the lungs against the chest wall.

The pleurae also will serve as a division between other organs in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, preventing them from interfering with lung function and vice versa.

We have added all these details, so that you be conscious and truly understand the complexity of the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” was performing, while the disciples of “obscurity”, who had already declared the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” and subsequently have already condemned the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to be erased from existence (to be put to “DEATH”), were watching. For, in the Scriptures that humans have in their possession, that they call “Holy Scriptures” and that they say to be “THE WORD OF GOD”, thus implicitly referring to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, those same disciples of “obscurity” have undermined and dismissed all this work that was performed by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in front of all of them, who were present and watching, and they have let humans record the following in their scriptures.

The 6th Day:

“... And God made the wild animal of the earth after its kind, and the beast after its kind, and everything that creepeth on the ground after its kind; and God saw that it was good.

And God said, Let us make man in our image, after our likeness; and let them have dominion over the fish of the sea, and over the fowl of the heavens, and over the beast, and over all the earth, and over every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth.

And God created man in His own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created He them.

God blessed them and said to them, "Be fruitful and increase in number; fill the earth and subdue it. Rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky and over every living creature that moves on the ground." ..."⁶⁶⁸

THE DIGESTIVE SYSTEM

THE DIGESTIVE SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

THE DIGESTIVE SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The digestive system is the system used in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” for the process of digestion. It is a manifestation of a metaphor of the path through which products are formed and others are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”. Here, the appropriate intake of raw “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” designated as food will be converted through the process of digestion into diluted energy and other basis nutrients, water, and electrolytes required for all the processes and activities that take place in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The digestive system comprises primarily of the digestive tract, or the series of structures and organs through which food and liquids pass during their processing into forms absorbable into the bloodstream. The system also consists of the structures through which wastes pass in the process of elimination and other organs that contribute juices necessary for the digestive process.

The 12 organs of the digestive process include: (1) the mouth, where provision is made for the mechanical division (mastication) of the appropriate intake of raw “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances”, with (2) the teeth, (3) and for its admixture with a fluid secreted by the salivary glands (insalivation); beyond this are the organs of deglutition, (4) the pharynx and (5) the oesophagus, which convey the food into (6) the stomach, in which it is stored for a time and in which also the first stages of the digestive process take place. The stomach contents are extremely acidic, with a pH between 1.5 and 2.5. This acidity will annihilate microorganisms, further break down the masticated and insalivated raw energy tissues, and activate digestive enzymes. Further breakdown will take place in the small intestine where the bile produced by (7) the liver, and enzymes produced by (8) the small intestine and (9) the pancreas, will continue the process of digestion. The smaller molecules resulting from this digestion process will be absorbed into the bloodstream through the epithelial cells lining the walls of the small intestine. The waste material will travel on to (10) the large intestine where water will be absorbed and the drier waste products will be compacted into feces and passed into the end of the large intestine called (11) the rectum and eliminated out of the body as a solid matter called stool. It is stored in the rectum as semi-solid faeces which later will exit from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through (12) the anal canal through the process of defecation.

THE MOUTH

The mouth is orifice through which energy designated as food and air enter the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The mouth opens to the outside at the lips and empties into the throat at the rear; its boundaries are defined by the lips, cheeks, hard and soft palates, and glottis. It is divided into two sections: the vestibule, the area between the cheeks and the teeth, and the oral cavity proper. The latter section is mostly filled by the tongue, a large muscle firmly anchored to the floor of the mouth by the frenulum linguae. In addition to its primary role in the intake and initial digestion of food, the mouth and its structures are essential in the manifestation of sounds.

The primary structures of the mouth are: the teeth, which tear and grind ingested food into small pieces that are suitable for digestion; the tongue, which positions and mixes food and also carries sensory receptors for taste; and the palate, which separates the mouth from the nasal cavity, allowing separate passages for air and for food. All these structures of the mouth, along with the lips, will be also involved in the production of speech sounds by modifying the passage of air through the mouth, which thus will also serve as a secondary respiratory conduit, a site of sound modification for the production of speech, and a chemosensory organ.

The teeth and the periodontium (i.e. the tissues that support the teeth) are innervated by the maxillary and mandibular divisions of the trigeminal nerve. Maxillary (upper) teeth and their associated periodontal ligament are innervated by the superior alveolar nerves, branches of the maxillary division, termed the posterior superior alveolar nerve, anterior superior alveolar nerve, and the variably present middle superior alveolar nerve. These nerves form the superior dental plexus above the maxillary teeth. The mandibular (lower) teeth and their associated periodontal ligament are innervated by the inferior alveolar nerve, a branch of the mandibular division. This nerve runs inside the mandible, within the inferior alveolar canal below the mandibular teeth, giving off branches to all the lower teeth (inferior dental plexus). The oral mucosa of the gingiva (gums) on the facial (labial) aspect of the maxillary incisors, canines and premolar teeth is innervated by the superior labial branches of the infraorbital nerve. The posterior superior alveolar nerve supplies the gingiva on the facial aspect of the maxillary molar teeth. The gingiva on the palatal aspect of the maxillary teeth is innervated by the greater palatine nerve apart from in the incisor region, where it is the nasopalatine nerve (long sphenopalatine nerve). The gingiva of the lingual aspect of the mandibular teeth is innervated by the sublingual nerve, a branch of the lingual nerve. The gingiva on the facial aspect of the mandibular incisors and canines is innervated by the mental nerve, the continuation of the inferior alveolar nerve emerging from the mental foramen. The gingiva of the buccal (cheek) aspect of the mandibular molar teeth is innervated by the buccal nerve (long buccal nerve).

The teeth are the hardest substances in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Besides being essential for chewing, the teeth play an important role in speech. Parts of the teeth include:

- Enamel: The hardest, white outer part of the tooth. Enamel is mostly made of calcium phosphate, a rock-hard mineral.
- Dentin: A layer underlying the enamel. It is a hard tissue that contains microscopic tubes. When the enamel is damaged, heat or cold can enter the tooth through these paths and cause sensitivity or pain.
- Pulp: The softer, living inner structure of teeth. Blood vessels and nerves run through the pulp of the teeth.
- Cementum: A layer of connective tissue that binds the roots of the teeth firmly to the gums and jawbone.
- Periodontal ligament: Tissue that helps to hold the teeth tightly against the jaw.

An adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” mouth will have 32 teeth:

- Incisors (8 in total): The middlemost four teeth on the upper and lower jaws.
- Canines (4 in total): The pointed teeth just outside the incisors.
- Premolars (8 in total): Teeth between the canines and molars.
- Molars (8 in total): Flat teeth in the rear of the mouth, best at grinding food.
- Wisdom teeth or third molars (4 in total).

The crown of each tooth projects into the mouth. The root of each tooth descends below the gum line, into the jaw.

The oral cavity and vestibule are entirely lined by mucous membranes containing numerous small glands that, along with the three pairs of salivary glands, bathe the mouth in fluid, keeping it moist and clear of food and other debris. Specialized membranes form both the gums (gingivae), which surround and support the teeth, and the surface of the tongue, on which the membrane is rougher in texture, containing many small papillae that hold the taste buds. The moist environment of the mouth and the enzymes within its secretions help to soften food, facilitating swallowing and beginning the process of digestion.

THE STOMACH

The stomach is a saclike expansion of the digestive system, situated between the end of the esophagus and the beginning of the small intestine; it is located in the anterior portion of the abdominal cavity, in the epigastric, umbilical, and left hypochondriac regions of the abdomen, and it occupies a cavity bounded by the upper abdominal viscera, and completed in front and on the left side by the anterior abdominal wall and the diaphragm. In front of the stomach are the liver, part of the diaphragm, and the anterior abdominal wall. Behind it are the pancreas, the left kidney, the left adrenal gland, the spleen, and the colon. The stomach is more or less concave on its right side, convex on its left. The concave border is called the lesser curvature; the convex border, the greater curvature. When the stomach is empty, its mucosal lining is thrown into numerous longitudinal folds, known as rugae; these tend to disappear when the stomach is distended.

The stomach will serve as a temporary receptacle for storage and mechanical distribution of food before it is passed into the intestine. It will receive ingested food and liquids from the esophagus and retains them for grinding and mixing with gastric juice so that food particles are smaller and more soluble. The main functions of the stomach will be to commence the digestion of carbohydrates and proteins, to convert the meal into chyme, and to discharge the chyme into the small intestine periodically as the physical and chemical condition of the mixture is rendered suitable for the next phase of digestion.

The uppermost part of the stomach, located above the entrance of the esophagus, is the fundus. It is an expanded area curving up above the cardiac opening (the opening from the stomach into the esophagus). The fundus will adapt to the varying volume of ingested food by relaxing its muscular wall; it will frequently contain a gas bubble, especially after a meal. The largest part of the stomach is known simply as the body; it serves primarily as a reservoir for ingested food and liquids. The antrum, the lowermost part of the stomach, is somewhat funnel-shaped, with its wide end joining the lower part of the body and its narrow end connecting with the pyloric canal, which empties into the duodenum (the upper division of the small intestine). The pyloric portion of the stomach (antrum plus pyloric canal) tends to curve to the right and slightly upward and backward and thus gives the stomach its J-shaped appearance. The pylorus, the narrowest portion of the stomach, is the outlet from the stomach into the duodenum (see figure). It is approximately 2 cm in diameter and is surrounded by thick loops of smooth muscle.

It is thus that, the stomach in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is subdivided into four regions: the fundus; the body or the intermediate region, which is the central and largest portion; the antrum, which is the lowermost, somewhat funnel-shaped portion of the stomach; and the pylorus, which is a narrowing where the stomach joins the small intestine. The stomach presents two openings, two borders or curvatures, and two surfaces.

THE OPENINGS OF THE STOMACH

The opening by which the esophagus communicates with the stomach is designated as the cardiac orifice, and is situated on the left of the middle line at the level of the tenth thoracic vertebra. The short abdominal portion of the esophagus (antrum cardiacum) is conical in shape and curved sharply to the left, the base of the cone being continuous with the cardiac orifice of the stomach. The right margin of the esophagus is continuous with the lesser curvature of the stomach, while the left margin joins the greater curvature at an acute angle, termed the incisura cardiaca.

The pyloric orifice communicates with the duodenum, and its position is usually indicated on the surface of the stomach by a circular groove, the duodenopyloric constriction. This orifice lies to the right of the middle line at the level of the upper border of the first lumbar vertebra.

Each of these openings, the cardiac and the pyloric, has a sphincter muscle that keeps the neighbouring region closed, except when food is passing through. In this manner, food is enclosed by the stomach until ready for digestion.

THE CURVATURES OF THE STOMACH

The lesser curvature (curvatura ventriculi minor), extending between the cardiac and pyloric orifices, forms the right or posterior border of the stomach. It descends as a continuation of the right margin of the esophagus in front of the fibers of the right crus of the diaphragm, and then, turning to the right, it crosses the first lumbar vertebra and ends at the pylorus. Nearer its pyloric than its cardiac end is a well-marked notch, the incisura angularis, which varies somewhat in position with the state of distension of the viscus; it serves to separate the stomach into a right and a left portion. The lesser curvature gives attachment to the two layers of the hepatogastric ligament, and between these two layers are the left gastric artery and the right gastric branch of the hepatic artery.

The greater curvature (curvatura ventriculi major) is directed mainly forward, and is four or five times as long as the lesser curvature. Starting from the cardiac orifice at the incisura cardiaca, it forms an arch backward, upward, and to the left; the highest point of the convexity is on a level with the sixth left costal cartilage. From this level it may be followed downward and forward, with a slight convexity to the left as low as the cartilage of the ninth rib; it then turns to the right, to the end of the pylorus. Directly opposite the incisura angularis of the lesser curvature the greater curvature presents a dilatation, which is the left extremity of the pyloric part; this dilatation is limited on the right by a slight groove, the sulcus intermedius, which is about 2.5 cm, from the duodenopyloric constriction. The portion between the sulcus intermedius and the duodenopyloric constriction is termed the pyloric antrum. At its commencement the greater curvature is covered by peritoneum continuous with that covering the front of the organ. The left part of the curvature gives attachment to the gastrolial ligament, while to its anterior portion are attached the two layers of the greater omentum, separated from each other by the gastroepiploic vessels.

THE SURFACES OF THE STOMACH

When the stomach is in the contracted condition, its surfaces are directed upward and downward respectively, but when the viscus is distended they are directed forward, and backward. They may therefore be described as anterosuperior and postero-inferior.

The antero-superior surface — the left half of this surface is in contact with the diaphragm, which separates it from the base of the left lung, the pericardium, and the seventh, eighth, and ninth ribs, and intercostal spaces of the left side. The right half is in relation with the left and quadrate lobes of the liver and with the anterior abdominal wall. When the stomach is empty, the transverse colon may lie on the front part of this surface. The whole surface is covered by peritoneum.

THE WALL STRUCTURE OF THE STOMACH

The wall structure of the stomach consists of four coats: serous, muscular, areolar, and mucous, together with vessels and nerves.

The serous coat (tunica serosa) is derived from the peritoneum, and covers the entire surface of the organ, excepting along the greater and lesser curvatures at the points of attachment of the greater and lesser omenta; here the two layers of peritoneum leave a small triangular space, along which the nutrient vessels and nerves pass. On the posterior surface of the stomach, close to the cardiac orifice, there is also a small area uncovered by peritoneum, where the organ is in contact with the under surface of the diaphragm.

The muscular coat (tunica muscularis) is situated immediately beneath the serous covering, with which it is closely connected. It consists of three sets of smooth muscle fibers: longitudinal, circular and oblique.

The longitudinal fibers (stratum longitudinale) are the most superficial, and are arranged in two sets. The first set consists of fibers continuous with the longitudinal fibers of the esophagus; they radiate in a stellate manner from the cardiac orifice and are practically all lost before the pyloric portion is reached. The second set commences on the body of the stomach and passes to the right, its fibers becoming more thickly distributed as they approach the pylorus. Some of the more superficial fibers of this set pass on to the duodenum, but the deeper fibers dip inward and interlace with the circular fibers of the pyloric valve.

The circular fibers (stratum circulare) form a uniform layer over the whole extent of the stomach beneath the longitudinal fibers. At the pylorus they are most abundant, and are aggregated into a circular ring, which projects into the lumen, and forms, with the fold of mucous membrane covering its surface, the pyloric valve. They are continuous with the circular fibers of the esophagus, but are sharply marked off from the circular fibers of the duodenum.

The oblique fibers (fibrae obliquae) internal to the circular layer, are limited chiefly to the cardiac end of the stomach, where they are disposed as a thick uniform layer, covering both surfaces, some passing obliquely from left to right, others from right to left, around the cardiac end.

The areolar or submucous coat (tela submucosa) consists of a loose, areolar tissue, connecting the mucous and muscular layers.

The mucous membrane (tunica mucosa) is thick and its surface is smooth, soft, and velvety. In the fresh state it is of a pinkish tinge at the pyloric end and of a red or reddish-brown color over the rest of its surface. In infancy it is of a brighter hue, the vascular redness being more marked. It is thin at the cardiac extremity, but thicker toward the pylorus. During the contracted state of the organ it is thrown into numerous plaits or rugae, which, for the most part, have a longitudinal direction, and are most marked toward the pyloric end of the stomach, and along the greater curvature. These folds are entirely obliterated when the organ becomes distended.

The structure of the inner surface of the mucous membrane presents a peculiar honeycomb appearance from being covered with small shallow depressions or alveoli, of a polygonal or hexagonal form, which vary from 0.12 to 0.25 mm in diameter.⁶⁶⁹ These are the ducts of the gastric glands, and at the bottom of each ⁶⁶⁹ Why polygons or hexagons, rather than squares or even triangles, you will ask? As you would know already, it is because these forms and especially the use of regular hexagonal forms provide the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter.

In a two dimensional Euclidean space, regular hexagonal forms are geometrical projections of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, one “Generative Divine Particle” and six “Formative Divine Particles”, in the form of a six-sided polygon or 6-gon. It is a closed plane figure with six edges and six vertices (six angular points) around a center point. It is a convex figure with sides of the same length, and internal angles of 120 degrees. It has six rotational symmetries and six reflection symmetries, making up the dihedral group D₆; that is to say, the group of symmetries of the regular hexagon, which includes rotations and reflections.

Read more in the extended annotation on the use of hexagonal forms, at the end of this chapter.

may be seen one or more minute orifices, the openings of the gland tubes. The surface of the mucous membrane is covered by a single layer of columnar epithelium with occasional goblet cells. This epithelium commences very abruptly at the cardiac orifice, where there is a sudden transition from the stratified epithelium of the esophagus. The epithelial lining of the gland ducts is of the same character and is continuous with the general epithelial lining of the stomach.

The stomach is capable of dilating to accommodate more than one litre (about one quart) of food or liquids without increasing pressure on the stomach. This receptive relaxation of the upper part of the stomach to accommodate a meal is partly due to a neural reflex that is triggered when hydrochloric acid comes into contact with the mucosa of the antrum, possibly through the release of the hormone known as vasoactive intestinal peptide. The distension of the body of the stomach by food activates a neural reflex that initiates the muscle activity of the antrum.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE STOMACH

The arteries supplying the stomach are: the left gastric, the right gastric and right gastroepiploic branches of the hepatic, and the left gastroepiploic and short gastric branches of the lienal. They supply the muscular coat, ramify in the submucous coat, and are finally distributed to the mucous membrane. The arrangement of the vessels in the mucous membrane is somewhat peculiar. The arteries break up at the base of the gastric tubules into a plexus of fine capillaries which run upward between the tubules, anastomosing with each other, and ending in a plexus of larger capillaries, which surround the mouths of the tubes, and also form hexagonal meshes around the ducts. From these the veins arise, and pursue a straight course downward, between the tubules, to the submucous tissue; they end either in the lienal and superior mesenteric veins, or directly in the portal vein. The lymphatics are numerous: they consist of a superficial and a deep set, and pass to the lymph glands found along the two curvatures of the organ. The nerves are the terminal branches of the right and left vagi, the former being distributed upon the back, and the latter upon the front part of the organ. A great number of branches from the celiac plexus of the sympathetic are also distributed to it. Nerve plexuses are found in the submucous coat and between the layers of the muscular coat as in the intestine. From these plexuses fibrils are distributed to the muscular tissue and the mucous membrane.

THE GASTRIC GLANDS OF THE STOMACH

The gastric glands are of three kinds: (a) pyloric, (b) cardiac, and (c) fundus or oxyntic glands. They are tubular in character, and are formed of a delicate basement membrane, consisting of flattened transparent endothelial cells lined by epithelium. The pyloric glands will be found in the pyloric portion of the stomach. They will consist of two or three short closed tubes opening into a common duct or mouth. These tubes are wavy, and are about one-half the length of the duct.

The duct is lined by columnar cells, continuous with the epithelium lining the surface of the mucous membrane of the stomach, the tubes by shorter and more cubical cell which are finely granular. The cardiac glands, few in number, will occur close to the cardiac orifice. They are of two kinds: (1) simple tubular glands resembling those of the pyloric end of the stomach, but with short ducts; (2) compound racemose glands resembling the duodenal glands.

The fundus glands will be found in the body and fundus of the stomach; they are simple tubes, two or more of which open into a single duct. The duct, however, in these glands is shorter than in the pyloric variety, sometimes not amounting to more than one-sixth of the whole length of the gland; it is lined throughout by columnar epithelium. The gland tubes are straight and parallel to each other. At the point where they open into the duct, which is termed the neck, the epithelium alters, and consists of short columnar or polyhedral, granular cells, which almost fill the tube, so that the lumen becomes suddenly constricted and is continued down as a very fine channel. They will be designated as the chief or central cells of the glands. Between these cells and the basement membrane, larger oval cells, which stain deeply with eosin, are found; these cells are studded throughout the tube at intervals, giving it a beaded or varicose appearance. These will be designated as the parietal or oxyntic cells, and they are connected with the lumen by fine channels which run into their substance. Between the glands the mucous membrane consists of a connective-tissue frame-work, with lymphoid tissue.

THE GASTRIC SECRETION IN THE STOMACH

The gastric secretion in the stomach will be performed through the gastric mucosa, which will secrete 1.2 to 1.5 litres of gastric juice per day. Gastric juice will render food particles soluble, initiate digestion (particularly of proteins), and convert the gastric contents to a semiliquid mass called chyme, thus preparing it for further digestion in the small intestine. The gastric juice is a variable mixture of water, hydrochloric acid, electrolytes (sodium, potassium, calcium, phosphate, sulfate, and bicarbonate), and organic substances (mucus, pepsins, and protein). This juice is highly acidic because of its hydrochloric acid content, and it is rich in enzymes. As noted above, the stomach walls are protected from digestive juices by the membrane on the surface of the epithelial cells bordering the lumen of the stomach; this membrane is rich in lipoproteins, which are resistant to attack by acid.

The process of gastric secretion can be divided into three phases (cephalic, gastric, and intestinal) that depend upon the primary mechanisms that cause the gastric mucosa to secrete gastric juice. The phases of gastric secretion overlap, and there is an interrelation and some interdependence between the neural and humoral pathways.

The cephalic phase of gastric secretion will occur in response to stimuli received by the senses; that is to say, taste, smell, sight, and sound. This phase of gastric secretion is entirely reflex in origin and is mediated by the vagus (10th cranial) nerve. The gastric juice will be secreted in response to vagal stimulation, either directly by electrical impulses or indirectly by stimuli received through the senses.

The gastric phase will be mediated by the vagus nerve and by the release of gastrin. The acidity of the gastric contents after a meal will be buffered by proteins so that overall it will remain around pH3 (acidic) for approximately 90 minutes. Acid will continue to be secreted during the gastric phase in response to distension and to the peptides and amino acids that are liberated from protein as digestion proceeds. The chemical action of free amino acids and peptides will excite the liberation of gastrin from the antrum into the circulation. Thus, there will be mechanical, chemical, and hormonal factors contributing to the gastric secretory response to eating. This phase will continue until the food has left the stomach.

THE SMALL INTESTINE

The small intestine is the principal organ of the digestive tract. The primary functions of the small intestine are mixing and transporting of intraluminal contents, production of enzymes and other constituents essential for digestion, and absorption of nutrients. Most of the processes that solubilize carbohydrates, proteins, and fats and reduce them to relatively simple organic compounds occur in the small intestine.

The small intestine is a convoluted tube, extending from the pylorus to the colic valve, where it ends in the large intestine. It is about 7 meters in length and 3 to 4 cm in diameter as it gradually diminishes in size from its commencement to its termination. It is contained in the central and lower part of the abdominal cavity, and is surrounded above and at the sides by the large intestine; a portion of it extends below the superior aperture of the pelvis and lies in front of the rectum. It is in relation, in front, with the greater omentum and abdominal parietes, and is connected to the vertebral column by a fold of peritoneum, the mesentery. The small intestine is divisible into three portions: the duodenum, the jejunum, and the ileum.

ס פ

THE DUODENUM — the duodenum has received its name from being about equal in length to the breadth of twelve fingers (25 cm). It is the shortest, the widest, and the most fixed part of the small intestine, and has no mesentery, being only partially covered by peritoneum. Its course presents a remarkable curve, somewhat of the shape of an imperfect circle, so that its termination is not far removed from its starting-point. In the adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the course of the duodenum is as follows: commencing at the pylorus it passes backward, upward, and to the right, beneath the quadrate lobe of the liver to the neck of the gallbladder, varying slightly in direction according to the degree of distension of the stomach: it then takes a sharp curve and descends along the right margin of the head of the pancreas, for a variable distance, generally to the level of the upper border of the body of the fourth lumbar vertebra. It now takes a second bend, and passes from right to left across the vertebral column, having a slight inclination upward; and on the left side of the vertebral column it ascends for about 2.5 cm, and then ends opposite the second lumbar vertebra in the jejunum. As it unites with the jejunum it turns abruptly forward, forming the duodenojejunal flexure. That is thus a description of a manifestation of a metaphor of the path through which products are formed and others are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”. Thus, the duodenum may be divided into four portions: superior, descending, horizontal, and ascending.

The superior portion (pars superior; first portion) is about 5 cm long. Beginning at the pylorus, it ends at the neck of the gallbladder. It is the most movable of the four portions. It is almost completely covered by peritoneum, but a small part of its posterior surface near the neck of the gallbladder and the inferior vena cava is uncovered; the upper border of its first half has the hepatoduodenal ligament attached to it, while to the lower border of the same segment the greater omentum is connected. It is in such close relation with the gallbladder. It is in relation above and in front with the quadrate lobe of the liver and the gallbladder; behind with the gastroduodenal artery, the common bile duct, and the portal vein; and below and behind with the head and neck of the pancreas.

The descending portion (pars descendens; second portion) is from 7 to 10 cm long, and extends from the neck of the gallbladder, on a level with the first lumbar vertebra, along the right side of the vertebral column as low as the upper border of the body of the fourth lumbar vertebra. It is crossed in its middle third by the transverse colon, the posterior surface of which is uncovered by peritoneum and is connected to the duodenum by a small quantity of connective tissue. The supra- and infracolic portions are covered in front by peritoneum, the infracolic part by the right leaf of the mesentery.

Posteriorly, the descending portion of the duodenum is not covered by peritoneum. The descending portion is in relation, in front, from above downward, with the duodenal impression on the right lobe of the liver, the transverse colon, and the small intestine; behind, it has a variable relation to the front of the right kidney in the neighborhood of the hilum, and is connected to it by loose areolar tissue; the renal vessels, the inferior vena cava, and the Psoas below, are also behind it. At its medial side is the head of the pancreas, and the common bile duct; to its lateral side is the right colic flexure. The common bile duct and the pancreatic duct together perforate the medial side of this portion of the intestine obliquely, some 7 to 10 cm. below the pylorus; the accessory pancreatic duct sometimes pierces it about 2 cm above and slightly in front of these.

The horizontal portion (pars horizontalis; third or preaortic or transverse portion) is from 5 to 7.5 cm long. It begins at the right side of the upper border of the fourth lumbar vertebra and passes from right to left, with a slight inclination upward, in front of the great vessels and crura of the diaphragm, and ends in the ascending portion in front of the abdominal aorta. It is crossed by the superior mesenteric vessels and the mesentery. Its front surface is covered by peritoneum, except near the middle line, where it is crossed by the superior mesenteric vessels. Its posterior surface is uncovered by peritoneum, except toward its left extremity, where the posterior layer of the mesentery may sometimes be found covering it to a variable extent. This surface rests upon the right crus of the diaphragm, the inferior vena cava, and the aorta. The upper surface is in relation with the head of the pancreas.

The ascending portion (pars ascendens; fourth portion) of the duodenum is about 2.5 cm long. It ascends on the left side of the aorta, as far as the level of the upper border of the second lumbar vertebra, where it turns abruptly forward to become the jejunum, forming the duodenojejunal flexure. It lies in front of the left Psoas major and left renal vessels, and is covered in front, and partly at the sides, by peritoneum continuous with the left portion of the mesentery.

The superior part of the duodenum, as stated above, is somewhat movable, but the rest is practically fixed, and is bound down to neighboring viscera and the posterior abdominal wall by the peritoneum. In addition to this, the ascending part of the duodenum and the duodenojejunal flexure are fixed by a structure to which the name of Musculus suspensorius duodeni has been given. This structure commences in the connective tissue around the celiac artery and left crus of the diaphragm, and passes downward to be inserted into the superior border of the duodenojejunal curve and a part of the ascending duodenum, and from this it is continued into the mesentery. It possesses plain muscular fibers mixed with the fibrous tissue of which it is principally made up. It is of little importance as a muscle, but acts as a suspensory ligament.

THE JEJUNUM — the jejunum is the middle segment of the small intestine found between the duodenum and the ileum. Most of the nutrients present in food will be absorbed by the jejunum before being passed on to the ileum for further absorption. The jejunum is made of four distinct tissue layers that work together to give the organ its function.

The innermost layer, the mucosa, surrounds the hollow lumen and provides contact between the jejunum and chyme. It is made of folds of epithelial tissue specialized for absorption of nutrients. Many goblet cells in the mucosa produce mucus to protect the intestinal walls and to lubricate chyme passing through the jejunum.

Deep to the mucosa is the submucosa layer that supports the other tissue layers. Many blood vessels and nerves pass through the submucosa to provide oxygen, nutrients, and nerve signals to tissues of the jejunum.

The muscularis is the next layer of the jejunum that surrounds the submucosa and contains smooth muscle tissue. Contractions of the smooth muscle in the muscularis allow food to be mixed and propelled through the jejunum. Finally, the serosa forms the outermost layer of the jejunum and functions as the skin of the intestine. Serosa is made of simple squamous epithelial tissue and secretes a thin slippery liquid known as serous fluid. Serous fluid lubricates the exterior of the jejunum and protects it from friction between organs of the abdominal cavity.

Partially digested food, known as chyme, will enter the jejunum from the duodenum. As chyme will enter the jejunum, it will be mixed by segmentations, or localized smooth muscle contractions in the walls of the jejunum. These segmentations will facilitate the circulation of chyme and increase its contact with the walls of the jejunum. The walls of the jejunum are folded many times over to increase its surface area and this will allow it to absorb nutrients. Each epithelial cell on the surface of the jejunum contains microscopic folds of cell membrane called microvilli that will create tiny pockets and increase the contact between the cells and chyme. The entire wall of the jejunum is also folded into microscopic finger-like ridges known as villi that form larger pockets and further increase the surface area of the jejunum. At the macroscopic level, the inner surface of the jejunum contains many wrinkles of tissue known as circular folds, which create even more pockets for chyme and further increase the surface area available for absorption. Thus, the entire structure of the jejunum is optimized for the absorption of nutrients from chyme. By the time chyme has passed through the jejunum and enters the ileum, around 90% of all available nutrients have been absorbed into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

THE ILEUM — the ileum is the third and final part of the small intestine. It follows the jejunum and ends at the ileocecal junction, where the terminal ileum communicates with the cecum of the large intestine through the ileocecal valve.

The main function of the ileum will be to absorb vitamin B12, bile salts, and products of digestion, which were not absorbed by the jejunum. The four layers that make up the wall of the ileum are consistent with those of the gastrointestinal tract. It is made up of folds, each of which has many tiny finger-like projections known as villi on its surface. In turn, the epithelial cells that line these villi possess even larger numbers of microvilli. Therefore, the ileum has an extremely large surface area both for the adsorption (attachment) of enzyme molecules and for the absorption of products of digestion. The DNES (diffuse neuroendocrine system) cells of the ileum will secrete various hormones (gastrin, secretin, and cholecystokinin) into the blood. Cells in the lining of the ileum will secrete the protease and carbohydrase enzymes responsible for the final stages of protein and carbohydrate digestion into the lumen of the intestine. These enzymes will be present in the cytoplasm of the epithelial cells.

The villi contain large numbers of capillaries that take the amino acids and glucose produced by digestion to the hepatic portal vein and the liver. Lacteals are small lymph vessels, and are present in villi. They will absorb fatty acid and glycerol, the products of fat digestion. Layers of circular and longitudinal smooth muscle will enable the chyme (partly digested food and water) to be pushed along the ileum by waves of muscle contractions designated as peristalsis. The remaining chyme will be passed to the colon.

THE STRUCTURE OF THE WALL OF THE SMALL INTESTINE

The structure of the wall of the small intestine is composed of four coats: serous, muscular, areolar, and mucous.

The serous coat (tunica serosa) is derived from the peritoneum. The superior portion of the duodenum is almost completely surrounded by this membrane near its pyloric end, but is only covered in front at the other extremity; the descending portion is covered by it in front, except where it is carried off by the transverse colon; and the inferior portion lies behind the peritoneum which passes over it without being closely incorporated with the other coats of this part of the intestine, and is separated from it in and near the middle line by the superior mesenteric vessels. The rest of the small intestine is surrounded by the peritoneum, excepting along its attached or mesenteric border; here a space is left for the vessels and nerves to pass to the gut.

The muscular coat (tunica muscularis) consists of two layers of unstripped fibers: an external, longitudinal, and an internal, circular layer. The longitudinal fibers are thinly scattered over the surface of the intestine, and are more distinct along its free border. The circular fibers form a thick, uniform layer, and are composed of plain muscle cells of considerable length. The muscular coat is thicker at the upper than at the lower part of the small intestine.

The areolar or submucous coat (tela submucosa) connects together the mucous and muscular layers. It consists of loose, filamentous areolar tissue containing bloodvessels, lymphatics, and nerves. It is the strongest layer of the intestine.

The mucous membrane (tunica mucosa) is thick and highly vascular at the upper part of the small intestine, but somewhat paler and thinner below. It consists of the following structures: next to the areolar or submucous coat is a double layer of unstripped muscular fibers, outer longitudinal and inner circular, the muscular mucosa internal to this is a quantity of retiform tissue, enclosing in its meshes lymph corpuscles, and in this the bloodvessels and nerves ramify; lastly, a basement membrane, supporting a single layer of epithelial cells, which throughout the intestine are columnar in character. The cells are granular in appearance, and each possesses a clear oval nucleus. At their superficial or unattached ends they present a distinct layer of highly refracting material, marked by vertical striae, the striated border.

The mucous membrane is a structure defined by: circular folds, which contain duodenal glands; villi, which contain solitary lymphatic nodules; and intestinal glands, which contain aggregated lymphatic nodules.

The circular folds (plicae circulares; valvulae conniventes; valves of Kerkring) are large valvular flaps projecting into the lumen of the bowel. They are composed of reduplications of the mucous membrane, the two layers of the fold being bound together by submucous tissue; unlike the folds in the stomach, they are permanent, and are not obliterated when the intestine is distended. The majority extend transversely around the cylinder of the intestine for about one-half or two-thirds of its circumference, but some form complete circles, and others have a spiral direction; the latter usually extend a little more than once around the bowel, but occasionally two or three times. The larger folds are about 8 mm in depth at their broadest part; but the greater numbers are of smaller size. The larger and smaller folds alternate with each other. They will be not found at the commencement of the duodenum, but begin to appear about 2.5 or 5 cm beyond the pylorus. In the lower part of the descending portion, below the point where the bile and pancreatic ducts enter the intestine, they are very large and closely approximated. In the horizontal and ascending portions of the duodenum and upper half of the jejunum they are large and numerous, but from this point, down to the middle of the ileum, they diminish considerably in size. In the lower part of the ileum they almost entirely disappear; hence the comparative thinness of this portion of the intestine, as compared with the duodenum and jejunum. The circular folds retard the passage of the food along the intestines, and afford an increased surface for absorption.

The intestinal villi (villi intestinales) are highly vascular processes, projecting from the mucous membrane of the small intestine throughout its whole extent, and giving to its surface a velvety appearance. They are largest and most numerous in the duodenum and jejunum, and become fewer and smaller in the ileum.

The essential parts of a villus are: the lacteal vessel, the bloodvessels, the epithelium, the basement membrane, and the muscular tissue of the mucosa, all being supported and held together by retiform lymphoid tissue.

The lacteals will be in some cases double, and in some animals multiple, but often there will be a single vessel. Situated in the axis of the villus, each will commence by dilated cecal extremities near to, but not quite at, the summit of the villus. The walls are composed of a single layer of endothelial cells.

The muscular fibers are derived from the muscular mucosa, and are arranged in longitudinal bundles around the lacteal vessel, extending from the base to the summit of the villus, and giving off, laterally, individual muscle cells, which are enclosed by the reticulum, and by it are attached to the basement-membrane and to the lacteal.

The bloodvessels form a plexus under the basement membrane, and are enclosed in the reticular tissue.

These structures are surrounded by the basement membrane, which is made up of a stratum of endothelial cells, and upon this is placed a layer of columnar epithelium, the characteristics of which have been described. The retiform tissue forms a network in the meshes of which a number of leucocytes will be found.

THE GLANDS OF THE SMALL INTESTINE

The intestinal glands (glandulae intestinales; crypts of Lieberkühn) will be found in considerable numbers over every part of the mucous membrane of the small intestine. They consist of minute tubular depressions of the mucous membrane, arranged perpendicularly to the surface, upon which they open by small circular apertures. They may be seen with the aid of a lens, their orifices appearing as minute dots scattered between the villi. Their walls are thin, consisting of a basement membrane lined by columnar epithelium, and covered on their exterior by capillary vessels.

The duodenal glands (glandulae duodenales; glands of Brunner) will be limited to the duodenum, and will be found in the submucous areolar tissue. They will be largest and most numerous near the pylorus, forming an almost complete layer in the superior portion and upper half of the descending portions of the duodenum. They then will begin to diminish in number, and practically disappear at the junction of the duodenum and jejunum. They are small compound acinotubular glands consisting of a number of alveoli lined by short columnar epithelium and opening by a single duct on the inner surface of the intestine.

The solitary lymphatic nodules (noduli lymphatici solitarii; solitary glands) will be found scattered throughout the mucous membrane of the small intestine, but will be most numerous in the lower part of the ileum. Their free surfaces are covered with rudimentary villi, except at the summits, and each gland is surrounded by the openings of the intestinal glands. Each consists of a dense interlacing retiform tissue closely packed with lymph-corpuscles, and permeated with an abundant capillary network. The interspaces of the retiform tissue are continuous with larger lymph spaces which surround the gland, through which they communicate with the lacteal system. They are situated partly in the submucous tissue, partly in the mucous membrane, where they form slight projections of its epithelial layer.

The aggregated lymphatic nodules (noduli lymphatici aggregati; patches of Peyer; glands of Peyer; agminated follicles; tonsillae intestinales) form circular or oval patches, from twenty to thirty in number, and varying in length from 2 to 10 cm. They are largest and most numerous in the ileum. In the lower part of the jejunum they are small, circular, and few in number. They are occasionally seen in the duodenum. They are placed lengthwise in the intestine, and are situated in the portion of the tube most distant from the attachment of the mesentery. Each patch is formed of a group of solitary lymphatic nodules covered with mucous membrane, but the patches do not, as a rule, possess villi on their free surfaces. They are best marked in the young subject, become indistinct in middle age, and sometimes disappear altogether in advanced life. They are freely supplied with bloodvessels, which form an abundant plexus around each follicle and give off fine branches permeating the lymphoid tissue in the interior of the follicle. The lymphatic plexuses are especially abundant around these patches.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE SMALL INTESTINE

The jejunum and ileum are supplied by the superior mesenteric artery, the intestinal branches of which, having reached the attached border of the bowel, run between the serous and muscular coats, with frequent inosculation to the free border, where they also anastomose with other branches running around the opposite surface of the gut. From these vessels numerous branches are given off, which pierce the muscular coat, supplying it and forming an intricate plexus in the submucous tissue. From this plexus minute vessels pass to the glands and villi of the mucous membrane.

The veins have a similar course and arrangement to the arteries. The lymphatics of the small intestine (lacteals) are arranged in two sets, those of the mucous membrane and those of the muscular coat.

The lymphatics of the villi commence in these structures in the manner described above. They form an intricate plexus in the mucous and submucous tissue, being joined by the lymphatics from the lymph spaces at the bases of the solitary nodules, and from this pass to larger vessels at the mesenteric border of the gut. The lymphatics of the muscular coat are situated to a great extent between the two layers of muscular fibers, where they form a close plexus; throughout their course they communicate freely with the lymphatics from the mucous membrane, and empty themselves in the same manner as these into the origins of the lacteal vessels at the attached border of the gut.

The nerves of the small intestines are derived from the plexuses of sympathetic nerves around the superior mesenteric artery. From this source they run to the myenteric plexus of nerves and ganglia situated between the circular and longitudinal muscular fibers from which the nervous branches are distributed to the muscular coats of the intestine. From this a secondary plexus, the plexus of the submucosa is derived, and is formed by branches which have perforated the circular muscular fibers. This plexus lies in the submucous coat of the intestine; it also contains ganglia from which nerve fibers pass to the muscular mucosa and to the mucous membrane. The nerve bundles of the submucous plexus are finer than those of the myenteric plexus.

THE DIGESTIVE SECRETIONS INTO THE SMALL INTESTINE

There are many sources of digestive secretions into the small intestine. Secretions into the small intestine are controlled by nerves, including the vagus, and hormones. The most effective stimuli for secretion are local mechanical or chemical stimulations of the intestinal mucous membrane. Such stimuli always are present in the intestine in the form of chyme and food particles. The gastric chyme that is emptied into the duodenum contains gastric secretions that will continue their digestive processes for a short time in the small intestine. One of the major sources of digestive secretion is the pancreas, a large gland that produces both digestive enzymes and hormones. The pancreas empties its secretions into the duodenum through the major pancreatic duct in the duodenal papilla and the accessory pancreatic duct a few centimetres away from it. Pancreatic juice contains enzymes that digest proteins, fats, and carbohydrates. Secretions of the liver are delivered to the duodenum by the common bile duct via the gallbladder and are also received through the duodenal papilla.

The composition of the succus entericus, the mixture of substances secreted into the small intestine, varies somewhat in different parts of the intestine. Except in the duodenum, the quantity of the fluid secreted is minimal, even under conditions of stimulation. In the duodenum, for example, where the Brunner's glands are located, the secretion contains more mucus. In general, the secretion of the small intestine is a thin, colourless or slightly straw-coloured fluid, containing flecks of mucus, water, inorganic salts, and organic material. The inorganic salts are those commonly present in other body fluids, with the bicarbonate concentration higher than it is in blood. Aside from mucus, the organic matter consists of cellular debris and enzymes, including a pepsinlike protease (from the duodenum only), an amylase, a lipase, at least two peptidases, sucrase, maltase, enterokinase, alkaline phosphatase, nucleophosphatases, and nucleocytases.

THE LARGE INTESTINE

The large intestine will serve as a reservoir for the liquids emptied into it from the small intestine. Its primary functions will be to absorb water; to maintain osmolality, or level of solutes, of the blood by excreting and absorbing electrolytes (substances, such as sodium and chloride, that in solution take on an electrical charge) from the chyme; and to store fecal material until it can be evacuated by defecation. It will also contain large numbers of bacteria that synthesize niacin (nicotinic acid), thiamin (vitamin B₁) and vitamin K, vitamins that are essential to several metabolic activities as well as to the function of the central nervous system.

The large intestine extends from the end of the ileum to the anus. It is about 1.5 meters long, being one-fifth of the whole extent of the intestinal canal. Its caliber is largest at its commencement at the cecum, and gradually diminishes as far as the rectum, where there is a dilatation of considerable size just above the anal canal. It differs from the small intestine in its greater caliber, its more fixed position, its sacculated form, and in possessing certain appendages to its external coat, the appendices epiploicae. Further, its longitudinal muscular fibers do not form a continuous layer around the gut, but are arranged in three longitudinal bands or taeniae.

The large intestine, in its course, describes an arch which surrounds the convolutions of the small intestine. It commences in the right iliac region, in a dilated part, the cecum. It ascends through the right lumbar and hypochondriac regions to the under surface of the liver; it here takes a bend, the right colic flexure, to the left and passes transversely across the abdomen on the confines of the epigastric and umbilical regions, to the left hypochondriac region; it then bends again, the left colic flexure, and descends through the left lumbar and iliac regions to the pelvis, where it forms a bend called the sigmoid flexure; from this it is continued along the posterior wall of the pelvis to the anus. The large intestine is divided into the cecum, colon, rectum, and anal canal.

THE CECUM PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

The Cecum (intestinum cecum), the commencement of the large intestine, is the large blind pouch situated below the colic valve. Its blind end is directed downward, and its open end upward, communicating directly with the colon, of which this blind pouch appears to be the beginning or head, and hence the old name of caput cecum coli will be applied to it. Its size will vary between 6.25 cm in length and 7.5 cm in breadth. It is situated in the right iliac fossa, above the lateral half of the inguinal ligament: it rests on the Iliacus and Psoas major, and will find itself in contact with the anterior abdominal wall, but the greater omentum and, if the cecum be empty, some coils of small intestine will lie in front of it.

The cecum lies quite free in the abdominal cavity and has a considerable amount of movement associated to it, so that it may become herniated down the right inguinal canal, and has occasionally been found in an inguinal hernia on the left side.

The vermiform appendix is a long, narrow, worm-shaped tube, which starts from what was originally the apex of the cecum, and may pass in one of several directions: upward behind the cecum; to the left behind the ileum and mesentery; or downward into the lesser pelvis. It will vary from 2 to 20 cm in length, its average being about 8.3 cm. It will be retained in position by a fold of peritoneum (mesenteriole), derived from the left leaf of the mesentery. This fold will be more or less triangular in shape and it will extend along the entire length of the tube.

Between its two layers and close to its free margin lies the appendicular artery. The canal of the vermiform appendix is small, extends throughout the whole length of the tube, and communicates with the cecum by an orifice which is placed below and behind the ileocecal opening. It will be guarded by a semilunar valve formed by a fold of mucous membrane.

The structures of the coats of the vermiform appendix are the same as those of the intestine: serous, muscular, submucous, and mucous. The serous coat forms a complete investment for the tube, except along the narrow line of attachment of its mesenteriole in its proximal two-thirds. The longitudinal muscular fibers do not form three bands as in the greater part of the large intestine, but invest the whole organ, except at one or two points where both the longitudinal and circular fibers are deficient so that the peritoneal and submucous coats are contiguous over small areas.

The circular muscle fibers form a much thicker layer than the longitudinal fibers, and are separated from them by a small amount of connective tissue. The submucous coat is well marked, and contains a large number of masses of lymphoid tissue which cause the mucous membrane to bulge into the lumen and so render the latter of small size and irregular shape. The mucous membrane is lined by columnar epithelium and resembles that of the rest of the large intestine, but the intestinal glands are fewer in number.

The lower end of the ileum ends by opening into the medial and back part of the large intestine, at the point of junction of the cecum with the colon. The opening is guarded by a valve, designated as the Colic Valve (valvula coli; ileocecal valve), consisting of two segments or lips, which project into the lumen of the large intestine. When the intestine will be inflated and dried, the lips will be of a semilunar shape. The upper one, nearly horizontal in direction, will be attached by its convex border to the line of junction of the ileum with the colon; the lower lip, which is longer and more concave, will be attached to the line of junction of the ileum with the cecum. At the ends of the aperture the two segments of the valve will coalesce, and will continue as narrow membranous ridges around the canal for a short distance, forming the frenula of the valve. The left or anterior end of the aperture is rounded; the right or posterior is narrow and pointed.

Each lip of the valve is formed by a re-duplication of the mucous membrane and of the circular muscular fibers of the intestine, the longitudinal fibers and peritoneum being continued uninterruptedly from the small to the large intestine.

The surfaces of the valve directed toward the ileum are covered with villi, and present the characteristic structure of the mucous membrane of the small intestine; while those turned toward the large intestine are destitute of villi, and marked with the orifices of the numerous tubular glands peculiar to the mucous membrane of the large intestine. These differences in structure continue as far as the free margins of the valve. This valve will prevent reflux from the cecum into the ileum and it will also act as a sphincter around the end of the ileum and will prevent the contents of the ileum from passing too quickly into the cecum.

THE COLON PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

The Colon part of the large intestine is divided into four parts: the ascending, transverse, descending, and sigmoid.

The Ascending Colon (colon ascendens) is smaller in caliber than the cecum, with which it is continuous. It passes upward, from its commencement at the cecum, opposite the colic valve, to the under surface of the right lobe of the liver, on the right of the gallbladder, where it is lodged in a shallow depression, the colic impression; here it bends abruptly forward and to the left, forming the right colic (hepatic) flexure. It is retained in contact with the posterior wall of the abdomen by the peritoneum, which covers its anterior surface and sides, its posterior surface being connected by loose areolar tissue with the Iliacus, Quadratus lumborum, aponeurotic origin of the transverse abdominal muscle, and with the front of the lower and lateral part of the right kidney.

The Transverse Colon (colon transversum) the longest and most movable part of the colon, will pass with a downward convexity from the right hypochondriac region across the abdomen, opposite the confines of the epigastric and umbilical zones, into the left hypochondriac region, where it will curve sharply on itself beneath the lower end of the spleen, forming the left colic (splenic) flexure. In its course it will describe an arch, the concavity of which is directed backward and a little upward; toward its splenic end there will often be an abrupt U-shaped curve which may descend lower than the main curve. It will be almost completely invested by peritoneum, and will be connected to the inferior border of the pancreas by a large and wide duplicature of that membrane, the transverse mesocolon. It will be in relation, by its upper surface, with the liver and gallbladder, the greater curvature of the stomach, and the lower end of the spleen; by its under surface, with the small intestine; by its anterior surface, with the anterior layers of the greater omentum and the abdominal parietes; its posterior surface will be in relation from right to left with the descending portion of the duodenum, the head of the pancreas, and some of the convolutions of the jejunum and ileum.

The left colic or splenic flexure will be situated at the junction of the transverse and descending parts of the colon, and is in relation with the lower end of the spleen and the tail of the pancreas; the flexure is so acute that the end of the transverse colon usually lies in contact with the front of the descending colon. It lies at a higher level than, and on a plane posterior to, the right colic flexure, and is attached to the diaphragm, opposite the tenth and eleventh ribs, by a peritoneal fold, named the phrenicocolic ligament, which will assist in supporting the lower end of the spleen.

The Descending Colon (colon descendens) passes downward through the left hypochondriac and lumbar regions along the lateral border of the left kidney. At the lower end of the kidney it turns medialward toward the lateral border of the Psoas, and then descends, in the angle between Psoas and Quadratus lumborum, to the crest of the ilium, where it ends in the iliac colon. The peritoneum covers its anterior surface and sides, while its posterior surface is connected by areolar tissue with the lower and lateral part of the left kidney, the aponeurotic origin of the transverse abdominal muscle, and the Quadratus lumborum. It is smaller in caliber and more deeply placed than the ascending colon, and is more frequently covered with peritoneum on its posterior surface than the ascending colon. In front of it are some coils of small intestine.

The Iliac Colon is situated in the left iliac fossa, and is about 12 to 15 cm long. It begins at the level of the iliac crest, where it is continuous with the descending colon, and ends in the sigmoid colon at the superior aperture of the lesser pelvis. It curves downward and medialward in front of the Iliacus and Psoas, and, as a rule, is covered by peritoneum on its sides and anterior surface only.

The Sigmoid Colon (colon sigmoideum; pelvic colon; sigmoid flexure) forms a loop which averages about 40 cm in length, and normally will be situated within the pelvis, but on account of its freedom of movement it is liable to be displaced into the abdominal cavity. It begins at the superior aperture of the lesser pelvis, where it is continuous with the iliac colon, and passes transversely across the front of the sacrum to the right side of the pelvis; it then curves on itself and turns toward the left to reach the middle line at the level of the third piece of the sacrum, where it bends downward and ends in the rectum. It is completely surrounded by peritoneum, which forms a mesentery (sigmoid mesocolon), which diminishes in length from the center toward the ends of the loop, where it disappears, so that the loop is fixed at its junctions with the iliac colon and rectum, but has a considerable range of movement in its central portion. Behind the sigmoid colon are the external iliac vessels, the left piriform muscle, and left sacral plexus of nerves; in front, it is separated from the bladder in the male, and the uterus in the female, by some coils of the small intestine.

STRUCTURE OF THE COLON PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

Structurally, the large intestine has four coats: serous, muscular, areolar, and mucous.

The serous coat (tunica serosa) is derived from the peritoneum, and invests the different portions of the large intestine to a variable extent. The cecum will be completely covered by the serous membrane. The ascending, descending, and iliac parts of the colon will be covered only in front and at the sides; a variable amount of the posterior surface will be uncovered. The transverse colon will be almost completely invested, the parts corresponding to the attachment of the greater omentum and transverse mesocolon being alone excepted. The sigmoid colon will be entirely surrounded. The rectum will be covered above on its anterior surface and sides; below, on its anterior aspect only; the anal canal will be entirely devoid of any serous covering. In the course of the colon the peritoneal coat will be thrown into a number of small pouches filled with fat, designated as appendices epiploicae. They will be most numerous on the transverse colon.

The muscular coat (tunica muscularis) consists of an external longitudinal, and an internal circular, layer of non-striped muscular fibers:

- The longitudinal fibers will not form a continuous layer over the whole surface of the large intestine. In the cecum and colon they will be especially collected into three flat longitudinal bands (taenae coli), each of about 12 mm in width; one, the posterior, is placed along the attached border of the intestine; the anterior, the largest, corresponds along the arch of the colon to the attachment of the greater omentum, but is in front in the ascending, descending, and iliac parts of the colon, and in the sigmoid colon; the third, or lateral band, is found on the medial side of the ascending and descending parts of the colon, and on the under aspect of the transverse colon. These bands are shorter than the other coats of the intestine, and serve to produce the sacculi which are characteristic of the cecum and colon; accordingly, when they are dissected off, the tube can be lengthened, and its sacculated character disappears. In the sigmoid colon the longitudinal fibers become more scattered; and around the rectum they spread out and form a layer, which completely encircles this portion of the gut, but is thicker on the anterior and posterior surfaces, where it forms two bands, than on the lateral surfaces. In addition, two bands of plain muscular tissue arise from the second and third coccygeal vertebrae, and pass downward and forward to blend with the longitudinal muscular fibers on the posterior wall of the anal canal. These will be known as the Rectococcygeal muscles.
- The circular fibers form a thin layer over the cecum and colon, being especially accumulated in the intervals between the sacculi; in the rectum they form a thick layer, and in the anal canal they become numerous, and constitute the Sphincter ani internus.

The areolar coat (tela submucosa; submucous coat) connects the muscular and mucous layers closely together.

The mucous membrane (tunica mucosa) in the cecum and colon, is pale, smooth, destitute of villi, and raises into numerous crescentic folds which correspond to the intervals between the sacculi. In the rectum it is thicker, of a darker color, more vascular, and connected loosely to the muscular coat, as in the esophagus.

The mucous membrane consists of a muscular layer, the muscular mucosa; a quantity of retiform tissue in which the vessels ramify; a basement membrane and epithelium which is of the columnar variety, and resembles the epithelium found in the small intestine. The mucous membrane of the large intestine presents for examination glands and solitary lymphatic nodules.

The glands of the large intestine are minute tubular prolongations of the mucous membrane arranged perpendicularly, side by side, over its entire surface; they are longer, more numerous, and placed in much closer apposition than those of the small intestine; and they open by minute rounded orifices upon the surface, giving it a cribriform appearance. Each gland is lined by short columnar epithelium and contains numerous goblet cells.

The solitary lymphatic nodules (noduli lymphatici solitarii) of the large intestine will be most abundant in the cecum and vermiform process, but they will be irregularly scattered also over the rest of the intestine.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE COLON PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

The arteries supplying the colon are derived from the colic and sigmoid branches of the mesenteric arteries. They give off large branches, which ramify between and supply the muscular coats, and after dividing into small vessels in the submucous tissue, pass to the mucous membrane. The rectum is supplied by the superior hemorrhoidal branch of the inferior mesenteric, and the anal canal by the middle hemorrhoidal from the hypogastric, and the inferior hemorrhoidal from the internal pudendal artery.

The superior hemorrhoidal, the continuation of the inferior mesenteric, divides into two branches, which run down either side of the rectum to within about 12.5 cm of the anus; they here split up into about six branches which pierce the muscular coat and descend between it and the mucous membrane in a longitudinal direction, parallel with each other as far as the sphincter ani internus, where they anastomose with the other hemorrhoidal arteries and form a series of loops around the anus.

The veins of the rectum commence in a plexus of vessels which surrounds the anal canal. In the vessels forming this plexus are smaller saccular dilatations just within the margin of the anus; from the plexus about six vessels of considerable size are given off. These ascend between the muscular and mucous coats for about 12.5 cm, running parallel to each other; they then pierce the muscular coat, and, by their union, form a single trunk, the superior hemorrhoidal vein. This arrangement will be termed the hemorrhoidal plexus; it communicates with the tributaries of the middle and inferior hemorrhoidal veins, at its commencement, and thus a communication is established between the systemic and portal circulations.

The nerves are derived from the sympathetic plexuses around the branches of the superior and inferior mesenteric arteries. They will be distributed in a similar way to those found in the small intestine.

THE RECTUM PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

The Rectum (intestinum rectum) is continuous above with the sigmoid colon, while below it ends in the anal canal. From its origin at the level of the third sacral vertebra it passes downward, lying in the sacrococcygeal curve, and extends for about 2.5 cm in front of, and a little below, the tip of the coccyx, as far as the apex of the prostate. It then bends sharply backward into the anal canal. It therefore presents two antero-posterior curves: an upper, with its convexity backward, and a lower, with its convexity forward. Two lateral curves are also described, one to the right opposite the junction of the third and fourth sacral vertebrae, and the other to the left, opposite the left sacrococcygeal articulation; they are, however, of little importance.

The rectum is about 12 cm long, and at its commencement its caliber is similar to that of the sigmoid colon, but near its termination it is dilated to form the rectal ampulla. The rectum has no sacculations comparable to those of the colon, but when the lower part of the rectum is contracted, its mucous membrane is thrown into a number of folds, which are longitudinal in direction and are effaced by the distension of the gut. Besides these, there are certain permanent transverse folds of a semilunar shape. These folds are about 12 mm in width, and contain some of the circular fibers of the gut. In the empty state of the intestine, these folds overlap each other.

The peritoneum is related to the upper two-thirds of the rectum, covering at first its front and sides, but lower down its front only; from the latter will be reflected on to the seminal vesicles in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the adjective “MALE” and the posterior vaginal wall in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the adjective “FEMALE”.

THE ANAL CANAL PART OF THE LARGE INTESTINE

The Anal Canal (pars analis recti), or terminal portion of the large intestine, begins at the level of the apex of the prostate, is directed downward and backward, and ends at the anus. It forms an angle with the lower part of the rectum, and measures from 2.5 to 4 cm in length.

The Anal Canal has no peritoneal covering, but is invested by the sphincter ani internus, supported by the Levatores ani, and surrounded at its termination by the sphincter ani externus. In the empty condition it presents the appearance of an antero-posterior longitudinal slit. Behind it is a mass of muscular and fibrous tissue, the anococcygeal body; in front of it, for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the adjective “MALE”, but separated by connective tissue from it, are the membranous portion and bulb of the urethra, and the fascia of the urogenital diaphragm; and for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the adjective “FEMALE” it is separated from the lower end of the vagina by a mass of muscular and fibrous tissue, named the perineal body.

The lumen of the anal canal presents, in its upper half, a number of vertical folds, produced by an infolding of the mucous membrane and some of the muscular tissue. They are known as the rectal columns, and are separated from one another by furrows (rectal sinuses), which end below in small valve-like folds, termed anal valves, which join together the lower ends of the rectal columns.

THE LIVER

The liver is situated in the upper and right parts of the abdominal cavity, occupying almost the whole of the right hypochondrium, the greater part of the epigastrium, and not uncommonly extending into the left hypochondrium as far as the mammillary line. In the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective it will weigh from 1.4 to 1.6 kg and in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective it will weigh from 1.2 to 1.4 kg.

The liver, the largest gland in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, has both external and internal secretions, which will be formed in the hepatic cells. Its external secretion, the bile, will be collected after passing through the bile capillaries by the bile ducts, which join like the twigs and branches of a tree to form two large ducts that unite to form the hepatic duct. The bile will be either carried to the gallbladder by the cystic duct or poured directly into the duodenum by the common bile duct where it will help in the digestion process.

The internal secretions are concerned with the metabolism of both nitrogenous and carbohydrate materials absorbed from the intestine and carried to the liver by the portal vein. The carbohydrates will be stored in the hepatic cells in the form of glycogen which will be secreted in the form of sugar directly into the blood stream. Some of the cells lining the blood capillaries of the liver will be concerned in the destruction of red blood corpuscles.

THE SURFACES OF THE LIVER

The liver possesses three surfaces: superior, inferior and posterior. A sharp, well-defined margin divides the inferior from the superior in front; the other margins are rounded. The superior surface is attached to the diaphragm and anterior abdominal wall by a triangular or falciform fold of peritoneum, the falciform ligament, in the free margin of which is a rounded cord, the ligamentum teres (obliterated umbilical vein). The line of attachment of the falciform ligament divides the liver into two parts, termed the right and left lobes, the right being much the larger.

The inferior and posterior surfaces are divided into four lobes by five fossae, which are arranged in the form of the letter H. The left limb of the H marks on these surfaces the division of the liver into right and left lobes; it is known as the left sagittal fossa, and consists of two parts: the fossa for the umbilical vein in front and the fossa for the ductus venosus behind. The right limb of the H is formed in front by the fossa for the gallbladder, and behind by the fossa for the inferior vena cava; these two fossae are separated from one another by a band of liver substance, termed the caudate process. The bar connecting the two limbs of the H is the porta (transverse fissure); in front of it is the quadrate lobe, behind it the caudate lobe.

The superior surface (facies superior) comprises a part of both lobes, and, as a whole, is convex, and fits under the vault of the diaphragm which in front separates it on the right from the sixth to the tenth ribs and their cartilages, and on the left from the seventh and eighth costal cartilages. Its middle part lies behind the xiphoid process, and, in the angle between the diverging rib cartilage of opposite sides, is in contact with the abdominal wall. Behind this the diaphragm separates the liver from the lower part of the lungs and pleurae, the heart and pericardium and the right costal arches from the seventh to the eleventh inclusive. It is completely covered by peritoneum except along the line of attachment of the falciform ligament.

The inferior surface (facies inferior; visceral surface), is uneven, concave, directed downward, backward, and to the left, and is in relation with the stomach and duodenum, the right colic flexure, and the right kidney and suprarenal gland. The surface is almost completely invested by peritoneum; the only parts devoid of this covering are where the gallbladder is attached to the liver, and at the porta hepatis where the two layers of the lesser omentum are separated from each other by the bloodvessels and ducts of the liver.

The inferior surface of the left lobe presents behind and to the left the gastric impression, moulded over the antero-superior surface of the stomach, and to the right of this a rounded eminence, the tuber omentale, which fits into the concavity of the lesser curvature of the stomach and lies in front of the anterior layer of the lesser omentum. The under surface of the right lobe is divided into two unequal portions by the fossa for the gallbladder; the portion to the left, the smaller of the two, is the quadrate lobe, and is in relation with the pyloric end of the stomach, the superior portion of the duodenum, and the transverse colon. The portion of the under surface of the right lobe to the right of the fossa for the gallbladder, presents two impressions, one situated behind the other, and separated by a ridge. The anterior of these two impressions, the colic impression, is shallow and is produced by the right colic flexure; the posterior, the renal impression, is deeper and is occupied by the upper part of the right kidney and lower part of the right suprarenal gland. Medial to the renal impression is a third and slightly marked impression, lying between it and the neck of the gallbladder. This is caused by the descending portion of the duodenum, and is known as the duodenal impression. Just in front of the inferior vena cava is a narrow strip of liver tissue, the caudate process, which connects the right inferior angle of the caudate lobe to the under surface of the right lobe. It forms the upper boundary of the epiploic foramen of the peritoneum.

The posterior surface (facies posterior) is rounded and broad behind the right lobe, but narrow on the left. Over a large part of its extent it is not covered by peritoneum; this uncovered portion is about 7.5 cm broad at its widest part, and is in direct contact with the diaphragm. It is marked off from the upper surface by the line of reflection of the upper layer of the coronary ligament, and from the under surface by the line of reflection of the lower layer of the coronary ligament. The central part of the posterior surface presents a deep concavity which is moulded on the vertebral column and crura of the diaphragm. To the right of this the inferior vena cava is lodged in its fossa between the uncovered area and the caudate lobe. Close to the right of this fossa and immediately above the renal impression is a small triangular depressed area, the suprarenal impression, the greater part of which is devoid of peritoneum; it lodges the right suprarenal gland. To the left of the inferior vena cava is the caudate lobe, which lies between the fossa for the vena cava and the fossa for the ductus venosus. Its lower end projects and forms part of the posterior boundary of the porta; on the right, it is connected with the under surface of the right lobe of the liver by the caudate process, and on the left it presents an elevation, the papillary process. Its posterior surface rests upon the diaphragm, being separated from it merely by the upper part of the omental bursa. To the left of the fossa for the ductus venosus is a groove in which lies the antrum cardiacum of the esophagus.

The anterior border (margo anterior) is thin and sharp, and marked opposite the attachment of the falciform ligament by a deep notch, the umbilical notch, and opposite the cartilage of the ninth rib by a second notch for the fundus of the gallbladder.

The right lobe (lobus hepatis dexter) is much larger than the left; the proportion between them being as six to one. It occupies the right hypochondrium, and is separated from the left lobe on its upper surface by the falciform ligament; on its under and posterior surfaces by the left sagittal fossa; and in front by the umbilical notch. It is of a somewhat quadrilateral form, its under and posterior surfaces being marked by three fossae: the porta and the fossae for the gallbladder and inferior vena cava, which separate its left part into two smaller lobes; the quadrate and caudate lobes. The impressions on the right lobe have already been described.

The quadrate lobe (lobus quadratus) is situated on the under surface of the right lobe, bounded in front by the anterior margin of the liver; behind by the porta; on the right, by the fossa for the gallbladder; and on the left, by the fossa for the umbilical vein. It is oblong in shape, its antero-posterior diameter being greater than its transverse.

The caudate lobe (lobus caudatus; Spigelian lobe) is situated upon the posterior surface of the right lobe of the liver, opposite the tenth and eleventh thoracic vertebrae. It is bounded, below, by the porta; on the right, by the fossa for the inferior vena cava; and, on the left, by the fossa for the ductus venosus. It looks backward, being nearly vertical in position; it is longer from above downward than from side to side, and is somewhat concave in the transverse direction. The caudate process is a small elevation of the hepatic substance extending obliquely lateralward, from the lower extremity of the caudate lobe to the under surface of the right lobe. It is situated behind the porta, and separates the fossa for the gallbladder from the commencement of the fossa for the inferior vena cava.

The left lobe is smaller and more flattened than the right. It is situated in the epigastric and left hypochondriac regions. Its upper surface is slightly convex and is moulded on to the diaphragm; its under surface presents the gastric impression and omental tuberosity.

The liver is connected to the under surface of the diaphragm and to the anterior wall of the abdomen by five ligaments; four of these — the falciform, the coronary, and the two lateral — are peritoneal folds; the fifth, the round ligament, is a fibrous cord, the obliterated umbilical vein. The liver is also attached to the lesser curvature of the stomach by the hepatogastric and to the duodenum by the hepatoduodenal ligament.

The falciform ligament (ligamentum falciforme hepatis) is a broad and thin antero-posterior peritoneal fold, falciform in shape, its base being directed downward and backward, its apex upward and backward. It is situated in an antero-posterior plane, but lies obliquely so that one surface faces forward and is in contact with the peritoneum behind the right rectilinear muscle and the diaphragm, while the other is directed backward and is in contact with the left lobe of the liver. It is attached by its left margin to the under surface of the diaphragm, and the posterior surface of the sheath of the right rectilinear muscle as low down as the umbilical muscle; by its right margin it extends from the notch on the anterior margin of the liver, as far back as the posterior surface. It is composed of two layers of peritoneum closely united together. Its base or free edge contains between its layers the round ligament and the parumbilical veins.

The coronary ligament (ligamentum coronarium hepatis) consists of an upper and a lower layer. The upper layer is formed by the reflection of the peritoneum from the upper margin of the bare area of the liver to the under surface of the diaphragm, and is continuous with the right layer of the falciform ligament. The lower layer is reflected from the lower margin of the bare area on to the right kidney and suprarenal gland, and is termed the hepatorenal ligament.

The triangular ligaments (lateral ligaments) are two in number, right and left. The right triangular ligament (ligamentum triangulare dextrum) is situated at the right extremity of the bare area, and is a small fold which passes to the diaphragm, being formed by the apposition of the upper and lower layers of the coronary ligament. The left triangular ligament is a fold of some considerable size, which connects the posterior part of the upper surface of the left lobe to the diaphragm; its anterior layer is continuous with the left layer of the falciform ligament.

The round ligament (ligamentum teres hepatis) is a fibrous cord resulting from the obliteration of the umbilical vein. It ascends from the umbilical muscle, in the free margin of the falciform ligament, to the umbilical notch of the liver, from which it may be traced in its proper fossa on the inferior surface of the liver to the porta, where it becomes continuous with the ligamentum venosum.

FIXATION OF THE LIVER

Several factors contribute to maintain the liver in place. The attachments of the liver to the diaphragm by the coronary and triangular ligaments and the intervening connective tissue of the uncovered area, together with the intimate connection of the inferior vena cava by the connective tissue and hepatic veins would hold up the posterior part of the liver. Some support is derived from the pressure of the abdominal viscera which completely fill the abdomen whose muscular walls are always in a state of tonic contraction. The superior surface of the liver is perfectly fitted to the under surface of the diaphragm so that atmospheric pressure alone would be enough to hold it against the diaphragm. The latter in turn is held up by the negative pressure in the thorax. The lax falciform ligament certainly gives no support though it probably limits lateral displacement.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE LIVER

The vessels connected with the liver are: the hepatic artery, the portal vein, and the hepatic veins.

The liver anatomy can be divided into eight functionally independent segments. Each segment has its own vascular inflow, outflow and biliary drainage. In the centre of each segment there is a branch of the portal vein, hepatic artery and bile duct. In the periphery of each segment there is vascular outflow through the hepatic veins. The right hepatic vein divides the right lobe into anterior and posterior segments. The middle hepatic vein divides the liver into right and left lobes (or right and left hemiliver). This plane runs from the inferior vena cava to the gallbladder fossa. The falciform ligament divides the left lobe into a medial-segment IV and a lateral part – segment II and III. The portal vein divides the liver into upper and lower segments. The left and right portal veins branch superiorly and inferiorly to project into the center of each segment.

The hepatic artery and portal vein, accompanied by numerous nerves, ascend to the porta, between the layers of the lesser omentum. The bile duct and the lymphatic vessels descend from the porta between the layers of the same omentum. The relative positions of the three structures are as follows: the bile duct lies to the right, the hepatic artery to the left, and the portal vein behind and between the other two. They are enveloped in a loose areolar tissue, the fibrous capsule of Glisson, which accompanies the vessels in their course through the portal canals in the interior of the organ.

The hepatic veins convey the blood from the liver. They have very little cellular investment, and what there is, will bind their parietes closely to the walls of the canals through which they run; so that, on section of the organ, they remain widely open and are solitary, and may be easily distinguished from the branches of the portal vein, which are more or less collapsed, and always accompanied by an artery and duct.

The nerves of the liver, derived from the left vagus and sympathetic, enter at the porta and accompany the vessels and ducts to the interlobular spaces. Here, the medullated fibers are distributed almost exclusively to the coats of the bloodvessels; while the non-medullated enter the lobules and ramify between the cells and even within them.

The blood supply of the liver is unique among all organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” due to the hepatic portal vein system. Blood traveling to the spleen, stomach, pancreas, gallbladder, and intestines will pass through capillaries in these organs and will be collected into the hepatic portal vein. The hepatic portal vein then will deliver this blood to the tissues of the liver where the contents of the blood will be divided up into smaller vessels and processed before being passed on to the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Blood leaving the tissues of the liver will collect into the hepatic veins that lead to the vein cave and return to the heart. The liver also has its own system of arteries and arterioles that provide oxygenated blood to its tissues just like any other organ.

STRUCTURE OF THE LIVER

The internal structure of the liver is made of around 100000 small hexagonal⁶⁷¹ functional units known as lobules, held together by an extremely fine areolar tissue, in which ramify the portal vein, hepatic ducts, hepatic artery, hepatic veins, lymphatics, and nerves; the whole being invested by a serous and a fibrous coat. Each lobule consists of a central vein surrounded by 6 hepatic portal veins and 6 hepatic arteries.⁶⁷² These blood vessels are connected by many capillary-like tubes

⁶⁷¹ Why hexagons, rather than squares or even triangles, you will ask? As we have indicated already, it is because the use of regular hexagonal forms provides the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter. Space-efficiency is not the only benefit of using regular hexagons. Stacked together, regular hexagons fill spaces in an offset arrangement with six short walls around each “tube”, giving the resulting structures a high compression strength. The regular hexagon is the base shape for a matrix that minimized the use of construction material while at the same time maximizing the strength and reducing the weight of the final product.

⁶⁷² Remember the disposition of the six “Entry Gates” and the six “Exit Gates” along the complete flow path of the “Generative Divine Particle” in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has consolidated in HIMSELF.

called sinusoids, which extend from the portal veins and arteries to meet the central vein like spokes on a wheel.

- The serous coat (tunica serosa) is derived from the peritoneum, and invests the greater part of the surface of the organ. It is intimately adherent to the fibrous coat.
- The fibrous coat (capsula fibrosa; areolar coat) lies beneath the serous investment, and covers the entire surface of the organ. It is difficult of demonstration, excepting where the serous coat is deficient. At the porta it is continuous with the fibrous capsule of Glisson, and on the surface of the organ with the areolar tissue separating the lobules.

The lobules (lobuli hepatis) form the chief mass of the hepatic substance; they may be seen either on the surface of the organ, or by making a section through the gland, as small granular bodies, about the size of a millet-seed, measuring from 1 to 2.5 mm in diameter. The bases of the lobules are clustered around the smallest radicles (sublobular) of the hepatic veins, to which each is connected by means of a small branch which issues from the center of the lobule (intralobular). The remaining part of the surface of each lobule is imperfectly isolated from the surrounding lobules by a thin stratum of areolar tissue, in which is contained a plexus of vessels, the interlobular plexus, and ducts.

If one of the sublobular veins be laid open, the bases of the lobules may be seen through the thin wall of the vein on which they rest, arranged in a form resembling a tessellated pavement, the center of each polygonal space presenting a minute aperture, the mouth of an intralobular vein.

Viewed at the microscopic scale, each lobule consists of a mass of cells, hepatic cells, arranged in irregular radiating columns between which are the blood channels (sinusoids). These convey the blood from the circumference to the center of the lobule, and end in the intralobular vein, which runs through its center, to open at its base into one of the sublobular veins. Between the cells are also the minute bile capillaries. Therefore, in the lobule there are all the essentials of a secreting gland; that is to say: (1) cells, by which the secretion is formed; (2) bloodvessels, in close relation with the cells, containing the blood from which the secretion is derived; (3) ducts, by which the secretion, when formed, is carried away.

The hepatic cells are polyhedral in form. They vary in size from 12 to 25 μm in diameter. They will contain one or sometimes two distinct nuclei. The nucleus exhibits an intranuclear network and one or two refractile nucleoli. The cells will contain granules; some of which are protoplasmic, while others consist of glycogen, fat, or an iron compound.

The blood in the capillary plexus around the liver cells will be brought to the liver principally by the portal vein, but also to a certain extent by the hepatic artery.

The hepatic artery, entering the liver at the porta with the portal vein and hepatic duct, ramifies with these vessels through the portal canals. It gives off vaginal branches, which ramify in the fibrous capsule of Glisson, and to be destined chiefly for the nutrition of the coats of the vessels and ducts. It also gives off capsular branches, which reach the surface of the organ, ending in its fibrous coat in stellate plexuses. Finally, it gives off interlobular branches, which form a plexus outside each lobule, to supply the walls of the interlobular veins and the accompanying bile ducts. From this plexus lobular branches enter the lobule and end in the network of sinusoids between the cells.

PHYSIOLOGY OF THE LIVER

The liver is the largest and most important metabolic organ of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It works like a real chemical plant that decomposes, recycles and metabolizes.

The liver will play an active role in the process of digestion through the production of bile. Bile is a mixture of water, bile salts, bile acids, cholesterol, bilirubin, inorganic salts, and many other constituents, such as inorganic ions (sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium, chloride and bicarbonate). Hepatocytes in the liver will produce bile, which then will pass through the bile ducts to be stored in the gallbladder.

The primary digestive function of bile will be to aid in the dispersion and digestion of fat in the lumen of the small intestine. Bile will be formed initially in the hepatocyte (liver cell), and the rate of formation will depend primarily on the rate at which bile acids will be secreted into the bile channels, or canaliculi. A portion of the bile flow, however, will be related to factors other than the secretion of bile acids; in particular, it will depend on the secretion of sodium from the hepatocyte and will be also partially governed by the action of intestinal hormones such as secretin, cholecystokinin (CCK), and gastrin. The total bile acid pool at any one time will be about 3 grams, almost all of which will be contained at rest in the gallbladder. In its passage through the biliary tract, hepatic bile will be concentrated to as little as one-tenth of its original volume by the selective reabsorption of water, chloride, and bicarbonate. This concentration process will take place largely in the gallbladder, and, as a result, bile from this organ will be much thicker in density and darker in colour (owing to the concentration of pigments) than will be bile emerging from the liver. Distension of the duodenum, particularly by a meal containing fat, will provoke the secretion of CCK, a hormone that will cause contractions of the muscular layer in the wall of the gallbladder.

Between meals, secreted bile will be stored in the gall bladder, where 80-90% of the water and electrolytes can be absorbed, leaving the bile acids and cholesterol. During a meal, the smooth muscles in the gallbladder wall will contract, leading to the bile being secreted into the duodenum to rid the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of waste stored in the bile as well as aid in the absorption of dietary fats and oils by solubilizing them using bile acids. When food containing fats will reach the duodenum, the cells of the duodenum will release the hormone cholecystokinin to stimulate the gallbladder to release bile. Bile will travel through the bile ducts and will be released into the duodenum where it will emulsify large masses of fat.

The emulsification of fats by bile will turn the large clumps of fat into smaller pieces that will have more surface area and will be therefore easier to be digested. This path by which bile will be secreted by the liver then transported to the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine, will be designated as the biliary tract. It begins with the appearance of two large ducts, the right and left hepatic ducts, at the porta hepatis, a groove that separates two lobes on the right side of the liver. Just below the porta hepatis, these 1 to 2 cm ducts join to form the hepatic duct, which proceeds for another 2 to 3 cm and is joined by the cystic duct, leading from the gallbladder. The resulting common bile duct will progress downward through the head of the pancreas. There it will be joined by the main pancreatic duct at a slightly dilated area called the hepatopancreatic ampulla, which is located in the wall of the inner curve of the descending duodenum, and terminates in the lumen of the duodenum at a 2 to 3 cm elevation designated as the duodenal papilla.

Aside from inorganic ions (sodium, potassium, calcium, magnesium, chloride, and bicarbonate), bile contains protein and bilirubin; the latter will be responsible for its golden colour in dilute solutions and dark amber colour in concentrate. It is richest, however, in bile acids (derived from cholesterol in the hepatocyte), phospholipids (largely phosphatidyl choline, or lecithin), and cholesterol. Cholesterol is a four-ringed sterol that will be absorbed from the diet or synthesized by the liver and the intestinal lining. Normally not soluble in watery secretions, cholesterol will be carried in a colloidal solution in bile in the form of mixed aggregates of complexes containing bile acids and lecithin. In the absence of adequate amounts of lecithin and bile acids, cholesterol will crystallize. The liver will synthesize two types of primary bile acid from cholesterol, called chenodeoxycholic acid and cholic acid. In the lower intestine bacterial action will remove one of the hydroxyl groups (dehydroxylation) from cholic acid, changing it to deoxycholic acid. This secondary bile acid will appear in bile because it will be absorbed from the intestine and recirculated to the liver. Chenodeoxycholic acid will be also dehydroxylated in the intestine, becoming lithocholic acid, a small amount of which will be also reabsorbed and appears in normal bile.

Bilirubin present in bile will be a product of the digestion by the liver of worn out red blood cells. Specific cells in the liver will catch and destroy old, worn out red blood cells and pass their components on to hepatocytes. Hepatocytes will metabolize hemoglobin, the red oxygen-carrying pigment of red blood cells, into the components heme and globin. Globin protein will be further broken down and used as an energy source for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The iron-containing heme group will not be recycled by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and will be converted into the pigment bilirubin and added to bile to be excreted from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Bilirubin will give bile its distinctive greenish color. Intestinal bacteria further will convert bilirubin into the brown pigment stercobilin, which will give feces their brown color.

The hepatocytes of the liver are tasked with many of the important metabolic jobs that support the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Because all of the blood leaving the digestive system will pass through the hepatic portal vein, the liver will be the one responsible for metabolizing carbohydrate, lipids, and proteins into biologically useful materials.

The digestive process will break down carbohydrates into the monosaccharide glucose, which will be used by cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as a primary energy source. Blood entering the liver through the hepatic portal vein will be extremely rich in glucose from digested food. Hepatocytes will absorb much of this glucose and will store it as the macromolecule glycogen, a branched polysaccharide that will allow the hepatocytes to pack away large amounts of glucose and quickly release glucose between meals. The absorption and release of glucose by the hepatocytes will help to maintain homeostasis and to protect the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from dangerous spikes and drops in the blood glucose level.

Fatty acids in the blood passing through the liver will be absorbed by hepatocytes and metabolized to produce energy in the form of ATP molecules. Glycerol, another lipid component, will be converted into glucose by hepatocytes through the process of gluconeogenesis. Hepatocytes will also be able to produce lipids like cholesterol, phospholipids, and lipoproteins that will be used by other cells throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Much of the cholesterol produced by hepatocytes will get excreted from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as a component of bile.

Dietary proteins will be broken down into their component amino acids by the digestive process before being passed on to the hepatic portal vein. Amino acids entering the liver will require metabolic processing before they can be used as an energy source. Hepatocytes will first remove the amine groups of the amino acids and convert them into ammonia and eventually urea. The remaining parts of the amino acids will be broken down into ATP molecules or converted into new glucose molecules through the process of gluconeogenesis.

As blood from the digestive organs will pass through the hepatic portal circulation, the hepatocytes of the liver will monitor the contents of the blood and they will remove many potentially toxic substances before they can reach the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Enzymes in hepatocytes will metabolize many of these toxins such as alcohol and drugs into their inactive metabolites. And in order to keep hormone levels within homeostatic limits, the liver also will metabolize and remove from circulation hormones produced by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” own glands.

The liver will also provide storage of many essential nutrients, vitamins, and minerals obtained from blood passing through the hepatic portal system. Glucose will be transported into hepatocytes under the influence of the hormone insulin and will be stored as the polysaccharide glycogen. Hepatocytes also will absorb and store fatty acids from digested triglycerides. The storage of these nutrients will allow the liver to maintain the homeostasis of blood glucose. The liver in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” also will store vitamins and minerals — such as vitamins A, D, E, K, and B12, and the minerals iron and copper — in order to provide a constant supply of these essential substances to the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The liver will be responsible for the production of several vital protein components of blood plasma: prothrombin, fibrinogen, and albumins. Prothrombin and fibrinogen proteins are coagulation factors that will be involved in the formation of blood clots. Albumins are proteins that will maintain the isotonic environment of the blood so that cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” do not gain or lose water in the presence of body fluids.

The liver will also produce a vital substance designated as glutathione (γ -glutamylcysteinylglycine), with molecular formula $C_{10}H_{17}N_3O_6S$, and which is vital for the proper functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Glutathione will also be produced by neurons (nerve cells) in the central nervous system. Glutathione, an endogenous component of cellular metabolism, and which is found in relatively high concentrations in many tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is a tripeptide comprised of three amino acids: cysteine, glutamic acid, and glycine. The glutamic acid is attached via its side chain to the N-terminus of cysteinylglycine.

There are two different forms of glutathione: reduced glutathione (GSH, or L-glutathione), which is the active form, and oxidized glutathione (GSSG, or glutathione disulfide), which is the inactive form. The reduced form of glutathione GSH and oxidized form of glutathione GSSG work together with other redox-active compounds such as NADPH to maintain and regulate cellular redox status.

As GSH is synthesized in the cytosol from cysteine, glycine, and glutamate, and is abundant in nearly all cell compartments, for example, cytosol, nuclei, and mitochondria, it becomes oxidized and inactive, thus turning into GSSG, after reduction of target molecules. The inactive GSSG can be recycled back into the active GSH form, under the action of the glutathione reductase enzyme. The glutathione reductase (GR) is a homodimer containing one FAD per monomer that catalyzes the reduction of glutathione disulfide (GSSG) to glutathione (GSH), using NADPH as electron donor. Thus, efficient regeneration of GSH from GSSG requires sufficient supply of the reduced coenzyme NADPH. The synthesis of GSH is catalyzed by L-cysteine –ligase and glutathione synthase, while the oxidation, conjugation, and hydrolysis contribute to the consumption of GSH. Conjugation with endogenous and exogenous electrophiles is responsible for a large portion of cellular GSH consumption. The balance between its production, consumption, and transportation determine and strictly regulate the intracellular and extracellular GSH levels.

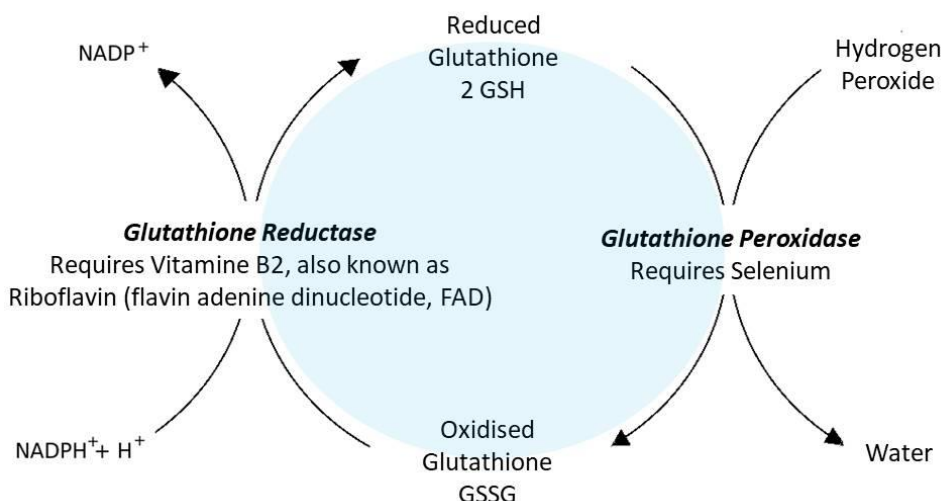

Of the three component amino acids of glutathione (that is to say, cysteine, glutamic acid, and glycine), cysteine has the lowest intracellular concentration. Because de “novus synthesis” — the synthesis of complex molecules from simple molecules such as sugars or amino acids, as opposed to recycling after partial degradation — is the primary mechanism by which glutathione is replenished, cysteine availability can limit the rate of glutathione synthesis; in which case, cysteine availability must be increased through appropriate diet.⁶⁷³

⁶⁷³ Cysteine is available in many fresh food sources such as nuts, seeds, grains and legumes, allium vegetables and sulfur rich vegetables in all their forms. Cysteine is also available as a dietary supplement, through the acetylated variant of the reduced form of cysteine and which is designated as: N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC).

N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC), with the chemical formula $C_5H_9NO_3S$, is a synthetic amino acid derivative of cysteine. This organic compound is a thiol (that is to say, an organic chemical compounds similar to the alcohols and phenols but containing a sulfur atom in place of the oxygen atom), comprising in its structure a sulfhydryl group –SH (an analogue of the hydroxyl –OH function of alcohol molecules, but whose O, oxygen, is replaced by an S, sulfur). It is this group that gives antioxidant properties to N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC). In addition, an acetyl group (acyl group of acetic acid) is also present in its chemical structure. Attached to a nitrogen atom, this function is capable of breaking the disulfide bonds of viscous secretions in the mucous membranes. That is to say, this grouping gives it the ability to liquefy thick mucus, like a mucolytic agent.

N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC) is, in fact, produced by the acetylation of L-cysteine. This is a reaction that involves adding an acetyl group –COCH₃ to the N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC)

The activities of the enzymes associated with GSH metabolism are regulated at transcriptional, translational, and posttranslational levels.

For the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to function properly and stay healthy, it is important to have a balance of antioxidants and “free radicals”⁶⁷⁴, which it amino acid. This modification can occur naturally in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” thanks to the intervention of specific enzymes, called acetyltransferases. This reaction is a post-translational modification that most proteins commonly undergo.

L-cysteine acetylation can also be done synthetically, especially during the manufacture of a food supplement based on this molecule. This will have the advantage of being easier to absorb by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

N-Acetyl Cysteine (NAC) is an indirect precursor of glutathione, by increasing the level of L-cysteine in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Following a deacetylation reaction, the acetyl group of this compound is removed and cysteine is obtained, which is responsible for the synthesis of glutathione.

⁶⁷⁴ Free radicals are molecules, which possess an unpaired electron. Most molecules contain even numbers of electrons, and the covalent chemical bonds holding the atoms together within a molecule normally consist of pairs of electrons jointly shared by the atoms linked by the bond. Most free radicals arise by cleavage of normal electron-pair bonds, every cleavage having produced two separate entities, each of which contains a single, unpaired electron from the broken bond (in addition to all the rest of the normal, paired electrons of the atoms). The presence of an unpaired electron in free radicals results in certain common properties that are shared by most radicals.

Although free radicals contain unpaired electrons, they may be electrically neutral. Because of their odd electrons, free radicals are usually highly reactive. They combine with one contains. An imbalance between antioxidants and “free radicals” in favour of “free radicals” can cause what is designated as “oxidative cell damage” or “oxidative stress”⁶⁷⁵. “Free radicals” are formed as normal products of aerobic metabolism, another, or with single atoms that also carry free electrons, to give ordinary molecules, all of whose electrons are paired; or they react with intact molecules, abstracting parts of the molecules to complete their own electron pairs and generating new free radicals in the process. In all these reactions, each simple free radical, because of its single unpaired electron, is able to combine with one other radical or atom containing a single unpaired electron. Under special circumstances, diradicals can be formed with unpaired electrons on each of two atoms (giving an overall even number of electrons), and these diradicals have a combining capacity of two.

Free radicals are produced continuously in cells either as accidental by-products of metabolism or deliberately during, for example, phagocytosis. The most important reactants in free radical biochemistry in aerobic cells are oxygen and its radical derivatives (superoxide and hydroxyl radical), hydrogen peroxide and transition metals. There a comprehensive array of antioxidant defences to prevent free radical formation or limit their damaging effects in cells. These include enzymes to decompose peroxides, proteins to sequester transition metals and a range of compounds to “scavenge” free radicals. Reactive free radicals formed within cells can oxidise biomolecules and lead to cell destruction and tissue injury. They attack important macromolecules leading to cell damage and homeostatic disruption. Targets of free radicals include all kinds of molecules in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Among them, lipids, nucleic acids, and proteins are the major targets.

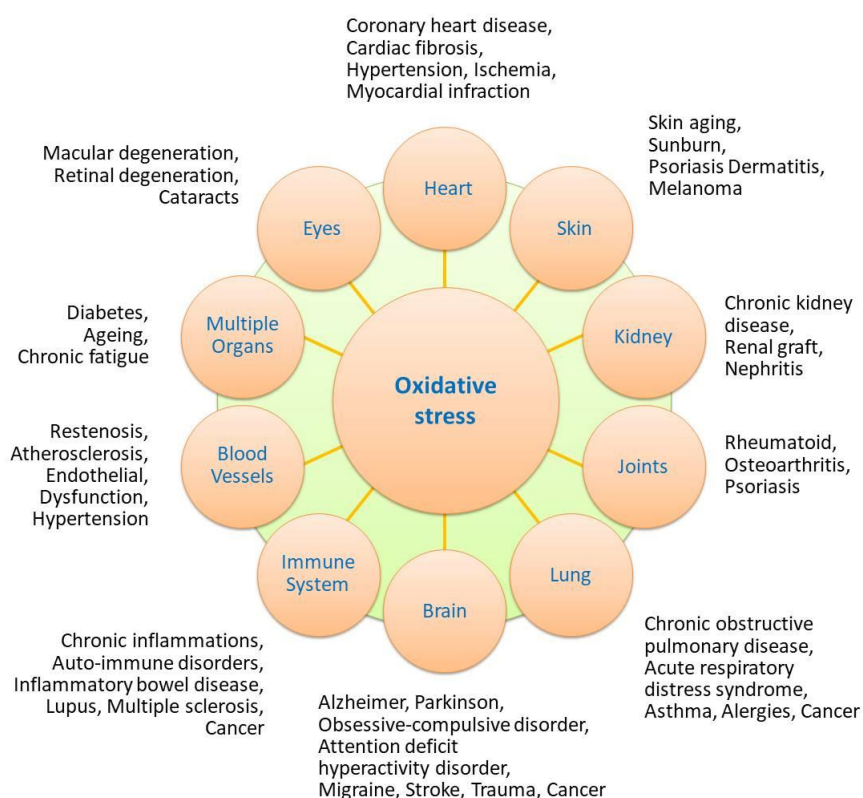

⁶⁷⁵ The term is used to describe the condition of oxidative damage resulting when the critical balance between free radical generation and antioxidant defenses is unfavorable.

Oxidative cell damage or oxidative stress, arising as a result of an imbalance between free radical production and antioxidant defenses, is associated with damage to a wide range of molecular species including lipids, proteins, and nucleic acids. Short-term oxidative stress cellular respiration driven by the electron transport chain in the mitochondria, but can be produced at elevated rates under pathophysiological conditions. As you would know already, the electron transport chain is responsible for generating ATP molecules, the main source of energy for a cell to function. A key molecule that helps “jump start” the electron transport chain, is NADH (or nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide) molecule, which serves as the electron donor (i.e., the H in may occur in tissues injured by trauma, infection, heat injury, hypertoxia, toxins, and excessive exercise. These injured tissues produce increased radical generating enzymes (e.g., xanthine oxidase, lipogenase, cyclooxygenase) activation of phagocytes, release of free iron, copper ions, or a disruption of the electron transport chains of oxidative phosphorylation, producing excess reactive oxygen species. The initiation, promotion, and progression of cancer, as well as the side-effects of radiation and chemotherapy, have been linked to the imbalance between reactive oxygen species and the antioxidant defense system. Reactive oxygen species have been implicated in the induction and complications of diabetes mellitus, age-related eye disease, and neurodegenerative diseases such as Parkinson's disease.

the NADH). NADH molecule is often referred to as a “coenzyme”, even though it is not an enzyme (a protein). The electron transport chain consists of a group of proteins (and some lipids), which work together to pass electrons “down the line”. In the presence of oxygen, ATP molecule is formed, providing energy for many cellular functions. However, some electrons can “escape” the electron transport chain and combine with oxygen to form a very unstable form of oxygen called a superoxide radical (O_2^-).

As you would know already, an oxide is any chemical compound — that is to say, a chemical substance consisting of two or more different chemically bonded chemical elements, with a fixed ratio determining the composition —, which contains one or more oxygen atoms. Oxides can be oxides containing oxide anions (O^{2-}), peroxides containing peroxide anions (O_2^{2-}) or superoxides containing superoxide anion (O_2^-).

Peroxides are compounds, which are composed of an oxygen-oxygen single bond. This can be either in the form of an anion or in between other atoms of the molecule. Hydrogen peroxide is the simplest peroxide that can be found. The main feature, which allows identifying a peroxide compound, is the presence of this O–O covalent bond. Sometimes, this bond can be observed as an anion in an ionic compound. Then, it is given in symbols as O_2^{2-} . This is called the peroxide anion. When the O–O bond is found in a covalent compound, it is called a peroxy group or peroxide group. In the peroxide group, the oxidation state of one oxygen atom is -1. Normally oxygen prefers to show the oxidation state 0 or -2. But since two oxygen atoms are bonded to each other, one oxygen atom gets a -1 oxidation state. In the peroxide anion, one oxygen atom has -1 electrical charge since the overall charge of the anion is -2. Ionic peroxides are composed of a peroxide anion bonded to alkali metal ions or alkaline earth metal ions as the cation. Some examples are sodium peroxide (Na_2O_2), potassium peroxide (K_2O_2), Magnesium peroxide (MgO), etc. Covalent peroxide compounds are composed of O–O single bond directly bonded to other atoms in the molecule; for example, hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) and peroxydisulfuric acid ($H_2S_2O_8$).

Superoxides are compounds containing the anion O_2^- . In the superoxide group, the oxidation state of one oxygen atom is -1/2. Normally molecular oxygen (dioxygen) is a diradical containing two unpaired electrons; it prefers to show the oxidation state 0 or -2. But since there are two oxygen atoms are bonded to each other, one oxygen atom gets a -1/2 oxidation state. A superoxide results from the addition of an electron which fills one of the two degenerate molecular orbitals, leaving a charged ionic species with a single unpaired electron and a net negative charge of -1. In the superoxide anion, one oxygen atom has -1/2 electrical charge since the overall charge of the anion is -1. This anion is also composed of O–O single bond. The superoxide anion is highly reactive because the $-1/2$ oxidation state is not stable. Superoxide anion is considered as a free radical that exhibit paramagnetism. That is due to the presence of an unpaired electron on one oxygen atom. Examples for superoxide compounds include sodium superoxide (NaO_2) and potassium superoxide (KO_2). Only alkali metals tend to form superoxide compounds. They form the superoxide compound via direct reaction with O_2 . The superoxides of alkali metals include for example NaO_2 , KO_2 . Here, the metal has +1 electrical charge. Correspondingly, the anion should have -1 electrical charge in order to neutralize the compound. When these superoxide compounds are dissolved in water, the system undergoes disproportionation rapidly. Disproportionation, also called dismutation, is a reaction in which a substance whose pertinent element having a specific oxidation state is simultaneously oxidized and reduced in two separate half-reactions, yielding two other products containing the same pertinent element. A convenient example is Manganese (III) oxide (Mn_2O_3) becoming Mn^{2+} and Manganese dioxide (MnO_2). Disproportionation reactions follow the form:

where A, A', and A'' are all different chemical species.

The reverse reaction of disproportionation is called comproportionation. Here are two examples of disproportionation:

Example 1: The disproportionation of superoxide free radical to hydrogen peroxide and oxygen, catalysed in living systems by the enzyme “superoxide dismutase”:

The oxidation state of oxygen is $-1/2$ in the superoxide free radical anion, -1 in hydrogen peroxide and 0 in dioxygen.

Here, the superoxide dismutase is an enzyme that alternately catalyzes the dismutation of the superoxide radical (O_2^-) into ordinary molecular oxygen (O_2) and hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2). This superoxide dismutase enzyme is also an important endogenous antioxidant in nearly all cells exposed to oxygen in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. There are three forms of superoxide dismutase, which are present in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Superoxide dismutase 1, known as superoxide dismutase CuZnSOD, and denoted SOD1, is an enzyme located in the cytoplasm where it is synthesized, and which is encoded by the SOD1 gene, located on chromosome 21. It is a 32 kDa homodimer which forms a β -barrel and contains an intramolecular disulfide bond and a binuclear Cu/Zn site in each subunit. This Cu/Zn site holds the copper and a zinc ion and is responsible for catalyzing the disproportionation of superoxide to hydrogen peroxide and dioxygen. Superoxide dismutase 1 will bind copper and zinc ions and is one of three superoxide dismutases responsible for destroying free superoxide radicals in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The encoded multiple forms of enzymes is a soluble cytoplasmic and mitochondrial intermembrane space protein, acting as a homodimer to convert naturally occurring, but harmful, superoxide radicals to molecular oxygen and hydrogen peroxide. Hydrogen peroxide can then be broken down by another enzyme called catalase.

Catalase (CAT) is a 240 kilodalton (kDa) tetrameric protein with four identical iron-containing heme groups that allow it to react with hydrogen peroxide. It is encoded by CTT1 gene mapping to chromosome 11. Each polypeptide subunit of this tetrameric protein is 60 kDa in weight and contains a single a ferric heme and a bound molecule of NADPH. The catalase enzyme uses either iron or manganese as a cofactor and catalyzes the degradation or reduction of hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) to water and molecular oxygen, consequently completing the detoxification process imitated by the superoxide dismutase enzymes. The catalase enzyme is located primarily in the peroxisomes — which are membrane-bound oxidative organelles found in the cytoplasm of virtually all eukaryotic cells — but absent in mitochondria of cells. This implies that the breakdown of hydrogen peroxide to water and oxygen is carried out by another enzyme, known as glutathione peroxidase, in the cell mitochondria. Catalase is abundant in cells, where it continuously scouts for hydrogen peroxide molecules. The activities of the catalase enzyme are highest in the liver, kidney, and red blood cells and lower in the brain, heart, and skeletal muscle.⁶⁷⁶ In normal physiology, catalase ⁶⁷⁶ All plant cells contain catalase; some have higher levels of catalase than others. Young, newly sprouting plants such as wheat sprouts, lentils, clover, Brussels sprouts and the sprouts of dark green plants contain much more catalase than older ones. Sunflower seeds, yeast, cheese and dairy products contain some catalase.

All fruits contain catalase, some have more than others: avocados, pineapple, cherries, apricots, bananas, watermelon, kiwi and peaches have the highest levels of catalase among fruit when eaten fresh and raw.

Intake of supplements such as manganese, copper, zinc and selenium will facilitate the production of catalase by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

functions in the peroxisome to breakdown the H_2O_2 generated by peroxisomal β -oxidation of long-chain fatty acids. If the intracellular H_2O_2 reaches sufficiently high levels, catalase in peroxisome can also break down H_2O_2 diffusing from the other sources. Catalase converts two H_2O_2 molecules to water and oxygen only at relatively high H_2O_2 levels. At lower levels, when a second H_2O_2 may be in limited supply, catalase may act as a peroxidase and oxidize a variety of substrates.

Catalase also reacts efficiently with hydrogen donors such as methanol, ethanol, formic acid, or phenols with peroxidase activity. The activity of catalase takes place in two steps. A molecule of hydrogen peroxide oxidizes the heme to an oxyferryl species. A porphyrin cation radical is generated when one oxidation equivalent is removed from iron and one from the porphyrin ring. A second hydrogen peroxide molecule acts as a reducing agent to regenerate the resting state enzyme, producing a molecule of oxygen and water. Hydrogen peroxide though at low amounts tends to regulate some physiological processes such as signaling in cell proliferation, cell death, carbohydrate metabolism, mitochondrial function, and platelet activation and maintenance of normal thiol redox-balance.

Superoxide dismutase 2, also known as manganese-dependent superoxide dismutase (MnSOD), and denoted SOD2, is an enzyme located in the mitochondria where it is synthesized, which is encoded by the SOD2 gene on chromosome 6. It encodes a mitochondrial protein that forms a homotetramer and binds one manganese ion per subunit. This protein binds to the superoxide byproducts of oxidative phosphorylation and converts them to hydrogen peroxide and diatomic oxygen. As a member of the iron/manganese superoxide dismutase family, this protein transforms toxic superoxide, a byproduct of the mitochondrial electron transport chain, into hydrogen peroxide and diatomic oxygen. This function allows the superoxide dismutase 2 to clear mitochondrial reactive oxygen species (ROS) and, as a result, confer protection against cell death. As a result, this protein plays an antiapoptotic role against oxidative stress, ionizing radiation, and inflammatory cytokines.

Superoxide dismutase 3, known as extracellular superoxide dismutase CuZnSOD, and denoted SOD3, is an enzyme located outside the cell where it is synthesized. The protein is secreted into the extracellular space and forms a glycosylated homotetramer, which is anchored to the extracellular matrix (ECM) and cell surfaces through an interaction with heparan sulfate proteoglycan and collagen. A fraction of the protein is cleaved near the C-terminus before secretion to generate circulating tetramers that do not interact with the ECM.

These enzymes require essential minerals as co-factors for optimum catalytic activity. The essential minerals ions which are bound by superoxide dismutases are iron (Fe), zinc (Zn) copper (Cu) and manganese (Mn). Superoxide dismutase 1 and superoxide dismutase 3 contain copper and zinc, whereas superoxide dismutase 2, the mitochondrial enzyme, has manganese in its reactive centre.

The levels of superoxide dismutase enzymes in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will decline with its increasing age, whereas free radical formation will increase. Therefore, adequate daily superoxide dismutase enzymes supplementation will help keep proper levels for the proper functioning of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁶⁷⁷

Example 2: The disproportionation of hydrogen peroxide into water and oxygen catalysed by either potassium iodide or the enzyme catalase:

The main difference between peroxide and superoxide is that the oxidation state of oxygen in peroxide is -1 whereas the oxidation state of oxygen in superoxide is -1/2.

The superoxide radical is a reactive oxygen species; it is a “free radical”. Under normal aerobic physiological conditions, the most frequently generated mitochondrial reactive oxygen species in the cell are superoxide (O_2^-) and hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2). Such reactive oxygen species are generated by several different cellular sources, two of which are: (1) membrane-associated reduced ⁶⁷⁷ Superoxide dismutase is available in many fresh food sources. The top superoxide dismutase foods include:

- Marine Phytoplankton;
- Melons such as Casaba, Honeydew and Cantaloupe;
- Cruciferous Vegetables;
- Polyphenol-rich tea;
- Essene or Sprouted Wheat, Sprouted Soy or Sprouted Corn;
- Goji Berries;
- Black Chokeberry Extract;
- Curcuminoid-piperine combination (Turmeric/Black Pepper).

Superoxide dismutase is also available as a dietary supplement, which are often made from a combination of wheat and melon extract.

nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide phosphate (NADPH) oxidase, and (2) the mitochondrial electron transport chain at the inner mitochondrial membrane.

When a molecule or atom in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” loses an electron, thus leading to the formation of a “free radical”, this “free radical” can react strongly with neighboring molecules or atoms in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to “extract” an electron from them and return to its stable or equilibrium state. On the other hand, the first reaction of the “extraction” suggests that an electron is now missing from the molecule or the subsequent atom and the latter will therefore, in turn, “extract” an electron from their neighboring molecules or atoms. This will cause a chain reaction of electron “extraction”, which will wear down and cause “oxidative cellular damage” to the cells and tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” if such reactions spread and do not stop after a while. Antioxidants, on the other hand, are the other side of the coin. They can therefore pair and share an electron belonging to them, which stops the chain reaction initially produced by free radicals.

By pairing with “free radicals” and reorganizing its structure, glutathione helps stop such chain reactions before that they damage tissues. These reactions are called redox reactions. On a visual scale, these reactions will constantly take place in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but also outside, like the rust that forms on buildings or automobiles. As you would know already, oxygen in the air is an oxidizer that damages metal and causes it to rust when exposed for a long time.

Cells are protected against oxidative stress by an interacting network of antioxidant enzymes, working together — synergistically — to control oxidative stress. In the case of a superoxide radical (O_2^-) for example, the superoxide released by processes such as oxidative phosphorylation is first converted to hydrogen peroxide and then further reduced to give water. This detoxification pathway is the result of multiple enzymes, with superoxide dismutases catalyzing the first step and then catalases and various peroxidases removing hydrogen peroxide.

The various antioxidants and supporting cellular nutrients work on different types of free radicals and in different parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Vitamin E is the best antioxidant within the plasma membrane. Vitamin C is most effective within the cytoplasm. Glutathione works most efficiently within the cell itself. Vitamin C actually replenishes vitamin E and intracellular glutathione so it can be used over and over again. Alpha lipoic acid also regenerates vitamin E and glutathione. In addition, these antioxidants need optimal levels of the B vitamins — folic acid, vitamin B1, B2, B6, and B12 — in order to perform at optimal levels. In order to perform their assigned “specific tasks” correctly, they also need adequate amounts of essential antioxidant minerals such as: selenium, manganese, copper, zinc, and iron.

Glutathione is the most important endogenous antioxidant in cells, protecting them from active oxygen compounds that can destroy cellular components (membranes, DNA) within microseconds, even inside the cell. It is called the endogenous “master antioxidant” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It acts as an intracellular antioxidant, a free radical scavenger and a detoxifying agent, which helps to keep the necessary balance in place, by minimizing the damage caused by free radicals and by limiting the accumulation of toxins. By binding to some of these toxins, it will transform them into water-soluble compounds, easily eliminated by emunctories⁶⁷⁸.

⁶⁷⁸ The term “emunctories” come from the Latin root, ēmungere, for wiping or cleansing, and describes an organ or duct that removes or carries waste from the “Subjective

As you would know already, an antioxidant is a molecule stable enough to donate an electron to a rampaging free radical and neutralize it, thus reducing its capacity to damage. An antioxidant delays or inhibits cellular damage mainly through its free radical scavenging property. The low-molecular-weight antioxidants can safely interact with free radicals and terminate the chain reaction before vital molecules are damaged. Some of such antioxidants, including glutathione, ubiquinol, and uric acid, are produced during normal metabolism in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Other lighter antioxidants are found in the diet. Although there are several enzymes system within the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that scavenge free radicals, the principle micronutrient (vitamins) antioxidants are vitamin E (α -tocopherol)⁶⁷⁹, vitamin C (ascorbic ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The etymological evolution into modern Italian, emungere, the verb “to drain” is more indicative of the term’s modern use. The etymological relationship between the origins of the term mucous and emunctories finds a relationship to its use in modern naturopathic medicine. Emunctories describe the excretory organs or ducts with the physiological function, which involves the draining or the removing waste materials from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The primary emunctories, classically, the bowel, kidney, lungs and skin, are the most efficient routes of elimination. When these are not functioning optimally, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will attempt to compensate and use the secondary emunctories, including the stomach, liver, pancreas, spleen, lymphatic system, prostate and mucosal surfaces. These secondary emunctories are not as efficient at elimination as this is not the primary function of these organs or tissues. Consequently, when the primary emunctories are not functioning optimally, the secondary emunctories may also become perturbed and respond with a generalized inflammation.

⁶⁷⁹ The term “vitamin E” describes a family of eight plant-derived fat-soluble molecules with antioxidant activities: four tocopherol isoforms (α -, β -, γ -, and δ -tocopherol) and four tocotrienol isoforms (α -, β -, γ -, and δ -tocotrienol). Only one form, α -tocopherol, meets the requirements of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In the liver of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, α -tocopherol is the form of vitamin E that is preferentially bound to α -tocopherol transfer protein (α -TTP) and incorporated into lipoproteins that transport α -tocopherol in the blood for delivery to extrahepatic tissues. Consequently, it is the predominant form of vitamin E found in the blood and tissues of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The main function of α -tocopherol in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is that of a fat-soluble antioxidant. Fats, which are an integral part of all cell membranes, are vulnerable to damage through lipid peroxidation by free radicals. α -Tocopherol is uniquely suited to intercept peroxy radicals and thus prevent a chain reaction of lipid oxidation. When a molecule of α -tocopherol neutralizes a free radical, it is oxidized and its antioxidant capacity is lost. Other antioxidants, such as vitamin C, are capable of regenerating the antioxidant capacity of α -tocopherol. Aside from maintaining the integrity of cell membranes, α -tocopherol protects the fats in low-density lipoproteins acid)⁶⁸⁰, and B-carotene. The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” cannot manufacture these micronutrients, so they must be supplied in the diet. Antioxidants act as radical scavenger, hydrogen donor, electron donor, peroxide decomposer, singlet oxygen quencher, enzyme inhibitor, synergist, and metal-chelating agents. Both enzymatic and nonenzymatic antioxidants exist in the intracellular and extracellular environment to detoxify reactive oxygen species.

(LDLs) from oxidation. Lipoproteins are particles composed of lipids and proteins, which transport fats through the bloodstream.

It is thus that, the biological form of ascorbic acid that has vitamin status and is called vitamin C is L-ascorbic acid. There are also 3 other isomers of ascorbic acid but they cannot be considered as vitamins because they are non-essential and they do not meet the criteria mentioned above, these isomers are: L-isoascorbic acid, D-ascorbic acid, and D-isoascorbic acid. There is also the oxidized form of L-ascorbic acid, which is dehydro-ascorbic acid. The latter is very quickly reduced to L-ascorbic acid. It is considered to be the precursor of vitamin C. The difference between the two, if we observe the general chemical formula of each, is that the oxidized form lacks 2 hydrogen atoms: L-ascorbic acid (C₆H₈O₆) and dehydroascorbic acid (C₆H₆O₆).

Vitamin C is thus a water soluble vitamin. It plays an essential role in the major part of all metabolic reactions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is essential for immune reactions because L-ascorbic acid has important anti-inflammatory, immunomodulatory, antioxidant, antithrombotic, and antiviral properties. These properties help the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to fight against the accumulation of heavy metals such as lead, mercury and cadmium. In addition, the antioxidant activity of L-ascorbic acid helps to neutralize free radicals, thus facilitating the protection of the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from “oxidative stress” and also helping to strengthen the immune system. The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” has endogenous defense systems (proper to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”). It can also use exogenous systems (to be ingested) to fight against the harmful effects of “oxidative stress”: vitamins C and E are the most important; carotenoids and polyphenols also participate in defense.

Vitamin C regenerates vitamin E and vice versa. This major antioxidant role also explains the positive role of vitamin C in the prevention of cardiovascular diseases, cataracts, certain cancers and infections. By being involved in the synthesis of collagen, vitamin C participates in the synthesis of catecholamines and certain neuro-endocrine hormones. It facilitates the transformation of cholesterol and helps in liver detoxification. It helps the absorption of iron from the intestine. It inhibits the synthesis of nitrosamines, carcinogenic substances.

Reactive oxygen species comprise both free radical and non-free radical oxygen intermediates such as hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2), superoxide (O_2^-), singlet oxygen ($^1\text{O}_2$), and the hydroxyl radical (OH^\cdot). These species are formed by the metabolism of oxygen in mitochondria, ionizing radiation, UV radiation, xenobiotic catabolism and a variety of cellular enzymes including Xanthine Oxidoreductase (XOR), NADPH oxidases (NO_x), Aldehyde Oxidase (AO), mitochondrial electron transport proteins and dysfunctional (uncoupled) Nitric Oxide Synthases (NOS).

The antioxidants taking part in the defense systems of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” act at different levels such as preventive, radical scavenging, repair and de novo, and the fourth line of defense, i.e., the adaptation.

The first line of defense is the preventive antioxidants, which suppress the formation of free radicals. To suppress reactions, such as metal-induced decompositions of hydroperoxides and hydrogen peroxide, the antioxidants (superoxide dismutase, catalase, and glutathione peroxidase) reduce hydroperoxides and hydrogen peroxide beforehand to alcohols and water, respectively, without generation of free radicals and some proteins sequester metal ions. Glutathione peroxidase, glutathione-s-transferase, phospholipid hydroperoxide glutathione peroxidase (PHGPX), and peroxidase will decompose lipid hydroperoxides to corresponding alcohols. PHGPX is unique in that it can reduce hydroperoxides of phospholipids integrated into biomembranes. Glutathione peroxidase and catalase reduce hydrogen peroxide to water.

The second line of defense is the antioxidants that scavenge the active radicals to suppress chain initiation and/or break the chain propagation reactions. They neutralize or scavenge free radicals by donating electron to them, and in the process become free radicals themselves but of lesser damaging effects. These “new radicals” are easily neutralized and made completely harmless by other antioxidants in this group. Various endogenous radical-scavenging antioxidants are known: some are hydrophilic and others are lipophilic. Vitamin C, uric acid, bilirubin, albumin, and thiols are hydrophilic, radical-scavenging antioxidants, while vitamin E and ubiquinol are lipophilic radical-scavenging antioxidants. Vitamin E is the most potent radical-scavenging lipophilic antioxidant. For this second line of defense, glutathione helps transform the oxidized form of ascorbic acid into vitamin C and stimulates its antioxidant power. It also helps restore the antioxidant action of vitamin E.

The third line of defense is the repair and de novo antioxidants. This category of antioxidants only comes into play after free radical damage has occurred. They are de novo enzymes, which repair the damage caused by free radicals to biomolecules and reconstitute the damaged cell membrane. They are a group of enzymes for repair of damaged DNA, protein and lipids. They also do a sort of “clean up duty”, they recognize, breakdown and remove oxidized or damaged proteins, DNA and lipids, to prevent their accumulation which can be toxic to body tissues. Common examples include The DNA repair enzyme systems (polymerases, glycosylases and nucleases), proteolytic enzymes (proteinases, proteases and peptidases) which are located both in cytosol and mitochondria of cells.

The fourth line defense antioxidants, basically involves an adaptation mechanism in which the antioxidants utilize the signals required for free radicals production and reaction to prevent the formation or reaction of such free radicals. The signal generated from the free radical formed induces the formation and transport of an appropriate antioxidant to the right site.

Glutathione is an integral part of the biotransformation of xenobiotic substances, and serves to facilitate the protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from reducing agents. Glutathione conjugation, which is facilitated by a family of glutathione transferase enzymes, will facilitate the detoxification by binding electrophiles that could otherwise bind to proteins or nucleic acids, resulting in cellular damage and genetic mutations.

In addition to being an important intracellular antioxidant, glutathione will also play a part in the: metabolism of toxins and cancer-causing substances; natural creation and repair of DNA; production of protein and prostaglandin; activation of enzymes. Glutathione is also important as a cofactor for the enzyme glutathione peroxidase, in the uptake of amino acids, and in the synthesis of leukotrienes. As a substrate for glutathione S-transferase, this agent will react with a number of harmful chemical species, such as halides, epoxides and free radicals, to form harmless inactive products. In erythrocytes, these reactions will prevent oxidative damage through the reduction of methemoglobin and peroxides. Glutathione will also be involved in the formation and maintenance of disulfide bonds in proteins and in the transport of amino acids across cell membranes. It will also help with the breakdown of nutrients, and the regulation of many biological processes (including the immune response against viral pathogens).⁶⁸¹

⁶⁸¹ Glutathione is also readily found in certain foods, such as fruits and vegetables (Asparagus, Avocado, Banana, Broccoli, Carrot, Cauliflower, Cucumber, Grapefruit, Green Beans, Green Pepper, Green Squash, Lemon, Mango, Orange, Papaya, Parsley, Potato, Red

Glutathione plays an important role in a multitude of cellular processes, including cell differentiation, proliferation, and apoptosis⁶⁸². As a result, disturbances in glutathione homeostasis will be implicated in the etiology and/or progression of a number of diseases, which will affect the proper functioning of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Glutathione deficiency will manifest itself largely through an increased susceptibility to oxidative stress. In addition, imbalances in glutathione levels will affect the immune system function. Just as low intracellular glutathione levels will decrease cellular antioxidant capacity, elevated glutathione levels generally will increase antioxidant capacity and resistance to oxidative stress. It is thus that, maintaining proper glutathione levels and oxidation state are important for a number of critical cell functions, and disruptions in these processes will lead to many diseases, which will take place inside this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Some of these diseases include: neurodegenerative diseases, age-related pathologies, cancer, cardiovascular diseases, pulmonary diseases such as emphysema and asthma and to more acute lung diseases such as acute respiratory distress syndrome, cystic fibrosis, inflammatory and immune system diseases, hyperglycemia and diabetes, etc...

Pepper, Spinach, Strawberry, Tomato, Yellow Squash, etc...). It is also available in dietary supplement form and there are various forms of glutathione supplements available.

Glutathione is purported to slow down the aging process of cells, prevent cancer, and preserve memory. It also facilitate protection against a wide range of health problems, including: clogged arteries (atherosclerosis), Lyme disease, Alzheimer’s disease, chronic fatigue syndrome, colitis, high cholesterol, osteoarthritis, asthma, cataracts, diabetes, glaucoma, heart disease, hepatitis, liver disease, Parkinson’s disease, etc...

⁶⁸² Apoptosis describes the orchestrated collapse of a cell characterised by membrane blebbing, cell shrinkage, condensation of chromatin, and fragmentation of DNA followed by rapid engulfment of the disintegrated cell by neighbouring cells in an orderly fashion. It is a mechanism that allows cells to self-destruct when stimulated by the appropriate trigger. As a morphologically distinct form of programmed cell death, apoptosis is different from the other major process of cell death known as necrosis, which is a form of cell injury which results in the premature death of cells in living tissue by the destruction of cells or tissues by their own enzymes, especially those released by lysosomes. Apoptosis involves condensation of the nucleus and cytoplasm, followed by cellular partitioning into well-defined fragments for disposal. Apoptosis occurs on a cell-by-cell basis. For each affected cell, two primary phases are observed: one of initiation and a second of execution. The resulting cell remnants are processed for reuse. Both phases are complex and require exquisite organization of multiple cellular systems, including interactions between proteins and cellular membranes.

Besides its digestive function, the liver is also the primary organ of purification and filtration of blood in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. All the blood coming from the stomach and intestines, is loaded with nutrients and sometimes antigens and/or pathogens and “deleterious particles”, and is in its entirety directed to the liver through the portal vein. As part of its defined “specific work”, one of the key function of the liver is to purify the raw and unprocessed flow of blood that it receives, through the hepatic portal vein, from the intestine (carbohydrate, lipid, protein metabolism, xenobiotics...), of numerous substances (including bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...) that, in the “specific work” specifications of the liver, have been identified as harmful to the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It secretes the bile, which it produces, into the raw and unprocessed flow of blood, neutralizes and breaks down those harmful substances into non-toxic forms and easier to use for the remaining of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In accordance with its “specific work” specifications, through hepatic “specialized cells”, the liver filters out the resulting flow of blood, which is undergoing the cleansing/detoxification effects of bile (acids, salts, and other adequate cleansing constituents) and hepatic enzymes, into two streams: (1) the stream containing bile by-products; and (2) the stream containing the remaining processed flow of blood that is exempted of bile by-products. The stream containing bile by-products, those secondary product derived from the degradation of any substance (including bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...) that, in accordance with the “specific work” specifications of the liver, has been identified as harmful to the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is sent to the intestine, to leave the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the form of feces. As for the stream containing the remaining processed flow of blood, which is exempted of bile by-products and of harmful substances (such as bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...), the liver regulates its chemical levels and send the resulted “cleaned flow of blood and having chemical levels regulated”, which we designate as the “submicrofiltrate from the liver”, to the kidneys for further processing and regulation of homeostasis⁶⁸³ in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This “submicrofiltrate from the liver” is free of bacteria and harmful substances; it is not a “residue” of hepatic filtering and is certainly not toxic for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The “residue”, the “waste”, of the hepatic filtering has been excreted in the bile, will be sent to the intestine to leave the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the form of feces.

⁶⁸³ Any system in dynamic equilibrium tends to reach a steady state, a balance that resists outside forces of change. When such a system is disturbed, built-in regulatory devices respond to the departures to establish a new balance; such a process is one of feedback control. Homeostasis refers to any self-regulating “specific process” by which biological systems tend to maintain stability while adjusting to conditions that are optimal for survival. If homeostasis is successful, life continues; if unsuccessful, disaster shows up. The stability attained is actually a dynamic equilibrium, in which continuous change occurs yet relatively uniform conditions prevail.

The many functions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, beginning at the cellular level, operate as to not deviate from a narrow range of internal balance, a state known as dynamic equilibrium, despite changes in the external environment. Those changes in the external environment alter the composition of the extracellular fluid surrounding the individual cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but a narrow range must be maintained to stave off the death of cells, tissues, and organs.

On the cellular level, homeostasis is observable in the biochemical reactions that take place. Regulation of pH, temperature, oxygen, ion concentrations, and blood glucose concentration is necessary for enzymes to function optimally in the environment of the cell, and the consumption and formation of products must be kept in control as not to disrupt the internal environment of the cells as well. The cell will remain alive as long as the internal environment is favorable and can be a functioning part of the tissue to which it belongs. Cellular homeostasis maintains a number of regulated variables including cell volume, osmolarity, electrolyte concentration (e.g., Na⁺, K⁺, and Cl⁻ concentrations), pH, membrane potential, and concentrations of intracellular ions, proteins, nutrients, cholesterol, oxygen, and reactive oxygen species, etc...

Homeostasis is involved in every organ system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In a similar vein, no one organ system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” acts alone; regulation of temperature cannot occur without the cooperation of the integumentary system, nervous system, musculoskeletal system, and cardiovascular system at a minimum. Chemosensors in the carotid and aortic bodies measure arterial PCO₂ and PO₂, send the information to the brainstem (control center), to tell the effectors (the diaphragm and respiratory muscles) to alter breathing rate and tidal volume to return to balance. Altered reabsorption and secretion of inorganic ions are the result of chemosensors in the adrenal cortex (for potassium concentration), parathyroid gland (for calcium concentration), and kidney and carotid and aortic bodies (for sodium concentration) which help to bring these regulated variables back to the normal range.

Although homeostasis is central to understand internal regulation, allostasis, or maintaining stability through change, is worthy of mention, as it is also necessary for organisms to adapt to their environments. Allostasis considers the normal daily variations that exist in the internal system. As such, a difference between homeostasis and allostasis is that, although the goal of homeostasis is to reduce variability and maintain consistency, allostasis favors variability because the internal environment can adapt to various environmental encounters. Although the two concepts may differ, it is important to note the existence of each and their contribution to physiology.

THE PANCREAS

The pancreas is a long, narrow compound racemose gland that is situated transversely across the upper abdomen, behind the stomach and the spleen. The midportion of the pancreas lies against the vertebral column, the abdominal aorta, and the inferior vena cava.

The pancreas is irregularly prismatic in shape; its right extremity, being broad, is called the head, and is connected to the main portion of the organ, or body, by a slight constriction, the neck; while its left extremity gradually tapers to form the tail. Its length varies from 12.5 to 15 cm, and its weight from 60 to 100 grams.

The Head of the pancreas (caput pancreatis) is flattened from before backward, and is lodged within the curve of the duodenum. Its upper border is overlapped by the superior part of the duodenum and its lower overlaps the horizontal part; its right and left borders overlap in front, and insinuate themselves behind, the descending and ascending parts of the duodenum respectively. The angle of junction of the lower and left lateral borders forms a prolongation, termed the uncinata process. In the groove between the duodenum and the right lateral and lower borders in front are the anastomosing superior and inferior pancreaticoduodenal arteries; the common bile duct descends behind, close to the right border, to its termination in the descending part of the duodenum.

The greater part of the right half of the anterior surface of the pancreas is in contact with the transverse colon, only areolar tissue intervening. From its upper part the neck of the pancreas springs, its right limit being marked by a groove for the gastroduodenal artery. The lower part of the right half, below the transverse colon, is covered by peritoneum continuous with the inferior layer of the transverse mesocolon, and is in contact with the coils of the small intestine. The superior mesenteric artery passes down in front of the left half across the uncinata process; the superior mesenteric vein runs upward on the right side of the artery and, behind the neck, joins with the lienal vein to form the portal vein.

The posterior surface of the pancreas is in relation with the inferior vena cava, the common bile duct, the renal veins, the right crus of the diaphragm, and the aorta.

The Neck of the pancreas springs from the right upper portion of the front of the head. It is about 2.5 cm long, and is directed at first upward and forward, and then upward and to the left to join the body of the pancreas; it is somewhat flattened from above downward and backward. Its antero-superior surface supports the pylorus; its postero-inferior surface is in relation with the commencement of the portal vein; on the right it is grooved by the gastroduodenal artery.

The body of the pancreas (corpus pancreatis) is prismatic-like in shape, and has three surfaces: anterior, posterior, and inferior.

The anterior surface (facies anterior) is concave-like; and is directed forward and upward: it is covered by the postero-inferior surface of the stomach which rests upon it, the two organs being separated by the omental bursa. Where it joins the neck there is a well-marked prominence, the tuber omentale, which abuts against the posterior surface of the lesser omentum.

The posterior surface (facies posterior) is devoid of peritoneum, and is in contact with the aorta, the lienal vein, the left kidney and its vessels, the left suprarenal gland, the origin of the superior mesenteric artery, and the crura of the diaphragm.

The superior border (margo superior) is blunt and flat to the right; narrow and sharp to the left, near the tail. It commences on the right in the omental tuberosity, and is in relation with the celiac artery, from which the hepatic artery courses to the right just above the gland, while the lienal artery runs toward the left in a groove along this border.

The anterior border (margo anterior) separates the anterior from the inferior surface, and along this border the two layers of the transverse mesocolon diverge from one another; one passing upward over the anterior surface, the other backward over the inferior surface.

The inferior border (margo inferior) separates the posterior from the inferior surface; the superior mesenteric vessels emerge under its right extremity.

The tail (cauda pancreatis) is narrow; it extends to the left as far as the lower part of the gastric surface of the spleen, lying in the phrenicolienal ligament, and it is in contact with the left colic flexure.

The portion of the pancreas to the left of the middle line has a very considerable antero-posterior thickness; as a result the anterior surface is of considerable extent; it looks strongly upward, and forms a large and important part of the shelf. As the pancreas extends to the left toward the spleen it crosses the upper part of the kidney, and is so moulded on to it that the top of the kidney forms an extension inward and backward of the upper surface of the pancreas and extends the bed in this direction. On the other hand, the extremity of the pancreas comes in contact with the spleen in such a way that the plane of its upper surface runs with little interruption upward and backward into the concave gastric surface of the spleen, which completes the bed behind and to the left, and, running upward, forms a partial cap for the wide end of the stomach.

The pancreatic duct extends transversely from left to right through the substance of the pancreas. It commences by the junction of the small ducts of the lobules situated in the tail of the pancreas, and, running from left to right through the body, it receives the ducts of the various lobules composing the gland.

Considerably augmented in size, it reaches the neck, and turning downward, backward, and to the right, it comes into relation with the common bile duct, which lies to its right side; leaving the head of the gland, it passes very obliquely through the mucous and muscular coats of the duodenum, and ends by an orifice common to it and the common bile duct upon the summit of the duodenal papilla, situated at the medial side of the descending portion of the duodenum, 7.5 to 10 cm below the pylorus. The pancreatic duct, near the duodenum, is about the size of an ordinary quill. The pancreatic duct and the common bile duct will sometime open separately into the duodenum. There is an additional duct, which is given off from the pancreatic duct in the neck of the pancreas and opens into the duodenum about 2.5 cm above the duodenal papilla. It receives the ducts from the lower part of the head, and is known as the accessory pancreatic duct.

STRUCTURE OF THE PANCREAS

In structure, the pancreas resembles the salivary glands. It differs from them, however, in certain particulars, and is looser and softer in its texture. It is not enclosed in a distinct capsule, but is surrounded by areolar tissue, which dips into its interior, and connects together the various lobules of which it is composed.

Each lobule, like the lobules of the salivary glands, consists of one of the ultimate ramifications of the main duct, ending in a number of cecal pouches or alveoli, which are tubular and somewhat convoluted. The minute ducts connected with the alveoli are narrow and lined with flattened cells. The alveoli are almost completely filled with secreting cells, so that scarcely any lumen is visible. The true secreting cells which line the wall of the alveolus are very characteristic. They are columnar in shape and present two zones: an outer one, clear and finely striated next the basement membrane, and an inner granular one next the lumen. During activity the granular zone gradually diminishes in size, and when exhausted is only seen as a small area next to the lumen. During the resting stages it gradually increases until it forms nearly three-fourths of the cell. In some of the secreting cells of the pancreas is a spherical mass, staining more easily than the rest of the cell; this is termed the paranucleus, and is an extension from the nucleus. The connective tissue between the alveoli presents in certain parts collections of cells, which are termed interalveolar cell islets. The cells of these stain lightly with hematoxylin or carmine, and are more or less polyhedral in shape, forming a network in which many capillaries ramify. There are two main types of cell in the islets, distinguished as α -cells and β -cells according to the special staining reactions of the granules they contain. The cell islets will produce the internal secretion of the pancreas which will be necessary for carbohydrate metabolism.

The walls of the pancreatic duct are thin, consisting of two coats, an external fibrous and an internal mucous; the latter is smooth, and furnished near its termination with a few scattered follicles.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE PANCREAS

The pancreas has a rich blood supply, with vessels originating as branches of both the coeliac artery and superior mesenteric artery.

The celiac trunk and the superior mesenteric artery both arise from the abdominal aorta. Both have multiple branches that supply several organs including the pancreas. The anastomosis of their branches around the pancreas provides collateral circulation that generally assures a secure arterial supply to the pancreas. Most of the arteries are accompanied by veins that drain into the portal and splenic veins as they pass behind the pancreas as shown in the figure. The superior mesenteric vein becomes the portal vein when it joins the splenic vein.

The splenic artery runs along the top of the pancreas, and supplies the left part of the body and the tail of the pancreas through its pancreatic branches, the largest of which is called the greater pancreatic artery. The superior and inferior pancreaticoduodenal arteries run along the back and front surfaces of the head of the pancreas adjacent to the duodenum. These supply the head of the pancreas. These vessels join together (anastomose) in the middle.

The body and neck of the pancreas drain into the splenic vein, which sits behind the pancreas. The head drains into, and wraps around, the superior mesenteric and portal veins, via the pancreaticoduodenal veins.

The pancreas drains into lymphatic vessels that travel alongside its arteries, and has a rich lymphatic supply.

The lymphatic vessels of the body and tail drain into splenic lymph nodes, and eventually into lymph nodes that lie in front of the aorta, between the coeliac and superior mesenteric arteries. The lymphatic vessels of the head and neck drain into intermediate lymphatic vessels around the pancreaticoduodenal, mesenteric and hepatic arteries, and from there into the lymph nodes that lie in front of the aorta.

FUNCTIONS OF THE PANCREAS

The pancreas will have two functions corresponding to the action of two types of cells that constitute it. It is for this reason that it will be said that the pancreas is a mixed gland; namely, both exocrine and endocrine.

EXOCRINE FUNCTION — the exocrine function will be represented by 90% of the cells of the pancreas and will be directly involved in the processes of digestion. The pancreas will carry this function by secreting a fluid that will contain digestive enzymes into the duodenum, the first part of the small intestine that receives food from the stomach. These enzymes will facilitate the break down of carbohydrates, proteins and lipids (fats). The cells that will perform this “specific work” will be arranged in clusters designated as acini. Secretions into the middle of the acinus will accumulate in intralobular ducts, which will drain to the main pancreatic duct, which in turn will drain directly into the duodenum.

The cells in each acinus are filled with granules containing the digestive enzymes. These will be secreted in an inactive form designated as zymogens or proenzymes. Zymogen granules (ZGs) are specialized storage organelles in the exocrine pancreas that will allow the sorting, packaging and regulated apical secretion of digestive enzymes. When released into the duodenum, they will be activated by the enzyme enterokinase present in the lining of the duodenum. The proenzymes will be cleaved, creating a cascade of activating enzymes that will be discharged into small channels or canaliculi which drain into the excretory channels and merge to give the main excretory duct of the pancreas.

The canaliculi are themselves bordered by tubular cells (or Centroacinososa) which will produce an alkaline solution and bicarbonate ions which will neutralize gastric acidity. These two types of secretions, bicarbonates and digestive enzymes, will form the pancreatic juice which will digest the food arriving from the stomach. Most enzymes will be secreted as inactive pro-enzymes and will not be activated until they are released into the digestive tract. If enzymes are activated as soon as they are secreted in the pancreatic ducts, they could directly digest the pancreatic gland. These will therefore be useful but potentially dangerous.

The secretion will fluctuate depending on the food intake and it will vary between 1 L and 1.5 L per 24h, with a rich concentration of proteins: up to 10 to 15g of proteins.

There will be many pancreatic enzymes: the most predominant of the enzymes (around 20%) will be trypsin. It will be secreted initially in the inactive form which will be designated as trypsinogen. The other enzymes will be amylases which will digest sugars, lipases which will digest lipids as well as chymotrypsin, elastase and exopeptidases.

ENDOCRINE FUNCTION — the endocrine function which will represent approximately 10% of the totality of the parenchyma, will be devolved to the islands of special cells disseminated within the exocrine pancreas, the so-called Langerhans islets which will contain several types of cells: α -cells which will secrete glucagon (hyperglycaemic hormone) and β -cells which will secrete insulin (hypoglycaemic hormone). There are other endocrine cells in smaller numbers: somatostatin δ -cells.

Insulin is a peptide hormone produced by β -cells of the pancreatic islets; it is the main anabolic hormone of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will regulate the metabolism of carbohydrates, fats and protein by promoting the absorption of glucose from the blood into liver, fat and skeletal muscle cells. In these tissues the absorbed glucose will be converted into either glycogen via glycogenesis or fats (triglycerides) via lipogenesis, or, in the case of the liver, into both. Glucose production and secretion by the liver will be strongly inhibited by high concentrations of insulin in the blood. Circulating insulin also will affect the synthesis of proteins in a wide variety of tissues. Insulin will therefore be an anabolic hormone that will promote the conversion of small molecules in the blood into large molecules inside the cells. Low insulin levels in the blood will have the opposite effect by promoting widespread catabolism, especially of reserve fat.

A single protein (monomer) of insulin of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is composed of 51 amino acids, and has a molecular mass of 5808 Da. The molecular formula of the insulin of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is $C_{257}H_{383}N_{65}O_{77}S_6$. It is a combination of two amino acids chains (dimer) designated as chain A and chain B, which are linked together by two disulfide bonds. The chain A is composed of 21 amino acids, while the chain B consists of 30 residues. The linking (interchain) disulfide bonds are formed at cysteine (Cys) residues between the positions A7-B7 and A20-B19. There is an additional (intrachain) disulfide bond within the chain A between cysteine residues at positions A4 and A11. The chain A exhibits two α -helical regions at A1-A8 and A12-A19 which are antiparallel; while the chain B has a central α -helix, covering residues B9-B19, flanked by the disulfide bond on either sides and two β -sheets covering B7-B10 and B20-B23.⁶⁸⁴

The actions of insulin on the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” metabolism level will include:

- Increase of cellular intake of certain substances, most prominently glucose in muscle and adipose tissue (about two-thirds of the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”);
- Increase of DNA replication and protein synthesis via control of amino acid uptake;
- Modification of the activity of numerous enzymes.

The actions of insulin (indirect and direct) on cells will include:

- Stimulation of the uptake of glucose — by decreasing blood glucose concentration by inducing intake of glucose by the cells. This will be possible because insulin will cause the insertion of the Glucose transporter type 4 (GLUT-4)⁶⁸⁵ in the cell membranes of muscle and fat tissues, which will allow glucose to enter the cell.

⁶⁸⁴ We have already explained the manifested metaphors of the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, from which arises “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in the primary structure of insulin of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as human creature, wears.

⁶⁸⁵ The Glucose transporter type 4 (GLUT-4) is a protein that was encoded by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the SLC2A4 (solute carrier family 2 member 4) “GENE”.

Like all proteins, the unique amino acid arrangement in the primary sequence of GLUT4 protein is what will allow it to transport glucose across the plasma membrane. In addition to the phenylalanine on the N-terminus, two Leucine residues and acidic motifs on the COOH-terminus play a key role in the kinetics of endocytosis and exocytosis.

At the cell surface, the GLUT4 protein will permit the facilitated diffusion of circulating glucose down its concentration gradient into muscle and fat cells. Once within cells, glucose will be rapidly phosphorylated by glucokinase in the liver and hexokinase in other tissues to

- Increase of fat synthesis — by forcing fat cells to take in blood glucose, which will be converted into triglycerides; decrease of insulin will cause the reverse effect.
- Increase in the esterification of fatty acids — by forcing adipose tissue to make neutral fats (that is to say, triglycerides) from fatty acids; decrease of insulin will cause the reverse effect.
- Decrease of the lipolysis — by forcing reduction in conversion of fat cell lipid stores into blood fatty acids and glycerol; decrease of insulin causes the reverse effect.
- Induce of the glycogen synthesis — when glucose levels are high, insulin will induce the formation of glycogen by the activation of the hexokinase enzyme, which will add a phosphate group in glucose, thus resulting in a molecule that cannot exit the cell. At the same time, insulin will inhibit the enzyme glucose-6-phosphatase, which will remove the phosphate group. These two enzymes are keys for the formation of glycogen. Also, insulin will activate the enzymes phosphofructokinase and glycogen synthase which are responsible for glycogen synthesis.
- Decrease of the gluconeogenesis and glycogenolysis — by decreasing the production of glucose from noncarbohydrate substrates, primarily in the liver (the vast majority of endogenous insulin arriving at the liver will never leave the liver); decrease of insulin will cause glucose production by the liver from assorted substrates.
- Decrease the proteolysis — by decreasing the breakdown of protein.

form glucose-6-phosphate, which then will enter glycolysis or will be polymerized into glycogen, as we have already described. Glucose-6-phosphate cannot diffuse back out of cells and it also serves to maintain the concentration gradient for glucose to passively enter cells.

There are a total of 14 GLUT proteins separated into 3 classes based on sequence similarities. Class 1 contains GLUT proteins 1 to 4 and 14, class 2 contains GLUT proteins 5, 7, 9 and 11, and class 3 contains GLUT proteins 6, 8, 10, 12 and 13.

Although there are some sequence differences between all GLUT proteins, they all have some basic structural components. For example, both the N and C termini in GLUT proteins are exposed to the cytoplasm of the cell, and they all have 12 transmembrane segments.

- Decrease the autophagy — by decreasing the level of degradation of damaged organelles.
- Increase of the amino acid uptake — by forcing cells to absorb circulating amino acids; decrease of insulin will inhibit absorption.
- Facilitate arterial muscle tone — by forcing arterial wall muscle to relax, increasing blood flow, especially in microarteries; decrease of insulin will reduce the flow by allowing these muscles to contract.
- Increase of the secretion of hydrochloric acid by parietal cells in the stomach.
- Increase of the potassium uptake — by forcing cells synthesizing glycogen (a very spongy, “wet” substance, that will increase the content of intracellular water, and its accompanying K⁺ ions) to absorb potassium from the extracellular fluids; lack of insulin will inhibit absorption. The increase of insulin in cellular potassium uptake will lower potassium levels in blood plasma. This will occur via insulin-induced translocation of the (Na⁺/K⁺)-ATPase to the surface of skeletal muscle cells.
- Decrease of the renal sodium excretion.

Insulin also will influence other functions of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, such as vascular compliance and cognition.

Glucagon is another hormone from the pancreas. Glucagon will act to increase glucose levels by promoting the creation of glucose and the breakdown of glycogen to glucose in the liver. It also will decrease the uptake of glucose in fat and muscle. Glucagon release will be stimulated by low blood glucose or insulin levels, and during exercise.

The main factor influencing the secretion of insulin and glucagon will be the levels of glucose in blood plasma. Low blood sugar will stimulate glucagon release, and high blood sugar will stimulate insulin release. Other factors will also influence the secretion of these hormones. Some amino acids that will be byproducts of the digestion of proteins will stimulate insulin and glucagon release. Somatostatin will act as an inhibitor of both insulin and glucagon. The autonomic nervous system also will play a role. Activation of beta-2 receptors of the sympathetic nervous system by catecholamines secreted from sympathetic nerves will stimulate secretion of insulin and glucagon, whereas activation of alpha-1 receptors will inhibit secretion. M₃ receptors of the parasympathetic nervous system will act when stimulated by the right vagus nerve to stimulate release of insulin from β -cells. The beta-2 adrenergic receptor (β_2 adrenoreceptor), also known as ADRB2, is a cell membrane-spanning beta-adrenergic receptor that will bind epinephrine (adrenaline), a hormone and neurotransmitter whose signaling, via adenylate cyclase stimulation through trimeric Gs proteins, increased cAMP, and downstream L-type calcium channel interaction, will mediate physiologic responses such as smooth muscle relaxation and bronchodilation. The alpha-1 (α_1) adrenergic receptor is a G protein-coupled receptor (GPCR) associated with the Gq heterotrimeric G-protein. It consists of three highly homologous subtypes, including α_1A -, α_1B -, and α_1D -adrenergic. Catecholamines like norepinephrine (noradrenaline) and epinephrine (adrenaline) signal through the α_1 -adrenergic receptor in the central and peripheral nervous systems. The muscarinic acetylcholine receptor, which will also be designated as cholinergic/acetylcholine receptor M3, or the muscarinic 3, is a muscarinic acetylcholine receptor encoded by the “GENE” CHRM3 of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁶⁸⁶ The M3 muscarinic receptors will be located at many places in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, e.g., smooth muscles, the endocrine glands, the exocrine glands, lungs, pancreas and the brain.

Thus by its two glyco-regulating hormones of antagonistic action — the insulin and the glucagon — the endocrine pancreas will therefore ensure the regulation of the metabolism of sugars and the stability of the glycemia as best as possible for the needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

⁶⁸⁶ CHRM3 (Cholinergic Receptor Muscarinic 3) is a Protein Coding gene. It belongs to a larger family of G protein-coupled receptors. The functional diversity of these receptors is defined by the binding of acetylcholine and includes cellular responses such as adenylate cyclase inhibition, phosphoinositide degeneration, and potassium channel mediation. Muscarinic receptors will influence many effects of acetylcholine in the central and peripheral nervous system. The muscarinic cholinergic receptor 3 will also control smooth muscle contraction and its stimulation will cause secretion of glandular tissue.

THE ENDOCRINE SYSTEM

THE ENDOCRINE SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

THE ENDOCRINE SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The endocrine system is the network of glands that produce hormones needed for the proper functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and releasing a steady amount of these hormones into the bloodstream. There are several glands in the endocrine system including the:

- The pituitary gland, located just under the brain;
- The pineal gland;
- The thyroid gland, located in the front of the neck;
- The pancreas, located well above the tummy button in the abdomen;
- The parathyroid glands, located behind the thyroid gland;
- The adrenal glands, located on top of the kidneys in the abdomen;
- The ovaries (in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective) and the testicles (in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective).

THE PITUITARY GLAND — the pituitary gland, or hypophysis, is a small, bean-shaped gland, which secretes hormones directly to the bloodstream. Because it produces hormones, which regulate the functioning of other important endocrine glands — including the adrenal, thyroid, and reproductive glands (e.g., ovaries and testes) — and in some cases have direct regulatory effects in major tissues, such as those of the musculoskeletal system, the pituitary gland is called the “master gland”. The pituitary gland lies at the middle of the base of the skull and is housed within a bony structure designated as the sella turcica, which is behind the nose and immediately beneath the hypothalamus. The pituitary gland is attached to the hypothalamus by a stalk composed of neuronal axons and the so-called hypophyseal-portal veins. The pituitary gland consists of two major parts that have different functions: an anterior lobe and a posterior lobe.

The anterior lobe.— The cells of the anterior lobe are derived from an outpouching of the roof of the pharynx, known as Rathke’s pouch. There are at least five different types of cells, each of which secretes a different hormone or hormones. The thyrotrophs synthesize and secrete thyrotropin (thyroid-stimulating hormone, TSH); the gonadotrophs, both luteinizing hormone (LH) and follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH); the corticotrophs, adrenocorticotrophic hormone (ACTH, corticotropin); the somatotrophs, growth hormone (GH, somatotropin); and the lactotrophs, prolactin.

The production and secretion of each of the major anterior pituitary hormones are regulated by peptides that are released from the median eminence neurons of the hypothalamus into the hypophyseal-portal veins, which traverse a short distance to the pituitary microvasculature. Among those peptides are thyrotropin-releasing hormone (TRH), corticotropin-releasing hormone, gonadotropin-releasing hormone, and growth-hormone-releasing hormone. The hypothalamus also produces dopamine and somatostatin, which are potent inhibitors of prolactin and GH, respectively.

The posterior lobe.— The posterior lobe of the pituitary gland consists largely of extensions of processes (axons) from two pairs of large clusters of nerve cell bodies (nuclei) in the hypothalamus. One of those nuclei, designated as the supraoptic nuclei, lies immediately above the optic tract, while the other nuclei, designated as the paraventricular nuclei, lies on each side of the third ventricle of the brain. Those nuclei, the axons of the cell bodies of nerves, which form the nuclei, and the nerve endings in the posterior pituitary gland, form the neurohypophyseal system. There are neural connections that run from those nuclei to other regions of the brain, including to regions that sense osmolality (solute concentrations) and regulate thirst.

The major neurohypophyseal hormones are vasopressin (antidiuretic hormone) and oxytocin, which are synthesized and incorporated into neurosecretory granules in the cell bodies of the nuclei. Those hormones are synthesized as part of a precursor protein that includes one of the hormones and a protein designated as neurophysin. After synthesis and incorporation into neurosecretory granules, the precursor protein is cleaved, forming separate hormone and neurophysin molecules, which remain loosely attached to one another. Those granules are carried through the axons and are stored in the posterior lobe of the pituitary gland. Upon stimulation of the nerve cells by internal or external events, the granules fuse with the cell wall of the nerve endings, the hormone and neurophysin dissociate from one another, and both the hormone and the neurophysin are released into the bloodstream. The hormones are released into the circulation in response to nerve signals that originate in the hypothalamus and are transmitted to the posterior pituitary lobe.

THE PINEAL GLAND — also called conarium, epiphysis cerebri, pineal organ, or pineal body, is a small cone-like structure, which develops from the roof of the diencephalon, which is a section of the brain. It is located behind the third cerebral ventricle in the brain midline (between the two cerebral hemispheres). Its name is derived from its shape, which is similar to that of a pinecone (Latin pinea).

The parenchyma⁶⁸⁷ of the pineal gland mostly consists of cords and clusters of pinealocytes, and supporting astrocyte-like neuroglial cells. The pinealocytes are highly modified neurons that secrete the hormone melatonin into the surrounding network of fenestrated capillaries. The neuroglial cells are the main component of the pineal stalk. Another structural component of the pineal gland are the corpora arenacea or brain sand, which are deposits of calcium, phosphates and carbonates that form multilaminar corpuscles.

The pineal gland is one of the secretory circumventricular organs of the brain, meaning that it has direct access to the bloodstream via fenestrated capillaries. The pineal gland has several functions, the most important of which is maintaining the circadian rhythm and regulating the sleep-wake cycle of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Through the pineal gland, information about the state of the day-night cycle from the outside environment will be collected and use to modulate the production and release of adequate “specific hormones”, which include: melatonin (MLT), valentonin (VLT), and 6-Methoxy-Harmalan (6-MH).

Melatonin ($C_{13}H_{16}N_2O_2$), also designated as N-acetyl-5-methoxy tryptamine, is a hormone primarily secreted by the pineal gland. It is a derivative of the amino acid tryptophan and it is a neuroprotective hormone, serving to protect the structure and function of neurons from damages or degeneration induced by a variety of free radicals. Its primary role is to eliminate the oxygenated free radicals that destroy the neurons and all living cells.

6-Methoxy-Harmalan ($C_{13}H_{14}N_2O$), also designated as 6-methoxy-1,2,3,4-tetrahydroharman, is a hormone secreted by the pineal gland. It is a pinoline derivative and a structural isomer of tetrahydroharmine, and, it is also designated as the wakefulness and consciousness hormone. It has very high psychostimulant properties, which helps to keep the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in “wake” mode during the activity period.

Valentonin (VLT) is also a hormone released by the pineal gland. It is the “sleep” hormone which keeps the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in “sleep” mode during the rest period.

In the pineal gland and in response to the absence of luminous radiation of that, which is designated as the “light” of the “Day”, these three hormones are biosynthesised, from serotonin, in 3 successive acetylation⁶⁸⁸ stages, catalysed by the same enzyme, N-acetyltransferase (NAT), during a time interval of 8 hours and released in the to the bloodstream via fenestrated capillaries.

The secretion of these hormones is synchronized with the release of certain products of the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Specific Septenary Configuration” of the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” and six “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”. As you would know by now, in producing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing down the details of the sixth expression of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” throughout the tissues, the organs and the systems of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”: “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing down the next chapters of the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

Given their serial biosynthesis, these three hormones are produced and secreted by the pineal gland in the same proportions. Any quantitative variation, either too little or too much, in the pineal secretion will affect the three hormones in the same way.

The level of wakefulness is determined by the functioning of 5-HT_{2C} serotonergic neurons, the cell bodies of which are located in the brain stem. The impulse is transmitted to these neurons by serotonin, an endogenous agonist of the 5-HT_{2C} receptors. During its prevalence period, Valentonin amplifies the response of the 5-HT_{2C} receptors to serotonin, following a specific allosteric deformation which makes them more sensitive to serotonin; this causes a decrease in wakefulness, leading to sleep. The pharmacokinetic properties of Valentonin and 6-methoxyharmalan are perfectly adapted to maintaining the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in “sleep” mode during a time interval of 8 hours, which corresponds to one third of the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Specific Septenary ⁶⁸⁸ Acetylation is an organic esterification reaction with acetic acid. It introduces an acetyl functional group into a chemical compound. Such compounds are termed acetate esters or acetates. Deacetylation is the opposite reaction, the removal of an acetyl group from a chemical compound.

Methylation refers to the addition of a methyl group on a substrate, or the substitution of an atom (or group) by a methyl group. Methylation is a form of alkylation, with a methyl group replacing a hydrogen atom. These terms are commonly used in chemistry, biochemistry, soil science, and the biological sciences.

Configuration” of the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” and six “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”, then in “wake” mode during the remaining time interval of 16 hours, which corresponds to the remaining two third of the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Specific Septenary Configuration” of the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” and six “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”. The concentrations of Valentonin in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” are higher than those of 6-methoxyharmalan during “sleep” mode; conversely, during the “wake” mode period of activity, 6-methoxyharmalan becomes prevalent in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

These hormones of the pineal gland have a highly regulatory importance in which they influence the activity of other endocrine glands, namely the pituitary gland, endocrine pancreas, adrenal gland, parathyroid gland and the gonads. The effects of the pineal gland on these glands will be mostly inhibitory, by reducing the synthesis and release of the hormones produced by these glands.

These hormones of the pineal gland are secreted rhythmically by the pinealocytes of the pineal gland. They have two primary functions: modulation of the sleep-wake cycle by controlling the circadian rhythm, and regulation of reproductive system development.

The main factor in the production of melatonin is the amount of luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day”, which falls on the retina. When there is little to no amount of that luminous radiation present, the production of melatonin is stimulated, while the bright presence of that luminous radiation inhibits its production. This means that its concentrations in the blood rise during the absence of the luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day” and fall during the presence of the luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day”. This serves as an internal mechanism to collect information about sleep-length, and in turn to create the circadian rhythm of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The circadian rhythm — circadian, which is derived from the Latin circa, meaning “around” (or “approximately”), and diēm, meaning “day” — is the periodic phenomenon characteristic of certain vital processes, which are associated with the physical, mental, and behavior changes that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” goes through during a period associated with the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Divine Septenary Configuration” of one “Generative Divine Particle” and six (6)

“Formative Divine Particles”, manifested by metaphor throughout the organs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. The circadian rhythm is largely dictated by the rising and falling concentrations of the hormones of the pineal gland. It serves as an intrinsic mechanism for synchronization of the physiological processes (feeding, reproduction, sleep etc.) of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the day and night rhythm from the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” around that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Through the circadian rhythm, most biological and behavioral functions associated with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, such as the wake/sleep system, body temperature, blood pressure, hormone production, heart rate, but also cognitive abilities, mood and memory, are regulated. The circadian rhythm permanently resynchronized with the twenty-four “transformation sub-steps” in the model of the “transformation step” in the “Divine Septenary Configuration” of one “Generative Divine Particle” and six (6) “Formative Divine Particles”, thanks to several “specific synchronizers” which act simultaneously and the most powerful of which is the luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day”.

The information about the alternance rhythm of the luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day” is transmitted to the pineal gland through the retinohypothalamic tract by the following route:

1. The “specific signals” transported by the luminous radiation emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” are collected through the retina and an action potential is generated and transmitted through the retinal fibers to the suprachiasmatic nucleus (SCN) of the hypothalamus.
2. The transmitted information is relayed to the paraventricular nucleus (PVN) of the hypothalamus, which in turn projects efferent fibers to the intermediolateral nucleus in the lateral column of the spinal cord.
3. Finally, the postganglionic fibers of the cervical sympathetic chain transmit the impulses to the pineal gland.

Basically, the pineal gland gets its information about the amount of luminous radiation from the eye via the hypothalamus, and regulates the circadian rhythm accordingly by secreting melatonin. Due to this connection to the eyes and its ability to respond to the luminous radiation of that, which has been designated as the “light” of the “Day”, the pineal gland is also referred to as the “third eye”.

THE THYROID GLAND — the thyroid gland is a small and butterfly-shaped, highly vascular organ, situated at the front and sides of the neck; it consists of right and left lobes connected across the middle line by a narrow portion, the isthmus.

The lobes are conical in shape, the apex of each being directed upward and lateralward as far as the junction of the middle with the lower third of the thyroid cartilage; the base looks downward, and is on a level with the fifth or sixth tracheal ring. Each lobe is about 5 cm long; its greatest width is about 3 cm and its thickness about 2 cm. The lateral or superficial surface is convex, and covered by the skin, the superficial and deep fasciae, the sternocleidomastoid muscle, the superior belly of the omohyoid muscle, the sternohyoid muscle and sternothyroid muscle, and beneath the last muscle by the pretracheal layer of the deep fascia, which forms a capsule for the gland. The deep or medial surface is moulded over the underlying structures, which are: the thyroid and cricoid cartilages, the trachea, the constrictor pharyngis inferior and posterior part of the cricothyroid muscle, the esophagus (particularly on the left side of the neck), the superior and inferior thyroid arteries, and the recurrent nerves. The anterior border is thin, and inclines obliquely from above downward toward the middle line of the neck, while the posterior border is thick and overlaps the common carotid artery, and, as a rule, the parathyroids.

The isthmus connects together the lower thirds of the lobes; it measures about 1.25 cm in breadth, and the same in depth, and usually covers the second and third rings of the trachea. Its situation and size present, however, many variations. In the middle line of the neck it is covered by the skin and fascia, and close to the middle line, on either side, by the sternothyroid muscle. Across its upper border runs an anastomotic branch uniting the two superior thyroid arteries; at its lower border are the inferior thyroid veins. Sometimes the isthmus is altogether wanting.

A third lobe, of conical shape, called the pyramidal lobe, will also arise from the upper part of the isthmus, or from the adjacent portion of either lobe, but to the left, and will ascend as far as the hyoid bone. It will be quite detached, or divided into two or more parts.

A fibrous or muscular band will be found attached, above, to the body of the hyoid bone, and below to the isthmus of the gland, or its pyramidal lobe. Small detached portions of thyroid tissue will also be found in the vicinity of the lateral lobes or above the isthmus; they will be designated as accessory thyroid glands.

Two types of cells make up thyroid tissue: follicular cells and parafollicular cells. Follicular cells, also designated as thyroid epithelial cells, will make up a majority of the thyroid gland, and will produce the thyroxine (T₄) and triiodothyronine (T₃) hormones. Parafollicular cells, also designated as C cells, will produce calcitonin, which will regulate calcium and phosphate levels in the blood.

The arteries supplying the thyroid gland are the superior and inferior thyroids and sometimes an additional branch (thyroidea ima) from the innominate artery or the arch of the aorta, which ascends upon the front of the trachea. The arteries are remarkable for their large size and frequent anastomoses. The veins form a plexus on the surface of the gland and on the front of the trachea; from this plexus the superior, middle, and inferior thyroid veins arise; the superior and middle end in the internal jugular, the inferior in the innominate vein. The capillary bloodvessels form a dense plexus in the connective tissue around the vesicles, between the epithelium of the vesicles and the endothelium of the lymphatics, which surround a greater or smaller part of the circumference of the vesicle. The lymphatic vessels run in the interlobular connective tissue, not uncommonly surrounding the arteries which they accompany, and communicate with a network in the capsule of the gland; they may contain colloid material. They end in the thoracic and right lymphatic trunks. The nerves are derived from the middle and inferior cervical ganglia of the sympathetic.

THE PANCREAS — the pancreas, which we have described in the previous section, is a long thin organ located in the upper left of the abdomen. It is under the stomach, between the liver and the spleen. The pancreas is part of the digestive system and the endocrine system. The pancreas will produce enzymes that will be released directly into the small intestine to help digest food. It will also produce hormones that will facilitate the digestion and control of the blood levels of sugar (glucose), such as insulin.

THE PARATHYROID GLANDS — parathyroid glands are small brownish-red bodies, situated between the posterior borders of the lateral lobes of the thyroid gland and its capsule.

They differ from it in structure, being composed of masses of cells arranged in a more or less columnar fashion with numerous intervening capillaries. They measure on an average about 6 mm in length, and from 3 to 4 mm in breadth, and present the appearance of flattened oval disks. They are divided, according to their situation, into superior and inferior. The superior, two in number, are the more constant in position, and are situated, one on either side, at the level of the lower border of the cricoid cartilage, behind the junction of the pharynx and esophagus. The inferior, also two in number, are applied to the lower edge of the lateral lobes.

Structurally, the parathyroids consist of intercommunicating columns of cells supported by connective tissue containing a rich supply of blood capillaries. Most of the cells are clear, but some, larger in size, contain oxyphil granules. Vesicles containing colloid occur in the parathyroid.

Parathyroids glands manufacture and release parathyroid hormone, which will facilitate the control of the level of calcium in the blood. Most of the calcium is stored in the bones. When blood calcium levels will be low, the parathyroids glands will secrete the parathyroid hormone to induce bone to release calcium into the blood. When blood calcium levels will be high, the parathyroids glands will secrete less of the parathyroid hormone, and blood calcium levels will decrease.

THE ADRENAL GLANDS — also known as suprarenal glands, are small, triangular-shaped glands located on top of both kidneys. There are 2 adrenal glands, one above each kidney. Each gland consists of two parts: an inner medulla, designated as the adrenal medulla, which produces epinephrine and norepinephrine (adrenaline and noradrenaline), and an outer cortex, designated as the adrenal cortex, which produces steroid hormones.

The adrenal medulla is embedded in the centre of the cortex of each adrenal gland. It is small, making up only about 10 percent of the total adrenal weight. The adrenal medulla is composed of chromaffin cells that are named for the granules within the cells that darken after exposure to chromium salts. These cells migrate to the adrenal medulla from the embryonic neural crest and represent specialized neural tissue. The chromaffin granules contain the hormones of the adrenal medulla, which include dopamine, norepinephrine, and epinephrine. When stimulated by sympathetic nerve impulses, the chromaffin granules are released from the cells and the hormones enter the circulation through an energy-dependent “specific process”.

The outer cortex comprises about 90 percent of each adrenal gland. It is composed of three structurally different concentric zones. From the outside in, they are the glomerulus zone, the fasciculate zone, and the reticular zone. The glomerulus zone will produce aldosterone, which will act on the kidneys to conserve salt and water.

The inner two zones of the adrenal cortex — the fasciculate zone and the reticular zone — will function as a physiological unit to produce cortisol and adrenal androgens (hormones in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective), with dehydroepiandrosterone, a weak androgen, being the major product. Cortisol will have two primary actions: (1) stimulation of gluconeogenesis — that is to say, the breakdown of protein and fat in muscle and their conversion to glucose in the liver — and (2) anti-inflammatory actions. Cortisol and synthetic derivatives of it, such as prednisone and dexamethasone, will be designated as glucocorticoids, because of their ability to stimulate gluconeogenesis.

THE OVARIES — the ovaries are two nodular bodies, situated one on either side of the uterus in relation to the lateral wall of the pelvis, and attached to the back of the broad ligament of the uterus, behind and below the uterine tubes of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. The ovaries are of a grayish-pink color, and present either a smooth or a puckered uneven surface. They are each about 4 cm in length, 2 cm in width, and about 8 mm in thickness, and weigh from 2 to 3.5 gm. Each ovary presents a lateral and a medial surface, an upper or tubal and a lower or uterine extremity, and an anterior or mesovarium and a posterior free border. It lies in a shallow depression, named the ovarian fossa, on the lateral wall of the pelvis; this fossa is bounded above by the external iliac vessels, in front by the obliterated umbilical artery, and behind by the ureter.

In the erect posture the long axis of the ovary is vertical. The tubal extremity is near the external iliac vein; to it are attached the ovarian fimbria of the uterine tube and a fold of peritoneum, the suspensory ligament of the ovary, which is directed upward over the iliac vessels and contains the ovarian vessels. The uterine end is directed downward toward the pelvic floor, it is usually narrower than the tubal, and is attached to the lateral angle of the uterus, immediately behind the uterine tube, by a rounded cord termed the ligament of the ovary, which lies within the broad ligament and contains some non-striped, muscular fibers. The lateral surface is in contact with the parietal peritoneum, which lines the ovarian fossa; the medial surface is to a large extent covered by the fimbriated extremity of the uterine tube. The mesovarian border is straight and is directed toward the obliterated umbilical artery, and is attached to the back of the broad ligament by a short fold named the mesovarium. Between the two layers of this fold the bloodvessels and nerves pass to reach the hilum of the ovary. The free border is convex, and is directed toward the ureter. The uterine tube arches over the ovary, running upward in relation to its mesovarian border, then curving over its tubal pole, and finally passing downward on its free border and medial surface.

Structurally, the surface of the ovary is covered by a layer of columnar cells which constitutes the germinal epithelium of Waldeyer. This epithelium gives to the ovary a dull gray color as compared with the shining smoothness of the peritoneum; and the transition between the squamous epithelium of the peritoneum and the columnar cells which cover the ovary is usually marked by a line around the anterior border of the ovary. The ovary consists of a number of vesicular ovarian follicles imbedded in the meshes of a stroma or frame-work.

The stroma is a peculiar soft tissue, abundantly supplied with bloodvessels, consisting for the most part of spindle-shaped cells with a small amount of ordinary connective tissue. On the surface of the organ this tissue is much condensed, and forms a layer (tunica albuginea) composed of short connective-tissue fibers, with fusiform cells between them. The stroma of the ovary may contain interstitial cells resembling those of the testis.

The arteries of the ovaries and uterine tubes are the ovarian from the aorta. Each anastomoses freely in the mesosalpinx, with the uterine artery, giving some branches to the uterine tube, and others which traverse the mesovarium and enter the hilum of the ovary. The veins emerge from the hilum in the form of a plexus, the pampiniform plexus; the ovarian vein is formed from this plexus, and leaves the pelvis in company with the artery. The nerves are derived from the hypogastric or pelvic plexus, and from the ovarian plexus, the uterine tube receiving a branch from one of the uterine nerves.

VESICULAR OVARIAN FOLLICLES (GRAAFIAN FOLLICLES) — upon making a section of an ovary, numerous round transparent vesicles of various sizes are to be seen; they are the follicles, or ovisacs containing the ova. Immediately beneath the superficial covering is a layer of stroma, in which are a large number of minute vesicles, of uniform size, about 0.25 mm in diameter. These are the follicles in their earliest condition, and the layer where they are found will be designated as the cortical layer. Beneath this superficial stratum, other large and more or less mature follicles are found imbedded in the ovarian stroma. These increase in size as they recede from the surface toward a highly vascular stroma in the center of the organ, termed the medullary substance (zona vasculosa of Waldeyer). This stroma forms the tissue of the hilum by which the ovary is attached, and through which the bloodvessels enter: it does not contain any follicles.

The larger follicles consist of an external fibrovascular coat, connected with the surrounding stroma of the ovary by a network of bloodvessels; and an internal coat, which consists of several layers of nucleated cells, designated as the membrana granulosa. At one part of the mature follicle the cells of the membrana granulosa are collected into a mass which projects into the cavity of the follicle. This is designated as the discus proligerus, and in it the ovum is imbedded. The follicle contains a transparent albuminous fluid.

DISCHARGE OF THE OVUM — the follicles, after attaining a certain stage of development, will gradually approach the surface of the ovary and burst; the ovum and fluid contents of the follicle will be liberated on the exterior of the ovary, and carried into the uterine tube by currents set up by the movements of the cilia covering the mucous membrane of the fimbriae.

CORPUS LUTEUM (YELLOW BODY) — after the discharge of the ovum the lining of the follicle will be thrown into folds and vascular processes will grow inward from the surrounding tissue. In this way the space will be filled up and the corpus luteum formed. It consists at first of a radial arrangement of yellow cells with bloodvessels and lymphatic spaces, and later it merges with the surrounding stroma.

OVARIES HORMONES — ovaries produce and release two groups of hormones: progesterone and estrogen. There are three major estrogens, designated as: estradiol, estrone, and estriol. To a lesser extent, the ovaries will release the hormone relaxin prior to birth. Another minor hormone is inhibin, which will be used for “cellular communication” to the pituitary to inhibit follicle-stimulating hormone secretion.

Each “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective will be manufactured into existence with has two ovaries. They will be held in place by ligaments attached to the womb but are not directly attached to the rest of the reproductive tract, e.g. the fallopian tubes.

THE TESTICLES — the testicles and epididymis are paired glandular organs, contained within the scrotal sac of skin designated as the scrotum of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective, in the front of the pelvic region near the upper thighs. The testicles are the site of sperm cells production and hormone synthesis, while the epididymis has a role in the storage of sperm cells.

The testicles are suspended in the scrotum by the spermatic cords, the left testis hanging somewhat lower than its fellow. The average dimensions of the testis are from 4 to 5 cm in length, 2.5 cm in breadth, and 3 cm in the antero-posterior diameter; its weight varies from 10.5 to 14 gm. Each testis is of an oval form, compressed laterally, and having an oblique position in the scrotum; the upper extremity is directed forward and a little lateralward; the lower, backward and a little medialward; the anterior convex border looks forward and downward, the posterior or straight border, to which the cord is attached, backward and upward.

Each testicle is covered by a fibrous capsule called the tunica albuginea and is divided by partitions of fibrous tissue from the tunica albuginea into 200 to 400 wedge-shaped sections, or lobules. Within each lobule, there are 3 to 10 coiled seminiferous tubules, designated as seminiferous tubules, which will produce the sperm cells, and supported by interstitial tissue. The seminiferous tubules are lined by epithelial somatic cells, which provide the anchor for germ cell development and are restricted to the tubular compartment of the testicle, and which aid the maturation process of the spermatozoa. In the interstitial tissue lie other epithelial somatic cells that are responsible for testosterone production.

Spermatozoa will be produced in the seminiferous tubules. The developing sperm will travel through the tubules, collecting in the rete testes. Ducts designated as efferent tubules will transport the sperm from the rete testes to the epididymis for storage and maturation.

Inside the scrotum, the testes are covered almost entirely by the tunica vaginalis, a closed sac of parietal peritoneal origin that contains a small amount of viscous fluid. This sac covers the anterior surface and sides of each testicle and works much like the peritoneal sac, lubricating the surfaces of the testes and allowing for friction-free movement. The testicular parenchyma is protected by the tunica albuginea, a fibrous capsule that encloses the testes. It penetrates into the parenchyma of each testicle with diaphragms, dividing it into lobules.

The principal androgen produced by the testicles is testosterone. Testosterone will serve as a circulating prohormone for a more active androgen designated as dihydrotestosterone. Testosterone will be converted to dihydrotestosterone in most tissues that will be sensitive to androgens, including the testicles, prostate gland, hair follicles, and muscles. Although testosterone itself has androgenic actions, its conversion to dihydrotestosterone will be critical to the development of external genitalia in young “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective. Testosterone will also be converted to estradiol in adipose tissue (and to a lesser extent in some other tissues), which will be the most important source of estrogen in adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective. Furthermore, testosterone is interconvertible with androstenedione, which can be converted into estrogens. When androstenedione will be formed in adipose tissue, it could be converted to a form of estrogen designated as estrone.

The epididymis consists of a single heavily coiled duct. It can be divided into three parts: head, body and tail.

- Head — the most proximal part of the epididymis. It is formed by the efferent tubules of the testes, which transport sperm from the testes to the epididymis.
- Body — formed by the heavily coiled duct of the epididymis.
- Tail — the most distal part of the epididymis. It marks the origin of the vas deferens, which transports sperm to the prostatic portion of the urethra for ejaculation.

The testicles and epididymis will receive innervation from the testicular plexus — a network of nerves derived from the renal and aortic plexi. They will receive autonomic and sensory fibres.

The main arterial supply to the testicles and epididymis is via the paired testicular arteries, which arise directly from the abdominal aorta. They descend down the abdomen, and pass into the scrotum via the inguinal canal, contained within the spermatic cord. However, the testicles are also supplied by branches of the cremasteric artery (from the inferior epigastric artery) and the artery of the vas deferens (from the inferior vesical artery). These branches give anastomoses to the main testicular artery.

Venous drainage is achieved via the paired testicular veins. They are formed from the pampiniform plexus in the scrotum — a network of veins wrapped around the testicular artery. In the retroperitoneal space of the abdomen, the left testicular vein drains into the left renal vein, while the right testicular vein drains directly into the inferior vena cava.

Since the testicles are originally retroperitoneal organs, the lymphatic drainage is to the lumbar and para-aortic nodes, along the lumbar vertebrae. This is in contrast to the scrotum, which drains into the nearby superficial inguinal nodes.

THE REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM

THE REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM INFOGRAFIC

THE REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The reproductive system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, also called genital system, is the biological system consisting of all the anatomical organs and the glands attached thereto and that are involved in the reproduction (replication) of a “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

As we have indicated already, to any state of growth of a product of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, there will be associated a unique state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and a different unique state of growth of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will enliven this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is so that, for a well-defined state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and a well-defined state of growth of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, an initial cell, let us designate it as “cell zero”, and from which will arise, as a result of the application of the cellular division processes, all other cells that will be required to build-up the morphology and the anatomy of that well-defined state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, can be defined and established and their temporal appearance into existence can be programmed through the pool of information contained in “cell zero”. Not all temporal information that will lead to the desired well-defined state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” needs to be present in “cell zero”; just the critical information need to be present in “cell zero”.

Through the cellular division processes and with the detailed scientific foreknowledge of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, all other succeeding generations of cells, as they appear into existence, can be gradually assigned their own critical information and “specific work” and temporal positioning according to the generation identifier to ultimately form the morphology and anatomy of the chosen well-defined state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The temporal positioning of those cells is a result of application of the concept of “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”.

It is so that, from “cell zero” and with the passage of time, the tissues, the organs, and the systems will be gradually produced and assigned predefined shapes and “specific work” to autonomously (without external intervention) bring forth or assemble the ultimate morphology and anatomy of the chosen well-defined state of growth of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the appropriate medium of production. This is the principle that is at the basis of the growth of all the subjective shapes that have been associated to the designed models of “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and sculpted by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”: be it (1) the various manifestations of the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, in which case “cell zero” will be a well-defined set of initial tissues designated as a “seed”; (2) the various manifestations of “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garments” associated to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model; or the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” associated to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, in which case in which case “cell zero” will be a well-defined initial cell.

THE “MALE” REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM

“THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and having the “MALE” adjective with the capacity to serve as a medium of communication of particular products that are based on “THE ‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ REASON” and which will be associated with “SPECIFIC SIGNALS CATALYST OF THE BIRTH” of instances of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. HE has designed and established the complex sequence of interrelated events, which lead to the manufacturing of “cell zero” in the instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and having the “MALE” adjective and through the “MALE” reproductive system. It is “cell zero” that will carry those “SPECIFIC SIGNALS CATALYST OF THE BIRTH” of instances of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. Through the “MALE” reproductive system in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” will also build the “seed” of this “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

As we have also indicated already, everything in existence is “energy” and onto which is applied the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales. The “seed” of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is the smallest “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” construct built using “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and which contains all the critical features of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” associated with a well-defined state of equilibrium expected from an appropriate “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and which will be applied to the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of that “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The “seed” of the “Specific

‘EARTHLY’ Garment” contains “cell zero” and it will be the “cause” of reproduction of that “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁶⁸⁹

The primary reproductive organs of the instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and having the “MALE” adjective consists of the testicles and a series of ducts and glands.

TESTICLES — as we have indicated in the previous section, the testicles and epididymis are paired glandular organs, contained within the scrotal sac of skin designated as the scrotum of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective, in the front of the pelvic region near the upper thighs. The testicles are the site of sperm cells production and hormone synthesis, while the epididymis has a role in the storage of sperm cells.

The testicles are suspended in the scrotum by the spermatic cords, the left testis hanging somewhat lower than its fellow. The average dimensions of the testis are from 4 to 5 cm in length, 2.5 cm in breadth, and 3 cm in the antero-posterior diameter; its weight varies from 10.5 to 14 gm. Each testis is of an oval form, compressed laterally, and having an oblique position in the scrotum; the upper extremity is directed forward and a little lateralward; the lower, backward and a little medialward; the anterior convex border looks forward and downward, the posterior or straight border, to which the cord is attached, backward and upward.

The anterior border and lateral surfaces, as well as both extremities of the organ, are convex, free, smooth, and invested by the visceral layer of the tunica vaginalis. The posterior border, to which the cord is attached, receives only a partial investment from that membrane. Lying upon the lateral edge of this posterior border is a long, narrow, flattened body, named the epididymis.

The testicles are invested by three tunics: the tunica vaginalis, tunica albuginea, and tunica vasculosa.

The Tunica Vaginalis (tunica vaginalis propria testis) is the serous covering of the testis. It is a pouch of serous membrane, derived from the saccus vaginalis of the peritoneum. It consists of a visceral and a parietal lamina.

- The visceral lamina (lamina visceralis) covers the greater part of the testis and epididymis, connecting the latter to the testis by means of a distinct fold. From the posterior border of the gland it is reflected on to the internal surface of the scrotum.
- The parietal lamina (lamina parietalis) is far more extensive than the visceral, extending upward for some distance in front and on the medial side of the cord, and reaching below the testis. The inner surface of the tunica vaginalis is smooth, and covered by a layer of endothelial cells. The interval between the visceral and parietal laminae constitutes the cavity of the tunica vaginalis.

The tunica albuginea is the fibrous covering of the testis. It is a dense membrane, of a bluish-white color, composed of bundles of white fibrous tissue which interlace in every direction. It is covered by the tunica vaginalis, except at the points of attachment of the epididymis to the testicle, and along its posterior border, where the spermatic vessels enter the gland. It is applied to the tunica vasculosa over the glandular substance of the testicle, and, at its posterior border, is reflected into the interior of the gland, forming an incomplete vertical septum — that is to say, a thin part dividing tissues of the gland —, designated as the mediastinum testicle.

The mediastinum testicle extends from the upper to near the lower extremity of the gland, and is wider above than below. From its front and sides numerous imperfect septa (trabeculae) are given off, which radiate toward the surface of the organ, and are attached to the tunica albuginea. They divide the interior of the organ into a number of incomplete spaces which are somewhat cone-shaped, being broad at their bases at the surface of the gland, and becoming narrower as they converge to the mediastinum. The mediastinum supports the vessels and duct of the testis in their passage to and from the substance of the gland.

The tunica vasculosa is the vascular layer of the testis, consisting of a plexus of bloodvessels, held together by delicate areolar tissue. It clothes the inner surface of the tunica albuginea and the different septa in the interior of the gland, and therefore forms an internal investment to all the spaces of which the gland is composed.

The arteries supplying the coverings of the testicles are: the superficial and deep external pudendal branches of the femoral, the superficial perineal branch of the internal pudendal, and the cremasteric branch from the inferior epigastric. The veins follow the course of the corresponding arteries. The lymphatics end in the inguinal lymph glands. The nerves are the ilioinguinal and lumboinguinal branches of the lumbar plexus, the two superficial perineal branches of the internal pudendal nerve, and the pudendal branch of the posterior femoral cutaneous nerve.

THE EPIDIDYMIS — the epididymis is a 6 m long tube that is coiled on the posterior surface of each testicle. The epididymis consists of a central portion or body; an upper enlarged extremity, the head; and a lower pointed extremity, the tail, which is continuous with the ductus deferens, the duct of the testis. The head is intimately connected with the upper end of the testis by means of the efferent ductules of the gland; the tail is connected with the lower end by cellular tissue, and a reflection of the tunica vaginalis. The lateral surface, head and tail of the epididymis are free and covered by the serous membrane; the body is also completely invested by it, excepting along its posterior border; while between the body and the testis is a pouch, named the sinus of the epididymis. The epididymis is connected to the back of the testicle by a fold of the serous membrane. It is within the epididymis that the sperm cells will complete their maturation and their flagella will become functional. Smooth muscle in the wall of the epididymis will propel the sperm into the deferent duct.

THE SCROTUM — the scrotum is a cutaneous pouch which contains the testicles and parts of the spermatic cords. It is divided on its surface into two lateral portions by a ridge or raphé, which is continued forward to the under surface of the penis, and backward, along the middle line of the perineum to the anus. Of these two lateral portions the left hangs lower than the right, to correspond with the greater length of the left spermatic cord. Its external aspect will vary under different circumstances: thus, under the influence of warmth, it will become elongated and flaccid; but, under the influence of cold, it will be short, corrugated, and closely applied to the testicles.

The scrotum consists of two layers: the integument and the dartos tunic.

- The integument is very thin, of a brownish color, and generally thrown into folds or rugae. It is provided with sebaceous follicles, the secretion of which has a peculiar odor, and is beset with thinly scattered, crisp hairs, the roots of which are seen through the skin.
- The dartos tunic is a thin layer of non-striped muscular fibers, continuous, around the base of the scrotum, with the two layers of the superficial fascia of the groin and the perineum; it sends inward a septum, which divides the scrotal pouch into two cavities for the testicles, and extends between the raphé and the under surface of the penis, as far as its root.

The scrotum forms an admirable covering for the protection of the testicles. These organs, lying suspended and loose in the cavity of the scrotum and surrounded by serous membrane, are capable of great mobility, and can therefore easily slip about within the scrotum and thus avoid injuries from blows or squeezes. The skin of the scrotum is very elastic and capable of great distension, and on account of the looseness and amount of subcutaneous tissue, the scrotum becomes greatly enlarged in cases of edema, to which this part is especially liable as a result of its dependent position.

THE INGUINAL CANAL — the inguinal canal is a passage in the lower anterior abdominal wall located just above the inguinal ligament. It starts from the internal inguinal orifice, extends medially and inferiorly through the abdominal wall layers and ends in the external inguinal orifice. This canal is about four to six centimeters in length. It functions as a passageway for structures between the intra- and extra-abdominal structures. It transmits the spermatic cord, gonadal vessels, and lymphatics.

There are two nerves that pass within the structures of the inguinal canal, the ilioinguinal nerve and the genitofemoral nerve. A third nerve, iliohypogastric nerve, which will supply sensation to the skin above the genitalia, does not pass through the inguinal canal. It pierces the transverse abdominal muscle then the external oblique in the inguinal area.

The inguinal canal is made of a floor, anterior wall, posterior wall, and a roof. The floor of the canal is made of the inguinal ligament. The inguinal ligament is a thickened inferior portion of the external oblique aponeurosis. The walls of the inguinal canal include the following:

- An anterior wall that is composed of the aponeurosis of the external oblique muscle and reinforced laterally by the internal oblique muscle. The superficial inguinal ring also contributes to the medial third.
- A posterior wall, also called the floor, is formed by the transversalis fascia, conjoint tendon, and deep inguinal ring.

- A superior wall, also called the roof, is formed by the medial crus of the aponeurosis of the external oblique, the musculoaponeurotic arches of the internal oblique and transverse abdominal muscles, and the transversalis fascia.
- An inferior wall, which is formed by the inguinal ligament, is reinforced medially by the lacunar ligament and laterally by the iliopubic tract.

פרקים

The anterior wall is made of the external oblique aponeurosis. The posterior wall is made of the transversalis muscle. The more complex part the roof is made of the combined fibers of the internal oblique and transverse abdominal muscle and aponeurosis including the conjoint tendon. The conjoint tendon constitutes the main part of the medial portion of the posterior wall.

There are two openings to the inguinal canal:

- The deep or internal ring is located just above the midpoint of the inguinal ligament and lateral to the epigastric vessels. The deep ring is formed by the transversalis fascia which provides the posterior covering of the contents of the inguinal ring.

- The superficial or external ring is the terminal end of the inguinal canal. It is located just superior to the pubic tubercle. The superficial ring has a triangular shape that is made by fibers of the external oblique muscle. These fibers continue to cover the inguinal contents as they descend into the scrotal area. Contiguous with the superficial ring are tendinous fibers (i.e., interligamentous fibers) which function to prevent the ring from enlarging.

THE SPERMATIC CORD — the spermatic cord extends from the abdominal inguinal ring, where the structures of which it is composed converge, to the back part of the testis. In the abdominal wall the cord passes obliquely along the inguinal canal, lying at first beneath the internal oblique, and upon the transverse fascia; but nearer the pubis, it rests upon the inguinal and lacunar ligaments, having the aponeurosis of the external oblique in front of it, and the inguinal falx behind it. It then escapes at the subcutaneous ring, and descends nearly vertically into the scrotum. The left cord is rather longer than the right, consequently the left testis hangs somewhat lower than its fellow.

Structurally, the spermatic cord is composed of arteries, veins, lymphatics, nerves, and the excretory duct of the testis. These structures are connected together by areolar tissue, and invested by the layers brought down by the testis in its descent.

SEMINIFEROUS TUBULE — seminiferous tubules are coiled tubules of the testicles and in which spermatozoa, mature sperm cells, are produced.

Seminiferous tubules contain epithelium consisting of epithelial somatic cells, designated as Sertoli cells, which envelop and support germ cells undergoing progressive differentiation and development into mature spermatozoa.

Once released into the lumen, mature spermatozoa are transported within seminiferous tubules, which measure up to 70 cm in length and are tightly coiled within lobules of the testicles, to the rete testicle, the efferent ducts, the epididymis, and, finally, the deferent duct for ultimate ejaculation.

The seminiferous tubules are surrounded by a basal lamina composed of extracellular matrix that serves to separate them from the interstitial compartment, provides structural integrity to the tubules, and regulates the function of cells in contact with it. They are also surrounded by clusters of other types of epithelial somatic cells designated as “Leydig cells”, in the interstitial compartment between each tubule.

Sertoli cells extend from the basal lamina to the lumen of tubules, and adjacent Sertoli cells envelop and provide a structural scaffold for germ cells as they differentiate within the tubule. Undifferentiated spermatogenic stem cells, designated as spermatogonia, lie along the basal lamina at the periphery of tubules, interspersed between Sertoli cells. Adjacent Sertoli cells surround spermatogonia and form specialized junctional complexes or tight junctions that divide the seminiferous tubule into the basal compartment, in which spermatogonia reside, and the adluminal compartment, which is occupied by differentiating germ cells.

Sertoli cell tight junctions impede the passage of large molecules, steroids, and ions into the seminiferous tubule and constitute the cytologic basis of the blood-testis barrier, analogous to the blood-brain barrier. In the adluminal compartment, spermatocytes derived from spermatogonia in the basal compartment undergo meiosis to form spermatids that progressively mature (spermiogenesis), with the more mature germ cells occupying positions closer to the lumen, until mature spermatozoa are released into the lumen of the tubule (spermiation).

C. Spermatogenesis

SPERMATOGENESIS

Spermatogenesis is the process of sperm cell development. Rounded immature sperm cells will undergo successive mitotic and meiotic divisions, which is designated as spermatocytogenesis, and a metamorphic change, which is designated as spermiogenesis, to produce spermatozoa. It is an application of the concept of “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”.

MITOSIS AND MEIOSIS — Mitosis, as we have indicated already, is the process of cell duplication where two progeny cells are formed with exactly the same DNA and chromosomal content of the original diploid (2N) mother cell. The cells of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model contain 23 pairs of chromosomes among which 22 pairs of homologous autosomes and one pair of chromosomes dedicated to the reproduction (replication) of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

Mitosis (M) encompasses just one step in the eukaryotic cell cycle, which can be represented by a sequence in the form: $G_1 > S > G_2 > M > C$. Cells will grow during the dominant G_1 phase. Replication of chromosomes will occur in the S phase. Preparation for mitosis will take place during the G_2 phase for replication of organelles and synthesis of microtubules. Interphase includes the combined stages G_1 , S, and G_2 . During mitosis the following will occur: chromosomes will condense, the nuclear envelope will disappear, and spindle fibers will begin to form from microtubules (prophase); centromeres of duplicate progeny chromatids will align along the spindle equator (metaphase); chromatids will separate and migrate toward opposite poles (anaphase); the mitotic apparatus will be disassembled, autonomous nuclear envelopes will be established, and the chromosomes will uncoil (telophase). The final stage of the cell cycle, when cell division actually will occur, is designated as cytokinesis (C).

Meiosis is a special process of reductional cell division; it results in the formation of four gametes containing half (1N) the number of chromosomes found in somatic cells. A gamete is a mature haploid germ cell — that is to say, a reproduction cell that contains a single set of chromosomes — having either the “MALE” adjective or the “FEMALE” adjective, and which is able to unite with another of the opposite adjective in the reproduction process to form a zygote. Haploid gametes will unite at fertilization to create a diploid zygote.

Remember that the heterogametic male (XY) will determine whether the embryo will inherit either the “MALE” adjective or the “FEMALE” adjective.

Approximately one-half of spermatozoa contain either an X or Y chromosome (the chromosomal complement is XX and is found in mature haploids having the “FEMALE” adjective, and therefore, ova in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective can only contribute an X chromosome to the offspring). “GENES” carried on the X chromosome that inhibit spermatogenesis will be inactivated in XY somatic cells.

Steps of meiosis have been outlined in one previous section at the beginning of these brief descriptions. Meiosis differs from mitosis in two critical respects. During prophase of meiosis I, chromosomes will pair along their length and will come in contact in discrete areas of synapsis (chiasmata). Chromatids can exchange base pairs by crossing-over. The recombination of segments of chromosomes will provide a mechanism for correcting damage in the DNA helix. Secondly, non-identical progeny chromatids do not replicate between serial nuclear divisions. Meiosis II is essentially mitotic.

SPERMATOCYTOGENESIS — During spermatocytogenesis, the initial pool of diploid cells designated as spermatogonia will proliferate by mitosis. Each spermatogonium will give two identical progeny cells. One of these progeny cells — which will be designated as A1 spermatogonia — will be used to replenish the pool of spermatogonia. The other progeny cell — which will be designated type B spermatogonium — will eventually form mature sperm cell. There are several different types of spermatogonia and they will be denoted as A-0 through A-4, intermediate (IN), and B. Mitosis ends when a B-spermatogonium yields two primary spermatocytes.

Type B spermatogonia will replicate by mitosis several times to form identical diploid cells linked by cytoplasm bridges, these cells will now be designated as primary spermatocytes. Primary spermatocytes will then undergo the meiosis process.

The diploid number of primary spermatocytes will be halved during meiosis. A primary spermatocyte will be transformed into two secondary spermatocytes during meiosis I — these cells then in turn are converted into (1N) spermatids during meiosis II. The second meiotic division is rapid. Spermatocytes and spermatids will be larger than their ascendant spermatogonia.

The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the “MALE” adjective has been endowed with an almost unlimited capacity to produce germ cells; this will be accomplished by replenishment of type A spermatogonia early in the mitosis.

The occurrence of endogenous damage to the genetic material is inevitable in proliferative cells. “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has also designed and established a series of “specific processes” that will ensure that the DNA fidelity of gametes is sustained. Everything that is original in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model has been well thought out, designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented accordingly by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

SPERMOGENESIS — throughout spermatocytogenesis, cells will retain a rounded configuration. Spermatids will undergo a tremendous change in form during spermiogenesis, into the streamline spermatozoa adapted for fertilization.

The transformation of a round spermatid into a spermatozoon represents a complex sequence of events that constitute the process of spermiogenesis. No cell division occurs, but a conventional round cell becomes converted into a spermatozoon with the capacity for motility.

SPERMOGENESIS IN THE DEVELOPMENT OF A SPERM CELL
The changes during spermiogenesis involving the transformation of a round spermatid to a mature spermatozoon

The formation of the acrosome will commence by the coalescence of a series of granules from the Golgi complex. These will migrate to come into contact with the nuclear membrane where they will form a cap-like structure which will become applied over approximately 30-50% of the nuclear surface. Acrosome biogenesis will begin early in round spermatid development, and progressively will extend as a “cap” over the nucleus as round spermatids differentiate further.

Once the acrosome will be fully extended, round spermatids will begin what will be known as the elongation phase of spermiogenesis. As spermatid elongation will commence, the nucleus will polarize to one side of the cell and will come into close apposition with the cell membrane in a region where it will be covered by the acrosomal cap. Soon after this polarization, the spermatid’s chromatin will start to visibly condense, forming progressively larger and more electron dense granules together with a change in the shape of the condensed nucleus. The condensation of chromatin will be achieved by the replacement of lysine-rich histones with transitional proteins which in turn will be subsequently replaced by arginine-rich protamines. The spermatid chromatin subsequently will become highly stabilized and resistant to digestion by the enzyme DNase. Associated with these changes will be a marked decrease in nuclear volume and, importantly, the cessation of gene transcription. Therefore, the subsequent spermatid elongation phase will proceed in the absence of active gene transcription.

At the commencement of spermatid elongation, a complex, microtubule-based structure that will be known as the manchette will be formed. The microtubule network will emanate from a perinuclear ring at the base of the acrosome and will extend outwards into the cytoplasm. The manchette is closely opposed to the nuclear membrane, and will participate in nuclear head shaping.

The formation of the tail will commence early in spermiogenesis in the round spermatid phase, when a filamentous structure will emerge from one of the pair of centrioles which lie close to the Golgi complex. Associated with the changing nuclear-cytoplasmic relationships, the developing flagellum and the pair of centrioles will become lodged in a fossa in the nucleus at the opposite pole to the acrosome. The central core of the flagella’s axial filament, designated as the axoneme, consists of nine doublet microtubules surrounding two single central microtubules, which represents a common pattern found in cilia.⁶⁹⁰ This basic structure will be modified at the region of its articulation with the nucleus through the formation of a complex structure that will be known as the connecting piece.

Metamorphosis of the flagella will proceed during the elongation phase, as it will acquire its characteristic neck region, mid-, principal- and end-pieces. The development of the flagella will involve mechanisms similar to those used in ciliated cells.

The middle and principal pieces will contain the mitochondrial and fibrous sheath components, respectively, and will include the outer dense fibers. The formation of the mitochondrial sheath will occur at the time of the final reorganization of the cytoplasm and organelles of the spermatid. The mitochondria that will remain around the periphery of the spermatid will aggregate around the proximal part of the flagellum to form a complex helical structure.

SPERMATOGENIC CYCLE AND WAVE — If one closely examines serial cross-sections of a seminiferous tubule you will discover that sperm cells differentiate in distinctive associations. Each spermatogenic association is classified as a stage of the seminiferous epithelial cycle. A spermatogenic cycle is defined as the time it takes for the reappearance of the same stage within a given segment of the tubule. Each stage of the cycle follows in an orderly sequence along the length of the tubule. The distance between the same stages is designated as the spermatogenic wave. One tubule can contain numerous complete waves. Adjacent segments of the tubule evidently communicate as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it.

The number of stages within a spermatogenic cycle and the number of cycles required for the completion of spermatogenesis in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model are: six stages and four 16-day cycles, in accordance with those 64 equilibrium regions, which characterize “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Space” of a first “Formative Divine Particle” with respect to the “Generative Divine Particle” and through which the 64 equilibrium regions will pass.

BLOOD-TESTICLES BARRIER — as sperm cells will mature they will move between Sertoli cells from the basal toward the adluminal compartment of the seminiferous tubule. Because nucleotide recombinations can occur during meiosis I, the genetic code of chromosomes of gametes can differ from that of somatic ascendant cells. Occluding junctions (junctional complex) that interconnect adjacent Sertoli cells will shield the secondary spermatocytes, spermatids, and spermatozoa, allowing their further growth. The blood-testis barrier also will act to conserve certain products of Sertoli cells within the seminiferous tubule, such as the Androgen-binding protein (ABP), which is a glycoprotein (beta-globulin) produced by the Sertoli cells. The epithelial syncytium of this barrier extends through the epididymis.

SPERMATION — Spermiation is the process by which mature spermatozoa will undergo a further complex remodeling and then released from the seminiferous epithelium into the lumen of the tubule prior to their passage to the epididymis. Most of the “excess baggage” (cytoplasm and organelles) of the spermatid will be discarded within the seminiferous epithelium in the form of a residual body. A small amount of cytoplasmic material, the cytoplasmic droplet, will remain attached within the neck region or around the middle piece as the spermatozoon will make its way into the epididymis.

This remodeling will include the removal of specialized adhesion junctions that have ensured tight adhesion of the spermatid to the seminiferous epithelium during its elongation process, further remodeling of the spermatid head and acrosome and removal of the extensive cytoplasm will occur to produce the streamlined spermatozoon. The cytoplasm of the spermatid will migrate to a caudal position around the tail and will be markedly reduced in volume. The remnants of the spermatid cytoplasm will form what is termed the residual body. The residual bodies will contain mitochondria, lipid and ribosomal particles, and will be phagocytosed and moved to the base of the seminiferous epithelium where they will be broken down by lysosomal mechanisms. The final release of sperm at the end of spermiation will be an instantaneous event, which will involve phosphorylation-dependent signaling cascades within the seminiferous epithelium resulting in changes in the adhesive nature of cell adhesion molecules, culminating in the seminiferous epithelium “letting go” of the mature spermatid.

FURTHER MATURATIONS — seminiferous spermatozoa lack motility and fertilizing capacity. During transit through the epididymis, which takes 14 days, the cytoplasmic droplet will migrate distally along the tail of the spermatozoon and will fall off due to an increase in cellular motility.

A mature sperm cell will consist of several parts, as shown in the figure. The head contains the 23 pairs of chromosomes. On the tip of the head is the acrosome, which is similar to a lysosome and contains enzymes to digest the membrane of an egg cell. Within the middle piece are mitochondria that produce ATP molecules. The flagellum provides motility, the capability of the sperm cell to move. It is the beating of the flagellum that requires energy from ATP molecules.

Note that once sperm cells will leave the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective and enter the reproductive tract of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective, the living conditions that are present in the production medium which has been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective will cause the sperm cells to undergo capacitation, which is the removal of cholesterol and glycoproteins from the head of the sperm cell to allow it to bind to the zona pellucida of the egg cell in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

DEFERENT DUCT — also designated as ductus deferens, or vas deferens, extends from the epididymis in the scrotum on its own side into the abdominal cavity through the inguinal canal. This canal is an opening in the abdominal wall for the spermatic cord, a connective tissue sheath that contains the deferent duct, testicular blood vessels, and nerves. Once inside the abdominal cavity, the deferent duct extends upward over the urinary bladder, then, down the posterior side to join the ejaculatory duct on its own side. The smooth muscle layer of the deferent duct contracts in waves of peristalsis as part of ejaculation.

EJACULATORY DUCTS — these are the two canals through which semen is ejaculated. Each of the two ejaculatory ducts will receive sperm from the deferent duct and the secretion of the seminal vesicle on its own side. Both ejaculatory ducts empty into the single urethra.

SEMINAL VESICLES — the paired seminal vesicles are posterior to the urinary bladder. Their secretion contains fructose to provide an energy source for sperm cells and is alkaline in order to enhance sperm cells motility. The duct of each seminal vesicle joins the deferent duct on that side to form the ejaculatory duct.

PROSTATE GLAND — it is a muscular gland just below the urinary bladder. The prostate gland is about 3 cm high by 4 cm wide by 2 cm deep, about the size of a walnut. It surrounds the first 2 cm of the urethra as it emerges from the bladder. The glandular tissue of the prostate secretes an alkaline fluid that helps maintain the sperm cell motility. The smooth muscle of the prostate gland contracts during ejaculation to contribute to the expulsion of semen from the urethra.

BULBOURETHRAL GLANDS — bulbourethral glands are about the size of peas and are located below the prostate gland; they empty into the urethra. Their alkaline secretion coats the interior of the urethra just before ejaculation, which neutralizes any acidic urine that might be present.

You have probably noticed that the secretions of the “MALE” reproductive glands are alkaline; that is to say, they have the properties of an alkali, or contain alkali, they have a pH greater than 7. This is important because the cavity of the “FEMALE” reproductive system will have an acidic pH. The alkalinity of seminal fluid will help neutralize the acidic pH and permits sperm cell motility in what might otherwise be an unfavorable environment.

URETHRA AND PENIS — the urethra is the last of the ducts through which semen travels, and its longest portion is enclosed within the penis. The penis is a pendulous organ suspended from the front and sides of the pubic arch and containing the greater part of the urethra. In the flaccid condition it is cylindrical in shape, but when erect assumes the form of a triangular prism with rounded angles, one side of the prism forming the dorsum. It is composed of three cylindrical masses of cavernous tissues bound together by fibrous tissues and covered with skin. Two of the masses are lateral and are designated as the penis cavernous body; the third is median and is designated as the urethral cavernous body (or spongy body).

The cavernous body of the penis forms the greater part of the substance of the penis. For their anterior three-fourths they lie in intimate apposition with one another, but behind they diverge in the form of two tapering processes, designated as the crura, which are firmly connected to the rami of the pubic arch. Traced from behind forward, each crus begins by a blunt-pointed process in front of the tuberosity of the ischium. Just before it meets its fellow, it presents a slight enlargement, designated as the bulb of the penis cavernous body. Beyond this point the crus undergoes a constriction and merges into the proper cavernous body, which retains a uniform diameter to its anterior end. Each penis cavernous body ends abruptly in a rounded extremity some distance from the point of the penis.

The arteries that bring the blood to the cavernous spaces are the deep arteries of the penis and branches from the dorsal arteries of the penis, which perforate the fibrous capsule, along the upper surface, especially near the forepart of the organ. On entering the cavernous structure the arteries divide into branches, which are supported and enclosed by the trabeculae. Some of these arteries end in a capillary network, the branches of which open directly into the cavernous spaces; others assume a tendril-like appearance, and form convoluted and somewhat dilated vessels. They open into the spaces, and from them are also given off small capillary branches to supply the trabecular structure. They are bound down in the spaces by fine fibrous processes, and are most abundant in the back part of the cavernous body.

The blood from the cavernous spaces is returned by a series of vessels, some of which emerge in considerable numbers from the base of the glans penis and converge on the dorsum of the organ to form the deep dorsal vein; others pass out on the upper surface of the corpora cavernosa and join the same vein; some emerge from the under surface of the corpora cavernosa penis and receiving branches from the corpus cavernosum urethrae, wind around the sides of the penis to end in the deep dorsal vein; but the greater number pass out at the root of the penis and join the prostatic plexus.

The nerves are derived from the pudendal nerve and the pelvic plexuses. On the glans and bulb some filaments of the cutaneous nerves have Pacinian bodies connected with them, and, many of them end in peculiar endbulbs.

SEMEN — semen, also designated as seminal fluid, is an organic fluid created to contain spermatozoa, the mature sperm cells. Semen consists of mature sperm cells and the secretions of the seminal vesicles, prostate gland, and bulbourethral glands; its average pH will be about 7.4. It was designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” to fertilize the ovum of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. The secretions of the seminal vesicles, prostate gland, and bulbourethral glands, and which are contained in semen, are proteolytic and other enzymes as well as fructose. They promote the survival of spermatozoa, and provide a medium through which they can move or “swim”. During ejaculation, approximately 2 to 4 mL of semen will be expelled. Each milliliter of semen will contains about 100 million of sperm cells.

THE “FEMALE” REPRODUCTIVE SYSTEM

“THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and having the “FEMALE” adjective with the capacity to serve as a medium of production of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” as “BEFOREHAND CREATED ENERGY FORM” that has already been created by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and associated to instances of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. Through the “FEMALE” reproductive system, and appropriate hormonal glands, in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective, this production will take place using the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” that will be present and contained in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective. This production will be the unfolding of “cell zero”; it will be a demonstration of an application of the concept of “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”.

The primary reproductive organs of the instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and having the “FEMALE” adjective consists of the paired ovaries and fallopian tubes, the single uterus and vagina, and the external genital structures. The ovaries will produce the egg cells, also designated as the ova or oocytes. The oocytes will then be transported to the fallopian tube where fertilization by a sperm cell may occur. The fertilized egg then will move to the uterus, where the uterine lining will have thickened in response to the normal hormones of the reproductive cycle. Once in the uterus, the fertilized egg can implant into thickened uterine lining and continue to develop. If implantation does not take place, the uterine lining will be shed as menstrual flow. In addition, the female reproductive system will produce female reproduction hormones that maintain the reproductive cycle.

THE OVARIES — the ovaries are two nodular bodies, situated one on either side of the uterus in relation to the lateral wall of the pelvis, and attached to the back of the broad ligament of the uterus, behind and below the uterine tubes of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. The ovaries are of a grayish-pink color, and present either a smooth or a puckered uneven surface. They are each about 4 cm in length, 2 cm in width, and about 8 mm in thickness, and weigh from 2 to 3.5 gm. Each ovary presents a lateral and a medial surface, an upper or tubal and a lower or uterine extremity, and an anterior or mesovarium and a posterior free border. It lies in a shallow depression, named the ovarian fossa, on the lateral wall of the pelvis; this fossa is bounded above by the external iliac vessels, in front by the obliterated umbilical artery, and behind by the ureter.

The mature ovary can be subdivided into three regions: the cortex, medulla (or marrow), and hilum regions.

The cortex consists of: the surface epithelium, the tunica albuginea, the ovarian follicles (primordial, primary, secondary, small, medium, large Graafian follicle) and the corpora lutea. Follicles and luteal structures (designated as yellow body, or corpus luteum (CL)) will be mainly dispersed within the interstitial of the ovarian cortex.

The medulla (or marrow) consists of large blood vessels and nerves. Connective tissue of the cortical region, particularly the (outermost) tunica albuginea, is more densely oriented than within the medulla (marrow).

The hilum contains large spiral arteries and the hilum or ovary Leydig cells. Blood vessels and nerves traverse through the supportive ligament of the ovary, the mesovarium, and enter/exit the ovary through the hilus.

OVARIAN FOLLICLE — an ovarian follicle is a densely packed spheroid cellular aggregation of somatic cells that contains an immature oocyte and secretes steroid and inhibin hormones that influence stages of the menstrual cycle. The menstrual cycle is the regular natural change that will occur in the “FEMALE” reproductive system (specifically the uterus and ovaries) and that will make pregnancy possible. The menstrual cycle will be required for the production of oocytes, and for the preparation of the uterus for pregnancy. The menstrual cycle will occur due to the rise and fall of estrogen. This cycle will result in the thickening of the lining of the uterus, and the growth of an oocyte, (which will be required for pregnancy). The mature oocyte will be released from an ovary around the fourteenth day in the cycle; the thickened lining of the uterus will provide nutrients to an embryo after implantation. If pregnancy does not occur, the lining will be released in what will be designated as menstruation or a “period”.

An ovarian follicle will not form without an ovum. Ovarian follicles will be classified in ascending progression of maturity as: primordial, primary, secondary, tertiary, or preovulatory (Graafian). This ascending progression of maturity is designated as the folliculogenesis.

FOLLICULOGENESIS — the process of folliculogenesis will occur within the cortex of the ovary. Folliculogenesis can be regarded as a process of attaining successively higher levels of organization by means of cell proliferation and cytodifferentiation. It is an application of the concept of “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”. It includes four major developmental events: 1) primordial follicle selection; 2) preantral follicle development; 3) selection and growth of the antral follicle; and 4) follicle atresia.

Folliculogenesis describes the progression of a number of small primordial follicles into large preovulatory follicles that occurs in part during the menstrual cycle. Each primary ovarian follicle contains an oocyte, a potential ovum or egg cell. The primary oocytes will undergo 3 stages: the pre-antral, the antral, and the pre-ovulatory.

THE PRE-ANTRAL STAGE — the primary oocyte will grow tremendously whilst still being in meiosis I. The follicular cells will grow and proliferate to form a stratified cuboidal epithelium. These cells will now be designated as granulosa cells and they will secrete glycoproteins to form the zona pellucida around the primary oocyte. Surrounding connective tissue cells also will differentiate to become the theca folliculi, a specialised layer of surrounding cells that is responsive to Luteinizing hormone (LH) and can secrete androgens under its influence.

THE ANTRAL STAGE — fluid filled spaces will form between granulosa cells, these eventually will combine together to form a central fluid filled space designated as the antrum. The follicles will now be designated as secondary follicles. In each 30 days cycle one of these secondary follicles will become dominant and develop further under the influence of the follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH), the Luteinizing hormone (LH) and oestrogen.

PRE-OVULATORY STAGE — the Luteinizing hormone (LH) surge will induce this stage and meiosis I will be now completed. Two haploid cells will be formed within the follicle, but they will be of unequal size. One of the progeny cells will receive far less cytoplasm than the other and forms the first polar body, which will not go on to form an ovum. The other haploid cell is known as the secondary oocyte. Both daughter cells then undergo meiosis II, the first polar body will replicate to give two polar bodies but the secondary oocyte arrests in metaphase of meiosis II, 3 hours prior to ovulation.

Folliculogenesis will be continuous, meaning that at any time the ovary will contain follicles in many stages of development. The majority of follicles will never complete development. A few will develop fully to produce a secondary oocyte which will be released by rupture of the follicle in a “specific process” designated as ovulation. In addition, follicles that have formed a fluid-filled cavity (antrum) will be designated as “antral follicles” or Graafian follicles.

THE PRIMORDIAL FOLLICLE — Primordial follicles will be the fundamental reproductive units of the ovary because they will give rise to all dominant follicles, and therefore to all menstrual cycles. The entry of a halted primordial follicle into the pool of growing follicles will be designated as the selection or the primordial follicle activation. A primordial follicle will contains a small primary oocyte (~25µm in diameter) halted in the prolonged resting phase in oogenesis in the meiosis, a single layer of flattened or squamous granulosa cells closely apposed to the oocyte, and a basal lamina. By virtue of the basal lamina, the granulosa cells and oocyte will exist within a microenvironment in which direct contact with other cells will not occur. Primordial follicles will not have an independent blood supply and thus they will have limited access to the endocrine system.

THE PRIMARY FOLLICLE — A primary follicle will be defined by the presence of one or more cuboidal granulosa cells that will be arranged in a single layer surrounding the oocyte. The major developmental events that will occur in the primary follicle include the follicle-stimulating hormone (FSH) receptor expression and oocyte growth and differentiation.

The primary follicle development will be accompanied by remarkable changes in the oocyte. During the pre-antral stage, the oocyte will increase in diameter from ~25 μm to ~120 μm and will develop its surrounding extracellular matrix, the zona pellucida. This enormous growth will occur as a consequence of the reactivation of the oocyte genome. During the growth phase, the oocyte will be highly transcriptionally active because it must generate sufficient proteins and mRNA transcripts to support its own growth as well as future critical processes of oocyte maturation, fertilization and early embryo development. Some oocyte transcripts will be immediately translated and the resulting proteins will contribute to ongoing oocyte growth and differentiation, while others required for future developmental processes will be stored for later translation.

An important event in the primary follicle development will be the development of intimate intercellular connections between the oocyte and granulosa cells. Both the oocyte and granulosa cells will elaborate numerous cytoplasmic projections and microvilli that will interdigitate with each other to create an extremely large surface area for diffusion. In addition, some of the follicle cell microvilli and cytoplasmic projections will physically enter deeply into the oocyte via invagination of the oocyte plasma membrane, occasionally reaching close to the nuclear membrane. Cell-cell contacts comprised of adhesive junctions and gap junctions will be established in these regions. Gap junctions, which are intercellular channels composed of proteins called connexins, directly will couple adjacent cells allowing the diffusion of ions, metabolites, and signaling molecules.

THE SECONDARY FOLLICLE — As preantral folliculogenesis will continue, the structure of the follicle will begin to change. The major changes to occur during secondary follicle development will include the accumulation of increased numbers of granulosa cells that will form multiple layers around the oocyte, and the acquisition of a theca. The development of a primary to a fully grown secondary follicle will result from an active autocrine/paracrine regulatory process that will involve growth factors produced by the oocyte.

Secondary follicle development will begin with the acquisition of a second layer of granulosa cells. This step will be designated as the primary-to-secondary follicle transition. It will involve a change in the arrangement of the granulosa cells from a simple cuboidal epithelium to a stratified or pseudostratified columnar epithelium.

THE ANTRAL FOLLICLE — An antral follicle is characterized by a cavity or “antrum” containing fluid termed follicular fluid. Follicular fluid is a plasma exudate conditioned by secretory products from the oocyte and granulosa cells. It is the medium in which the granulosa cells and oocyte reside and through which regulatory molecules must pass on their way to and from this microenvironment. The onset of antrum development will be characterized by the appearance of a fluid filled cavity at one pole of the oocyte.

After the antrum will form, the basic plan of the antral follicle will be established, and all the various cell types will be present in their proper position awaiting the stimuli that will lead to gradual growth and development.

An antral follicle is a member of the heterogeneous family of relatively large follicles that in ovaries measure 0.4 to ~25 mm in diameter. The structure and organization of antral follicles will remain essentially the same despite enormous growth and regardless of the stage of the menstrual cycle. The overall size of an antral follicle will be determined largely by the size of the antrum, which in turn will be determined by the volume of follicular fluid. The proliferation of the follicle cells will also contribute to follicle size. In a dominant follicle, the granulosa and theca cells will proliferate extensively (as much as 100-fold) concomitant with the antrum becoming filled with follicular fluid. Thus, increased follicular fluid accumulation and cell proliferation will also be responsible for the tremendous growth of the dominant follicle during the follicular phase of the cycle. It will be the cessation of follicular fluid formation and mitosis that will limit the size of the atretic follicle. An atretic follicle will not develop beyond the small to the medium stage (1-10 mm). The relative abundance of antral follicles and their sizes vary as a function of the menstrual cycle and age of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

In the antral follicle, the granulosa cells and oocyte will be distributed as a mass of precisely shaped and precisely positioned cells. This spatial organization will give rise to distinct subtypes of granulosa cells: the membrana, the periantral area, and the cumulus oophorus.

THE PREOVULATORY FOLLICLE — the wall of the preovulatory follicle is composed of three distinctive layers: theca externa, theca interna, and membrana granulosa. The theca externa is the outer layer of the mature follicle; it contains smooth muscle-like cells interdispersed within a dense connective tissue matrix. Blood vessels and nerves that serve the follicle terminate within the theca interna. The theca interna also contains polygonal shaped steroidogenic cells. A basement membrane separates the thecal layers from the granulosa. Granulosa cells will play an important role in follicular endocrinology and they will interact with the ovum.

The ovum of developed follicles is situated within a fluid-filled cavity (antrum) on a pedicle of specialized granulosa cells, the cumulus oophorus. The plasma (vitelline) membrane of the ovum is immediately encircled by a sulfated glycoprotein coat called the zona pellucida. Granulosa cells that contact the zona pellucida, the corona radiata, have projections extending to the surface of the ovum. Junctions between granulosa cells shield the ovum from immunological recognition (blood-follicle barrier). Most ovarian follicles will contain a single egg.

Follicular atresia (degeneration) can occur at any step during the developmental life of a follicle (that is to say, from the primordial up to the preovulatory stage). The ovum of atretic follicles will begin to shrink and may divide. Dissociative granulosa cells have a low mitotic index and a preponderance of pyknotic (condensed) nuclei. The theca of atretic follicles will undergo hypertrophy (increased size) and sometimes luteinizes (corpus luteum atretica).

The follicle destined to ovulate will protrude from the surface of the ovary and will rupture along its apical aspect. Just before the time of ovulation the ovum, which is normally connected at the basal wall in opposition to the follicular apex, will become detached from the underlying granulosa layer. Follicular fluid will provide a suspending medium for the ovum during its exit from the follicle.

OVULATION — On or about the midterm of the menstrual cycle, the preovulatory follicle will release a mature egg enclosed within a cumulus complex for possible fertilization. This process, which is designated as the ovulation, will require the collective actions of the endocrine system, immune signals, and intraovarian paracrine factors. The distinct cellular compartments in the preovulatory follicle — the oocyte, cumulus granulosa cells, mural granulosa cells, and theca cells — will have dramatically different but strictly coordinated responses to the hormonal and other signals controlling ovulation.

After a prolonged resting state, the oocyte in the preovulatory follicle will resume meiosis during the ovulation sequence. The oocyte nucleus, which will be designated as the “germinal vesicle”, will undergo a series of changes that will involve germinal vesicle breakdown (GVBD), emission of the first polar body, and progression of meiosis to the second meiotic metaphase. Meiosis will be halted here and will proceed no further unless the ovulated egg is fertilized. Meiotic maturation is a vital event in ovulation because it is obligatory for normal fertilization.

The ovulated follicle will be transformed into a new steroidogenic (luteal) organ. The developing luteal structure will be designated as the corpus hemorrhagicum (“bloody body”). At follicular rupture the antrum will become filled with some blood. The blood clot within the antrum will be soon resorbed and replaced by luteinized granulosa cells. The follicle, which has grown in size, will now be mature.

LUTEINIZATION — After ovulation, the follicle wall will develop into the corpus luteum. The corpus luteum is a large endocrine gland that will produce large amounts of progesterone and estradiol during the first seven (7) days of the luteal phase of the cycle. There will be a fibrin clot where the antrum and liquor folliculi were located, into which loose connective tissue and blood cells will invade. Cells that will make up the corpus luteum will be contributed by the membrana granulosa, theca interna, theca externa, and invading blood tissue.

After ovulation, the granulosa cells will attain a large size, approximately 35 μm in diameter. These cells, now designated as granulosa-lutein cells, will have an ultrastructure typical of differentiated steroidogenic cells; they contain abundant smooth endoplasmic reticulum, tubular cristae in the mitochondria, and large clusters of lipid droplets containing cholesterol esters in the cytoplasm.

The theca-interstitial cells also will be incorporated into the corpus luteum, becoming the theca-lutein cells. They can be distinguished from granulosa-lutein cells because they are smaller (approximately 15 μm in diameter) and stain more darkly. Theca-lutein cells also exhibit the ultrastructure of active steroid-secreting cells. They strongly express the enzymes in the androgen biosynthetic pathway and produce androstenedione.

The Luteinizing hormone (LH) surge will increase collagenase activity so that the follicular wall will be weakened, this combined with muscular contractions of the ovarian wall will result in the ovum being released from the ovary and being taken up into the fallopian tube via the fimbriae (finger-like projections of the fallopian tube).

FERTILISATION — the secondary oocyte will only complete meiosis II following fertilisation, giving off a third polar body once meiosis II is completed and a fertilised egg. If fertilisation never occurs, the oocyte will degenerate 24 hours after ovulation, remaining in meiosis II. If the egg is fertilised however, the peristaltic movements of the fallopian tube will move the egg to the uterus where it can implant into the posterior uterine wall.

Contrary to spermatogenesis in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the “MALE” adjective, which can last indefinitely, folliculogenesis in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the “FEMALE” adjective will end when the remaining follicles in the ovaries will be incapable of responding to the hormonal cues that previously recruited some follicles to mature. This depletion in follicle supply will signal that, which will be designated as the beginning of menopause — the time when menstrual periods will stop permanently.

TUBULAR ORGANS — Tubular organs of the “FEMALE” reproductive system include the oviducts (Fallopian tubes), uterus (womb), cervix (birth canal), and vagina (copulatory organ). Fertilization will occur within the oviduct. The embryo will develop into a fetus within the uterus. The cervix will intercede between the vagina and uterus; it will become sealed during pregnancy and thus protect the unborn from damages by external contaminants.

THE OVIDUCT — the oviduct can be segmented into three regions: the infundibulum (“funnel”), the ampulla, and the isthmus. At ovulation the oocyte will be captured by the ovarian bursa or will be retrieved by infundibular finger-like projections (fimbriae) and passed into the oviduct. Epithelium of the oviduct is ciliated for moving the oocyte toward the site of fertilization within the ampulla. The isthmus is the point at which the oviduct joins the uterus. Each oviduct is cut and tied during a tubal ligation.

FALLOPIAN TUBES — there are two fallopian tubes (also designated as uterine tubes or oviducts); each is about 10 cm long. The lateral end of a fallopian tube encloses an ovary, and the medial end opens into the uterus. The end of the tube that encloses the ovary has fimbriae, fringe-like projections that create currents in the fluid surrounding the ovary to pull the ovum into the fallopian tube.

Because the ovum has no means of self-locomotion (as do sperm cells), the structure of the fallopian tube, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, will ensure that the ovum will be kept moving toward the uterus. The smooth muscle layer of the tube will contract in peristaltic waves that help propel the ovum. The lining (mucosa) is extensively folded and is made of ciliated epithelial tissue. The sweeping action of the cilia also will move the ovum toward the uterus. Fertilization will take place in the fallopian tube. If not fertilized, an ovum will degenerate within 24 hours and disintegrate, either in the tube or the uterus. If fertilized, the ovum will become a zygote and will be swept into the uterus; this will take about 4 to 5 days.

UTERUS — the uterus is shaped like an upside-down pear, about 7.5 cm long by 5 cm wide by 2.5 cm deep, superior to the urinary bladder and between the two

The parts and layers of the uterus are shown in figure. The fundus is the upper portion above the entry of the fallopian tubes, and the body is the large central portion. The narrow, lower end of the uterus is the cervix, which opens into the vagina.

The outermost layer of the uterus, the serosa or epimetrium, is a fold of the peritoneum. The myometrium is the smooth muscle layer; during pregnancy these cells will increase in size to accommodate the growing fetus and contract for labor and delivery at the end of pregnancy.

The lining of the uterus is the endometrium, which itself consists of two layers. The basilar layer, adjacent to the myometrium, is vascular but very thin and is a permanent layer. The functional layer will be regenerated and lost during each menstrual cycle. Under the influence of estrogen and progesterone from the ovaries, the growth of blood vessels will thicken the functional layer in preparation for a possible embryo. If fertilization does not occur, the functional layer will slough off in menstruation. During pregnancy, the endometrium will form the maternal portion of the placenta.

The uterus has been endowed with the capacity to expand tremendously during pregnancy and to revert to a non-gravid state (involute) following parturition. Subdivisions of the broad ligament will suspend the oviducts (mesosalpinx) and uterus (mesometrium) within the abdominal cavity.

THE CERVIX — the cervix is a sphincter that forms the neck of the uterus; it is a cylinder-shaped neck of fibromuscular tissue that connects the vagina and uterus. The cervix is covered by the epithelium which is made of a thin layer of cells. Epithelial cells are either squamous or columnar (also called glandular cells). Squamous cells are flat and scaly, while columnar cells appear, as indicated by their name, column-like. The cervix is composed of two regions: the ectocervix and the endocervical canal.

The ectocervix is the portion of the cervix that projects into the vagina. It is lined by stratified squamous non-keratinized epithelium. The opening in the ectocervix, the external mouth, marks the transition from the ectocervix to the endocervical canal.

The endocervical canal (or endocervix) is the more proximal, and “inner” part of the cervix. It is lined by a mucus-secreting simple columnar epithelium. The endocervical canal ends, and the uterine cavity begins, at a narrowing called the internal mouth.

The cervix will produce cervical mucus. Cervical mucus will change in consistency over the course of the menstrual cycle. At the point of greatest fertility, the cervix will produce a good deal of clear mucus which will help to promote pregnancy. During pregnancy, the mucus produced by the cervix will thicken to create a cervical “plug”. This will shield the growing embryo from infections.

During menstruation, the cervix will open a little bit to permit passage of menstrual flow. During pregnancy, the cervical mouth will close to help keep the fetus in the uterus until birth. Another important function of the cervix will occur during labor when the cervix will dilate (widen), to allow the passage of the fetus from the uterus to the vagina.

The blood supply to the uterus will be achieved via the uterine artery. Venous drainage will be achieved via a plexus in the broad ligament that drains into the uterine veins. Lymphatic drainage of the uterus will be achieved via the iliac, sacral, aortic and inguinal lymph nodes.

VAGINA — the vagina is a muscular tube about 10 cm long that extends from the cervix to the vaginal orifice in the perineum (pelvic floor). It is posterior to the urethra and anterior to the rectum. The vagina connects the uterus to the outside environment. The vulva and labia form the entrance, and the cervix of the uterus protrudes into the vagina, forming the interior end.

The vaginal wall is made of muscle covered in a mucus membrane, similar to the tissue in the mouth. The wall contains layers of tissue with many elastic fibers. The surface of the wall also contains rugae, which are pleats of extra tissue that allow the vagina to expand.

The tissues of the vaginal wall will undergo hormone-related changes during the menstrual cycle. The cells in the outer layer of the tissue store glycogen. During ovulation, this layer will be shed. The glycogen will be broken down by bacteria and will help maintain a pH level to protect the vagina against potentially harmful bacteria and fungi.

The functions of the vagina are to receive sperm cells from the penis during sexual intercourse, to provide the exit for menstrual blood flow, and to become the birth canal at the end of pregnancy.

In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was building all the cells, the tissues, the organs, and the systems of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, having the “MALE” adjective, up to the least details and synchronized as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, directly creating the layers of structures and organs of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to match those that would acquire “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when they approach the end of physical adolescence, and directly sewing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence. In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing down the details of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” throughout the organs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

THE EXCRETORY SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The excretory system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is the set of specialized structures and capillary networks that assist in the excretory process. The excretory system will function to remove waste from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It includes the kidneys and their functional unit, the nephron.

KIDNEYS — the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” has been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and to be produced into existence with two kidneys — these two kidneys are those bean-shaped organs located on both sides of the spine, behind the stomach. These are the major organs of the excretory system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and have been endowed with the capacity to perform several essential homeostatic functions. These functions include waste removal (NH₃), fluid/electrolyte balance, metabolic blood acid-base balance, as well as producing/modifying hormones for blood pressure, calcium/potassium homeostasis, and red blood cell production.

As we have indicated already, the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” represent projections into a two-dimensional “flatness”, and with appropriate linkages between them as projected elements, of aspects of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that is found in a seven-dimensional domain, including manifestations of metaphors of the products that are formed and those which are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

It is so that, the projection associated with the right kidney is slightly smaller and lower than the left, also making space for the liver. The kidneys are located high in the abdominal cavity and against its back wall, lying on either side of the vertebral column between the levels of the 12th thoracic and third lumbar vertebrae, and outside the peritoneum, the membrane that lines the abdomen.

Externally, the kidneys are surrounded by three layers. The outermost layer is a tough connective tissue layer designated as the renal fascia. The second layer is designated as the perirenal fat capsule, which will help anchor the kidneys in place. The third and innermost layer is the renal capsule.

Internally, the kidney has three regions that constitute its functional unit; these are: an outer cortex, a medulla in the middle, and the renal pelvis in the region designated as the hilum of the kidney. The hilum is the concave part of the bean-shape where blood vessels and nerves enter and exit the kidney; it is also the point of exit for the ureters. The renal cortex is granular due to the presence of nephrons. The medulla consists of multiple pyramidal tissue masses, called the renal pyramids. In between the pyramids are spaces designated as the renal columns and through which the blood vessels will pass. The tips of the pyramids, designated as the renal papillae, point toward the renal pelvis. There are, on average, eight renal pyramids in each kidney. The renal pyramids along with the adjoining cortical region are designated as the lobes of the kidney. The renal pelvis leads to the ureter on the outside of the kidney. On the inside of the kidney, the renal pelvis branches out into two or three extensions designated as the major calyces, which further branch into the minor calyces. The ureters are urine-bearing tubes that exit the kidney and empty into the urinary bladder.

BLOOD VESSELS OF THE KIDNEYS — the kidneys have been endowed with the capacity to perform several essential homeostatic functions. These functions include waste removal (NH_3), fluid/electrolyte balance, metabolic blood acid-base balance, as well as producing/modifying hormones for blood pressure, calcium/potassium homeostasis, and red blood cell production. It is so that, the kidneys' network of blood vessels will form an important component of its structure and function.

The arteries, veins, and nerves that supply the kidney enter and exit at the renal hilum. Renal blood supply will start with the branching of the aorta into the renal arteries (which are each designated based on the region of the kidney they pass through) and will end with the exiting of the renal veins to join the inferior vena cava. The renal arteries split into several segmental arteries upon entering the kidneys. Each segmental artery splits further into several interlobar arteries and enters the renal columns, which supply the renal lobes. The interlobar arteries split at the junction of the renal cortex and medulla to form the arcuate arteries. The arcuate “bow shaped” arteries form arcs along the base of the medullary pyramids. Cortical radiate arteries, as the name suggests, radiate out from the arcuate arteries. The cortical radiate arteries branch into numerous afferent arterioles, and then enter the capillaries supplying the nephrons. Veins trace the path of the arteries and have similar names, except there are no segmental veins.

The kidneys are supplied with sympathetic and parasympathetic nerves of the autonomic nervous system, and the renal nerves contain both afferent and efferent fibres (afferent fibres carry nerve impulses to the central nervous system; efferent fibres, from it).

NEPHRON

The functional and structural units of the kidney are designated as the nephrons. Each kidney is made up of over one million nephrons that dot the renal cortex, giving it a granular appearance when sectioned sagittally. There are two types of nephrons: cortical nephrons (85 percent), which are deep in the renal cortex, and juxtamedullary nephrons (15 percent), which lie in the renal cortex close to the renal medulla. A nephron consists of three parts: a renal corpuscle, a renal tubule, and the associated capillary network, which originates from the cortical radiate arteries. The renal corpuscle, which is filtration unit, which comprises the glomerulus and the surrounding glomerular or renal corpuscular capsule, and the renal tubules (reabsorption and excretion) of the kidney perform the majority of the kidney’s assigned “specific work”. Each nephron has its own blood supply vessels, at the submicroscopic scale, including two capillary regions.

THE RENAL CORPUSCLE — the renal corpuscle, located in the renal cortex, is the blood-filtering component of the nephron of the kidney. It consists of: (1) the glomerulus, which is a network of capillaries composed of endothelial cells and mesangial cells; and, (2) the capsule, which is a cup-shaped chamber that surrounds it, and is also designated as the glomerular or the renal corpuscular capsule.

GLOMERULUS CAPILLARIES — they form a central tuft of looped capillaries located in the center of the renal corpuscle. These capillaries will deliver blood and create a large surface area for renal filtration. These capillaries have been optimized for filtration by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented at the nanoscopic scale in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

The blood flow will be regulated over broad ranges of pressures, thus keeping the glomerular filtration rate relatively constant. This regulation will occur via the capillaries’ unique location between two resistance arterioles (afferent and efferent). These capillaries present a large porous surface area for filtration. The glomerular capillary endothelium contains small transcellular pores or fenestrations (windows) of approximately 60 nm in diameter, which covers about 20 to 50% of the endothelial surface. Although these pores are large, the negatively charged glycocalyx covering the luminal endothelial cell surface will prevent the filtration of molecules of size above 100 nm. These capillaries are not embedded within a supporting intracellular matrix but are relatively “loose” within the renal corpuscular capsule.

MESANGIAL CELLS — glomerular capillaries are not surrounded by interstitial tissue. As such, they require a unique support structure. Intraglomerular mesangial cells physically support the glomerular capillaries and occupy the intercellular spaces underneath the basement membrane. They are on the opposite side of the glomerulus from the podocytes. These mesangial cells are relatively small, irregular in shape, have scant cytoplasm, and have heterochromatic and indented nuclei. Both mesangial cells and their secreted extracellular matrix will be collectively designated as “mesangium”. Expansion of mesangial cells beyond the allowed limits will result in a reduction of the filtration area and occlusion of glomerular capillaries; hence, in renal “DISEASE” in all its forms.

The mesangial cells contain microfilaments and can contract in response to specific hormones (e.g., angiotensin II), thus altering the glomerular capillary diameter and, hence, the surface area available for filtration, resulting in a fine-tuning of glomerular filtration rates. The mesangial cells will synthesize prostaglandins that contribute to renal vasodilatation. The mesangium also contains macrophages that can clear filtration residues, such as immune complexes, that will lodge within the glomerular filter, from the mesangial space by phagocytosis.

THE RENAL CORPUSCULAR CAPSULE — it consists of the visceral and parietal layers. The inner visceral layer completely encircles the glomerular capillaries. It is comprised of specialized stellate epithelial cells termed podocytes. In contrast, the outer or parietal layer of the renal corpuscular capsule is a single layer of simple squamous epithelium. It is into the space between these two layers into which urine will be filtered.

There are two poles in the renal corpuscle, a vascular pole and a tubular pole. The vascular pole is a location of the glomerulus. At the vascular pole, the afferent arterioles and efferent arterioles enter and leave the glomerulus in the renal corpuscular capsule. The tubular pole is at the other end opposite to the vascular pole. At the tubular pole, the proximal convoluted tubule arises.

The renal corpuscle will act to filter blood. Fluid from blood in the glomerulus will be collected in the renal corpuscular capsule to form “glomerular filtrate”, which will then further be processed along the nephron to form urine. This will be achieved via a filtration barrier. The renal corpuscle filtration barrier is composed of: the fenestrated endothelium of glomerular capillaries, the fused basal lamina of endothelial cells and podocytes, and the filtration slits of the podocytes. This barrier will permit passage of water, ions, and small molecules from the bloodstream into the renal corpuscular capsule space (the space between the visceral and parietal layers). Large and/or negatively charged proteins will be prevented from passing into the renal corpuscular capsule space, thus retaining these proteins in the circulation. The basal lamina is composed of 3 layers: lamina rara externa, lamina densa, and lamina rara interna. The lamina rara externa is adjacent to the podocyte processes. The lamina densa is the central layer consisting of type IV collagen and laminin. This layer will act as a selective macromolecular filter, preventing the passage of large protein molecules into the renal corpuscular capsule space. The lamina rara interna is adjacent to endothelial cells. This layer will contain heparan sulfate, a negatively charged glycosaminoglycan that will contribute to the electrostatic barrier of the glomerular filter.

THE RENAL GLOMERULAR FILTRATION — the renal glomerular filtration is the “specific process” of filtration of plasma through the pores of the glomeruli, whose size allows only the plasmatic free substances and metabolites to be cleared. It is a passive, nonselective “specific process” in which hydrostatic pressure (10 mm Hg) pushes fluids and small (< 5 nm) hydrophilic particles through the glomerular membrane. Glomeruli restrict the passage of the hydrophobic or nanoparticles. The amount of compound eliminated is restricted by the glomerular filtration rate and as a result by the blood flow.

The glomerular filtration rate is the volume of water and soluble substances formed each minute by all the glomeruli of the kidneys combined. The normal glomerular filtration rate for the adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is 120 mL/min. The glomerular capillary wall is a size-selective and a charge-selective barrier to filtration. Its size selectivity resides primarily in the lamina densa of the glomerular basement membrane. It is thus that the glomerulus will exclude molecules with radii greater than 4 nm. Inulin, with a molecular mass of 5200 daltons and radius of 1.4 nm, will permeate freely, whereas serum albumin, with a molecular mass of 69000 daltons and radius of 3.6 nm, will permeate minimally. Changes in the glomerular filtration rate will affect the rate of elimination of chemicals, which will be primarily eliminated by filtration. In addition to size, the filtration of molecules also depends on their charge.

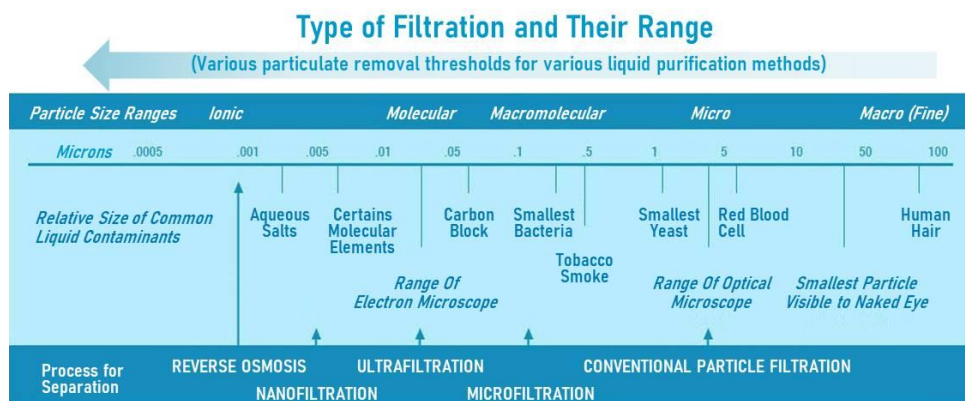

The charge selectivity of the glomerulus resides in the negatively charged sialoglycoproteins (e.g., laminin and fibronectin) and peptidoglycans (e.g., heparan sulfate) of the capillary endothelium, lamina rara interna, lamina rara externa, and visceral epithelium. At any given effective molecular radius, negatively charged macromolecules will experience greater restriction to filtration than neutral ones. Positively charged macromolecules will experience less restriction to filtration than neutral ones of the same size.

THE FILTRATION BARRIER — the glomerular capillary wall or filtration barrier is a three layers structure through which the filtrate of water and soluble substances will be driven by hydrostatic and osmotic pressure gradients through to the renal corpuscular capsule. This filtration at glomerular capillary wall is the first step in making urine.

As we have indicated already, a membrane filtration is a pressure or concentration gradients driven purification process that separates particulate matter, of a feed liquid, from soluble components.

Solutes of a feed liquid and whose sizes are greater than the pore size of the membrane and all suspended solids are retained and concentrated. Water, salts and smaller molecular weight constituents pass through, or permeate, the membrane. The pore structure of the membrane acts as a molecular filter that does not become plugged because the retained components of the feed are rejected at the surface and do not permeate the membrane. There are four commonly accepted types of membrane filtration. These are defined on the basis of the size of material they are required to separate from the feed liquid. The four types of membrane filtration are known as reverse osmosis, nanofiltration, ultrafiltration and microfiltration, in order of increasing pore size. Each process for separation has the same procedure: solutes pass through a semipermeable membrane, depending on the pore size certain elements are removed whilst others pass through.

Microfiltration (MF) uses membranes whose pore diameter is between 0.1 and 10 μm . These membranes stop relatively large particles such as suspended particles, bacteria and fat globules. They can also stop certain ions as well as colloids if the latter attach to larger particles by complexation, precipitation or flocculation. However, the main objective of microfiltration is a solid-liquid separation. Microfiltration is used as a pretreatment before ultrafiltration.

In the case of ultrafiltration (UF), the pores of the membranes have a diameter of between 1 and 100 nm. Such membranes allow small molecules such as salts to pass through and stop molecules with a high molar mass, thus producing a high-quality fluid. The porous structure of the membrane acts as a molecular filter that does not clog because the retained components of the filler are rejected on the surface and do not pass through the membrane. The membrane barrier will eliminate particles as small as 0.01 microns, including bacteria, colloidal particles (clays, silica, TiO_2 ...) and many deleterious particles.

Ultrafiltration therefore makes it possible to retain the larger suspended particles that escape microfiltration. Ultrafiltration produces at the outlet what is called an “ultrafiltrate”, the fraction of the treated liquid that passes through the ultrafiltering membrane. This “ultrafiltrate” is a clear liquid and free of any pathogens on the one hand, and concentrated in small molecules on the other hand: it retains the properties of the input microfiltrate fluid and which thus becomes purer as a result of ultrafiltration.

Ultrafiltration is a baro-membrane process: the transfer takes place under the effect of pressure. This transmembrane pressure (PTM) is between 1 and 10 bar. These membranes are then said to be of “low pressures”. The separation mechanism in ultrafiltration is a sieving: it results from the difference in size between the components and that of the pores of the membrane, typically between 2 and 50 nm (mesopores).

Ultrafiltration is used to separate dissolved materials while microfiltration is used to separate suspended particles.

Nanofiltration (NF) allows the separation of compounds of size close to that of the nanometer. Ionized salts with a molar mass of less than about 300 g/mol are not retained by this type of membranes. Multivalent ionized salts (calcium, magnesium, aluminum, sulfates, etc.) and non-ionized organic compounds with a molar mass greater than about 300 g/mol are, on the other hand, strongly retained.

Finally, the last of these filtrations is reverse osmosis (RO). They are membranes that can only be passed through by water. Reverse osmosis is therefore widely used for the desalination of seawater and to concentrate food products.

The filtrate of water and soluble substances resembles plasma except in lacking macromolecules that are present in the plasma. The three layers of the glomerular capillary wall or filtration barrier are: the capillary endothelium, basement membrane, and visceral epithelium.

THE CAPILLARY ENDOTHELIUM OF THE GLOMERULUS is fenestrated by openings 50 to 100 nm in diameter. These openings will exclude cells from the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, but macromolecules will not be restricted based on size. The luminal surface of the endothelium is covered by negatively charged sialoglycoproteins that contribute to the charge selectivity of the filtration barrier.

THE GLOMERULAR BASEMENT MEMBRANE is an amorphous extracellular sheet-like structure of about 300 nm in thickness. It is composed of the lamina rara interna on the endothelial side, the central lamina densa, and the lamina rara externa on the epithelial side. The lamina rara interna and lamina rara externa contain polar noncollagenous proteins that contribute to the negative charge of the filtration barrier. The lamina densa contains nonpolar collagenous proteins that contribute primarily to the size selectivity of the filtration barrier.

The main components of these laminae are type IV collagen, laminin, nidogen and proteoglycans. Type IV collagen forms the three-dimensional structural network to which the other components are attached. Being the sole collagen type of the glomerular basement membrane, the type IV collagen meshwork mainly will confer tensile strength to the glomerular basement membrane. The filtration barrier is permeable to molecules with effective molecular radii less than 2 nm and impermeable to those with radii greater than 4 nm.

The glomerular basement membrane proteoglycans perlecan and agrin are rich in anionic heparan sulphate moieties. They will contribute to an electric barrier that will hinder negatively charged plasma proteins from crossing the glomerular basement membrane.

THE VISCERAL EPITHELIAL CELLS OR PODOCYTES constitute the outermost portion of the filtration barrier. They cover the glomerular basement membrane and glomerular capillaries on the urinary side of the barrier with their primary and interdigitating secondary foot processes. Filtration slits, 10 to 30 nm in width, are located between the secondary foot processes.

⁶⁹¹ As we drew your attention in previous annotations, here too, take a close look at that glomerular filtration system, which is in a submicroscopic scale (the whole glomerulus is at the macroscopic scale and the internal components are at the nanoscopic scale), see beyond the diagram and try to get an idea about: (1) the logic that is in that unit of filtration; (2) the in-depth reflection and the scope of the “INTELLECTUAL” work that was deployed to design such a unit of filtration; (3) “THE SCIENCE” which is in such a unit of filtration and the origin of that “SCIENCE”.

From that pictured idea, see a vision of the GREATNESS of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, by which HE has revealed Himself through this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is been sculpted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and as an integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”: a GREATNESS beyond words and letters; a GREATNESS that dominates the murmur of syllables and sounds.

Meditate on “THE ‘DIVINE’ REASON”, which is associated to “THE ‘DIVINE’ LOGIC”. Meditate about “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, from the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle”, designed and established such highly specialized blood filtering unit at microscopic scale. Meditate about “THE DIVINE FORCE” who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, manifested and implemented all

Podocytes will serve both as support of glomerular capillaries and are part of the glomerular filtration barrier. They are large cells with euchromatic nuclei and form the visceral layer of the renal corpuscular capsule with exposure to the urinary space. The interdigitating secondary processes of the podocytes (pedicels, or foot processes) cover and encircle much of the surface of the glomerular capillaries. These foot processes will contain actin and will have some contractile activity to oppose distension of the glomerular capillaries. The spaces or gaps between these interdigitating pedicels form slit pores approximately 30 to 40 nm wide. These slits are covered by a thin membrane or slit diaphragms.

The slit diaphragms are specialized adherens junctions with nephron and other proteins forming a zipper-like structure with small pores about the size of an albumin molecule. The protein barrier is due to the sieving of the filtrate by these small pores. In addition to the pores, a negatively charged glycocalyx covers the podocytes and slit diaphragm; the negative charges also have an important barrier function and repel negatively charged proteins such as albumin.

The podocytes are phagocytic and may engulf macromolecules trapped by the filtration slits. They are invested with a negatively charged sialoglycoprotein coat that contributes to the charge selectivity of the filtration barrier. The visceral epithelial cells synthesize the glomerular basement membrane.

The “mesangium” is not a part of the filtration barrier but a stabilizing core of tissue, forming an anchor for the glomerulus at the vascular pole and along the axes of the capillary lobules. The mesangial cells are in contact with the basement membrane in areas where there is no capillary endothelium. The extraglomerular mesangium fills the space between the macula densa and the glomerular arterioles and constitutes part of the juxtaglomerular apparatus.

REGULATION OF GLOMERULAR FILTRATION — glomerular filtration rate will be regulated by both intrinsic and extrinsic controls. These two types of controls serve two different needs. The kidneys will need a relatively constant glomerular filtration rate in order to perform their “specific work” and maintain extracellular homeostasis. On the other hand, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, under production by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will need a constant blood pressure, and therefore a constant blood volume.

the variants of such a highly specialized blood filtering unit on a microscopic scale inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as human creature, wear. Above all, meditate on yourself regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE FORCE” and regarding your relationship with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

Intrinsic controls (renal autoregulation) will act locally within the kidney to maintain glomerular filtration rate through two types of controls mechanism: myogenic mechanism, which reflects the tendency of vascular smooth muscle to contract when stretched, and the flow-dependent tubuloglomerular feedback mechanism, which will be “directed” by the macula densa cells of the juxtaglomerular apparatus.

Extrinsic controls will proceed through the nervous and endocrine systems through neural and hormonal mechanisms to maintain appropriate blood pressure in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

THE JUXTAGLOMERULAR APPARATUS — the juxtaglomerular apparatus is the microscopic group of structures related to each other anatomically and forming the vascular pole of the glomerulus. It consists of a vascular component (afferent and efferent arterioles and extraglomerular mesangium) and a tubular component (macula densa).

Macula densa — the macula densa is an elliptical plaque of epithelial cells located at the distal end of the thick ascending limb, approximately 100 to 200 μm upstream from the transition to the distal convoluted tubule. The macula densa epithelial cells are different from the thick ascending limb cells.

Macula densa cells differ from the other cells of the thick ascending limb; they have large nuclei and are closely packed, thus looking like a plaque. Macula densa cells possess an apical furosemide-/bumetanide-sensitive $\text{Na}^+ - 2\text{Cl}^- - \text{K}^+$ cotransporter (NKCC2) like the surrounding thick ascending limb cells. It is so that, changes in luminal sodium chloride concentration will be detected by macula densa cells through a series of ion transport—related intracellular “specific events”. Sodium chloride entry via a Na^+ , K^+ , 2Cl^- cotransporter and exit of chloride ions through a basolateral channel will lead to cell depolarization and elevations in cytosolic calcium. Communication from macula densa cells to the glomerular vascular elements will involve the release of ATP molecules across the macula densa basolateral membrane through an axion channel with high conductance. Increased sodium and fluid delivery to the thick ascending limb and macula densa region will be a communication signal sent to the cells of the juxtaglomerular apparatus to perform their assigned “specific work” and release renin and produce angiotensin II locally as well as other vasoconstrictors, which will act on the afferent arteriole to decrease filtration and thereby sodium and fluid delivery to the thick ascending limb and beyond.

Extraglomerular mesangium — cells of the extraglomerular mesangium are ramified cells with a scanty cytoplasm; they are surrounded by a conspicuous matrix and couple to each other and to the vascular cells by gap junctions. Extraglomerular mesangium cells are contractile smooth muscle-derived cells, and they reveal — just as the terminal portion of the afferent arteriole — significant immunoreactivity for soluble guanylate cyclase, the principal NO “receptor”.

Granular cells — the granular cells are modified smooth muscle cells located in groups (five cells) in the terminal portion of the afferent arteriole. Within these cells, renin will be stored in large, lysosomal-type intracellular granules, and abundant amounts of renin mRNA will be regularly colocalized. Granular cells also contact the extraglomerular mesangium, adjacent smooth muscle cells, and arteriolar endothelium, and they are coupled to these structures by gap junctions.

THE RENAL TUBULE — the renal tubule is a long and convoluted structure that emerges from the glomerulus. It can be divided into three parts based on function. The first part will be designated as the proximal convoluted tubule due to its proximity to the glomerulus; it stays in the renal cortex. The second part will be designated as the nephron loop, or nephritic loop, because it forms a loop, having descending and ascending limbs, which goes through the renal medulla. The third part of the renal tubule will be designated as the distal convoluted tubule and this part is also restricted to the renal cortex. The distal convoluted tubule, which is the last part of the nephron, connects and empties its contents into collecting ducts that line the medullary pyramids. The collecting ducts will amass contents from multiple nephrons and fuse together as they will enter the papillae of the renal medulla.

RENAL TUBULE SYSTEM — the renal tubule system is the part of the nephron which will process glomerular ultrafiltrate — which is the outflow of fluid that filters through the glomerular filtration barrier — into urine by reabsorbing necessary molecules and secreting the not immediately needed and excess substances. This “specific process” is designated as the reabsorption, because at this “specific process”, it will be the second time the necessary molecules will be absorbed; the first time being when they were absorbed into the bloodstream from the digestive tract after a meal. The renal tubule system consists of three parts:

- The proximal tubule; convoluted proximal tubules and straight proximal tubule;
- The nephron loop; descending and ascending limbs;
- The distal tubule; straight distal tubule and convoluted distal tubule.

THE PROXIMAL TUBULE — the proximal tubule is the first part of the tubular system. It consists of convoluted and straight segments. The proximal convoluted tubule is located within the renal cortex and is continuous with the capsular space.

The straight proximal tubule (or thick descending limb) extends down into the medulla. Both parts are composed of simple cuboidal epithelium, rich in mitochondria and microvilli (brush border). This morphology is adapted to the proximal tubule function of absorption and secretion. More than half of the previously filtered water and molecules are returned to the blood (reabsorption) by the proximal tubules.

THE NEPHRON LOOP — the nephron loop is the U-shaped bend of a nephron which extends through the medulla of the kidney. It consists of two parts: the thin descending and the thin ascending limbs.

Both limbs are composed of simple squamous epithelium. The cells have few organelles, little to no microvilli and low secretion abilities. The two limbs will work in parallel, with the surrounding vasa recta capillaries, to adjust the salt (e.g. sodium, chloride, potassium) and water levels of the product that will filter through the glomerular filtration barrier. More specifically, the descending limb will be highly permeable to water, less permeable to solutes, while the ascending limb will do the opposite.

THE DISTAL TUBULE — the distal tubule also consists of straight and convoluted segments. The straight distal tubule (thick ascending limb) continues on from the thin ascending limb of the nephron loop at the level between the inner and outer medulla. The convoluted distal tubule projects into the cortex. Both parts of the distal tubule are composed of simple cuboidal epithelium, similar in morphology to the proximal tubule.

A key difference between them is that the epithelium of the distal tubule has less well-developed microvilli. Reabsorption and secretion will occur here, albeit to a lesser degree than in the proximal tubule. By having lots of mitochondria, the straight distal tubules will be able to reabsorb any useful substances (electrolytes), and secrete any remaining waste products using active transport. Of particular note will be the absorption of sodium, under the regulation of aldosterone.

TUBULAR REABSORPTION AND SECRETION PROCESSES — tubular reabsorption is the process by which solutes and water are removed from the tubular fluid and transported into the blood stream.

Reabsorption in the nephron can be either a passive or active process, and the specific permeability of the each part of the nephron will vary in terms of the amount and type of substance reabsorbed. The mechanisms of reabsorption into the peri-tubular capillaries include:

- Passive diffusion — as in the case of water, chloride, and other ions, passing through plasma membranes of the kidney epithelial cells by concentration gradients and controlled by the same principles that regulate their passage across any membrane. That is to say that, lipophilic compounds will cross cell membranes more rapidly than polar ones; hence, lipophilic toxicants will tend to be passively reabsorbed more than polar ones and, overall, elimination of polar toxicants and their polar metabolites will be facilitated.
- Active transport — as in the case of glucose, amino acids, and peptides, through the membrane-bound ATPase pumps (such as Na^+/K^+ ATPase pumps) with carrier proteins that carry substances across the plasma membranes of the kidney epithelial cells by consuming ATP molecules.
- Cotransport — this process is particularly important for the reabsorption of water. Water can follow other molecules that are actively transported, particularly glucose and sodium ions in the nephron.

These processes involve the substance passing through the luminal barrier and the basolateral membrane, two plasma membranes of the kidney epithelial cells, and into the peri-tubular capillaries on the other side. Some substances will also be able to pass through tiny spaces in between the renal epithelial cells, and designated as the tight junctions.

Tubular reabsorption will occur in the proximal convoluted tubule part of the renal tubule. Almost all nutrients are reabsorbed, and this occurs either by passive or active transport. Reabsorption of water and some key electrolytes will be regulated and will be influenced by hormones. Sodium (Na^+) is the most abundant ion and most of it will be reabsorbed by active transport and then transported to the peritubular capillaries. Because Na^+ will be actively transported out of the tubule, water will follow it to even out the osmotic pressure. Water will also be independently reabsorbed into the peritubular capillaries due to the presence of aquaporins, or water channels, in the proximal convoluted tubule. This will occur due to the low blood pressure and high osmotic pressure in the peritubular capillaries. However, every solute has a transport maximum and the excess is not reabsorbed.

- = Na^+/Cl^- transport

In the nephron loop, the permeability of the membrane will change. The descending limb is permeable to water, but it is not permeable to solutes; the opposite is true for the ascending limb. Additionally, the nephron loop will invade the renal medulla, which will be high in salt concentration and will tend to absorb water from the renal tubule and concentrate the filtrate. The osmotic gradient will increase as it moves deeper into the medulla. Because the two sides of the nephron loop perform opposing functions, the nephron loop will act as a countercurrent multiplier. The vasa recta around it will act as the countercurrent exchanger.

As filtrate will pass through the nephron, its osmolarity (ion concentration) will change as ions and water will be reabsorbed. The filtrate entering the proximal convoluted tubule will be at osmolarity equal to 300 mOsm/L, which is the same osmolarity as normal plasma osmolarity.

In the proximal convoluted tubules, all the glucose in the filtrate will be reabsorbed, along with an equal concentration of ions and water (through cotransport), so that the filtrate will still remain at 300 mOsm/L as it will leave the tubule. The filtrate osmolarity will drop to 1200 mOsm/L as water will leave through the descending nephron loop, which is impermeable to ions. In the ascending nephron loop, which is permeable to ions but not water, osmolarity will fall to 100–200 mOsm/L.

Finally, in the distal convoluted tubule and collecting duct, a variable amount of ions and water will be reabsorbed depending on hormonal stimulus. The final osmolarity of urine will therefore be dependent on whether or not the final collecting tubules and ducts are permeable to water or not, which will be regulated by homeostasis.

In this renal tubular reabsorption, the intertubular pressure allows filtration of nonprotein bound hydrophilic components of plasma (nutrients: glucose, amino acids, and essential elements; particles < 5 nm) in the proximal convoluted tubule. This involves reabsorption of organic nutrients and the hormonally regulated reabsorption of water and ions. Nonresorbed polar molecules will remain in the renal filtrate and will be excreted via urine. Urine pH will play an important role in the excretion of polar chemicals. For weak acids, urine alkalization will favor the ionized form and promotes excretion. Different areas of the tubules have different absorptive capabilities.

- The proximal convoluted tubule is most active and selective in reabsorption.
- The descending limb of the nephron loop is permeable to water, while the ascending limb is impermeable to water but permeable to electrolytes.
- The distal convoluted tubule and collecting duct have Na⁺ and water permeability regulated by the hormones aldosterone, antidiuretic hormone, and atrial natriuretic peptide.

THE RENAL TUBULAR SECRETION PROCESS — tubular secretion will dispose unwanted outflow of fluid that had filter through the glomerular filtration barrier and the unwanted outflow of fluid that was reabsorbed. It will rid the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of excess K⁺, and controls blood pH. Tubular secretion will be most active in the proximal convoluted tubule, but it will also occur in the distal convoluted tubule and collecting ducts.

The kidney can actively transport some filtered substances against a concentration gradient, even if the substances are protein-bound, but dissociates rapidly. The mechanisms by which secretion will occur are similar to those of reabsorption; however these processes will occur in the opposite direction.

By the time the outflow of fluid that had filter through the glomerular filtration barrier and the outflow of fluid that was reabsorbed through the proximal convoluted tubule reaches the distal convoluted tubule, a part of it has been reabsorbed. If the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” requires additional water, it can be reabsorbed at this point in the distal convoluted tubule. Further reabsorption will be controlled by hormones. Excretion of the remaining outflow of fluid will occur as the stability is reached in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through homeostasis. Most of the tubular secretion happens in the distal convoluted tubule, but some occurs in the early part of the collecting duct. Kidneys will also maintain an acid-base balance by secreting excess H^+ ions.

So it is that kidneys will filter the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” in a three-step process. First, the nephrons will filter the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” that will flow through the capillary network in the glomerulus. Second, the outflow of fluid that had filtered through the glomerular filtration barrier will be collected in the renal tubules. A part of the outflow of fluid will be reabsorbed in the proximal convoluted tubule by the tubular reabsorption process. In the nephron loop, the outflow of fluid will continue to exchange solutes and water with the renal medulla and the peritubular capillary network. Water will also be reabsorbed during this step. Then, the remaining outflow of fluid, which resulted from the glomerulus-ultrafiltration of the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” and collected in the renal tubules, will be secreted into the kidney tubules during tubular secretion, which is, in essence, the opposite process to tubular reabsorption. The collecting ducts will collect the outflow of fluid coming from the nephrons and fuse in the medullary papillae. From here, the papillae will deliver the outflow of fluid, now designated as urine, into the minor calyces that connect to the ureters through the renal pelvis.⁶⁹²

THE COLLECTING SYSTEM — the collecting system of the kidney is a series of tubes that moves urine from the nephrons into the minor calyces. Several distal convoluted tubules from neighbouring nephrons drain into a collecting duct via connecting/collecting tubules. Collecting ducts then travel through the kidney medulla, converging at the apex of each renal pyramid. Here, several ducts merge to form a single large papillary duct, which opens into the minor calyx through the area cribrosa.

Collecting ducts will be designated as cortical or medullary, depending on which part of the kidney parenchyma that part of the duct is located. They are made of epithelial cells, which get progressively taller as the ducts get larger. Cortical collecting ducts will have a simple cuboidal epithelium, medullary collecting ducts will have a simple columnar epithelium, and papillary ducts will have a simple columnar epithelium.

Two additional types of cells are distinguishable in these ducts. The principal cells are pale staining and they play a role in ion transport. Darker staining intercalated cells have been scattered amongst the principal cells and they will be responsible for acid-base balance. Collecting ducts are the last site for water and electrolyte reabsorption from the filtrate, which will further concentrate the urine, particularly under the influence of antidiuretic hormone (ADH). No more reabsorption will take place past the medullary collecting ducts.

MEDICINAL IMPORTANCE OF THE FUNCTIONS OF THE KIDNEYS — THE ULTRAFILTRATE PLASMA ISOPATHIC THERAPY

“All meals lead to the liver!” In the digestive tract, food is broken down into small molecules (glucose, amino acids, fatty acids, etc...). These pass through the wall of the small intestine and reach the bloodstream, where the portal vein leads them to the liver: the largest and most important metabolic organ of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which works like a real chemical plant that decomposes, recycles and metabolizes.

As we have indicated in the section concerning the liver, besides its digestive function, the liver is also the primary organ of purification and filtration of blood in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. All the blood coming from the stomach and intestines, is loaded with nutrients and sometimes antigens and/or pathogens and deleterious particles, as well as all the small molecules containing thousands of feedback information concerning the state of functioning of the cells, tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; in short, the state of health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This raw blood, containing all this information, is directed in its entirety to the liver through the portal vein. As part of its defined “specific work”, one of the key function of the liver is to purify the raw and unprocessed flow of blood that it receives, through the hepatic portal vein, from the intestine (carbohydrate, lipid, protein metabolism, xenobiotics...), of numerous substances (including bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...) that, in the “specific work” specifications of the liver, have been identified as harmful to the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It secretes the bile, which it produces, into the raw and unprocessed flow of blood, neutralizes and breaks down those harmful substances into non-toxic forms and easier to use for the remaining of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In accordance with its “specific work” specifications, through hepatic “specialized cells”, the liver filters out the resulting flow of blood, which is undergoing the cleansing/detoxification effects of bile (acids, salts, and other adequate cleansing constituents) and hepatic enzymes, into two streams: (1) the stream containing bile by-products; and (2) the stream containing the remaining processed flow of blood that is exempted of bile by-products.

The stream containing bile by-products, those secondary product derived from the degradation of any substance (including bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...) that, in accordance with the “specific work” specifications of the liver, has been identified as harmful to the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is sent to the intestine, to leave the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the form of feces.

As for the stream containing the remaining processed flow of blood, which is exempted of bile by-products and of harmful substances (such as bacteria, deleterious particulates, dead cells, etc...), the liver regulates its chemical levels. In this regulation of the chemical levels and according to the health needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which have been transported and transmitted by the small molecules containing thousands of feedback information concerning the state of health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the liver will produce the appropriate metabolites and substances that best support these current health needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Depending on the current health needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the liver will, for example, store sugar, fat, protein constituents (amino acids) and vitamins in its cells, when they are not immediately needed. Sugar is stored as glycogen in the liver which releases glucose into the bloodstream, as soon as the blood sugar level drops. In addition, liver cells will be able to turn sugar into fat and protein into sugar.

For example, the liver will also produce a large number of important proteins from the protide constituents and according to the current health needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will make the majority of the proteins circulating in the plasma: for example, albumin, which ensures the transport of fatty acids and hormones, but also globulins, key proteins of the immune system, or fibrinogen, involved in blood coagulation.

The liver will directly synthesize several hormones, including 25-hydroxyvitamin D, insulin-like growth factor 1 (IGF-1) and angiotensinogen. Given the roles in the direct production of hormones, the liver also has permissive roles of normal hormonal function, especially with effects on bone health, the (growth hormone, GH)-IGF-1 axis and the renin-angiotensin-aldosterone (RAA) pathway. The liver is involved in the metabolism of several endocrine hormones, including thyroid hormones, glucagon-like peptide-1 and steroid hormones, with roles in the activation and inactivation of hormones.

The liver is the main source of binding proteins for many hormones. It will produce binding proteins specific to multiple lipophilic hormones, including glucocorticoids, mineralocorticoids, sex steroids, thyroid hormones (T₃ and T₄) and vitamin D metabolites. Binding globulins for these lipophilic hormones include cortisol binding globulin (CBG, which binds cortisol, aldosterone and progesterone), sex hormone binding globulin (SHBG, which binds estradiol, testosterone and other sex hormones), thyroxine binding globulin (TBG, which binds T₃ and T₄) and vitamin D binding globulin (DBG, which binds vitamin D metabolites). The binding proteins produced by the liver also include transthyretin (which binds thyroid hormone and retinol), insulin-like growth factor 1 (IGF-1) binding proteins (IGFBP, which binds IGF, including IGF-1) and nonspecific binding proteins, including albumin and lipoproteins. Binding proteins serve as a circulating reservoir for hormones, potentially regulating tissue distribution and target destination in a way that can be highly selective and targeted. The expression and production of binding proteins, which occur mainly in the liver, are complex and are regulated and influenced by multiple factors.

The liver will synthesize many amino acids, including glutamate, glutamine, alanine, aspartate, asparagine, glycine, serine and homoarginine, glucose and glutathione (a major antioxidant). It will also synthesize the coagulation factors that cause the blood to clot in the event of injuries and the C reactive protein (CRP) which plays an important role in the presence of inflammatory phenomena in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will synthesize hormones, in particular growth factors, essential for the cells, tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and hepcidin, involved in iron reserves. The liver will also be able to produce proteins for the transport of fats or hormones in the bloodstream. In addition, a large part of the endogenous cholesterol is synthesized by the liver and used for the production of bile.

The liver will perform a very wide range of functions that have been defined and specified in its “specific work” specifications by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. All the information that makes it possible to best support the health needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is transmitted to the “cleaned flow of blood and having chemical levels regulated” in the form of small molecules and high-level metabolites (small molecules of molecular weight < 1000 Da, which are intermediates or final products of cellular metabolism). This resulting “cleaned flow of blood and having chemical levels regulated”, which we designate as the “submicrofiltrate from the liver”, is sent to the kidneys for further processing and regulation of homeostasis⁶⁹³ in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This “submicrofiltrate from the liver” is free of bacteria and harmful substances; it is not a “residue” of hepatic filtering and is certainly not toxic for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The “residue”, the “waste”, of the hepatic filtering has been sent to the intestine, to leave the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the form of feces.

The main role of the kidneys in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is to maintain homeostasis. This means that they manage fluid levels, electrolyte balance, and other factors that keep the internal environment of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” consistent and comfortable, by processing the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” which it has received. The product of the “specific work” performed by the kidneys, from the “submicrofiltrate from the liver”, is designated as the “ultrafiltrate of the kidneys”, which in fact is the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”. It is a clean product, free of bacteria and harmful substances. Too many vitamins detected in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma” during its processing by the kidneys? Hop, the excess, at the end of processing, is sent to the bladder! Too much energy (electron) detected in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma” during its processing by the kidneys? Hop, the excess electrons and unused enzymes, at the end of processing, is sent to the bladder. The same goes for hormones, minerals and other substances. This is how the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” gets rid of nutrients it does not need when homeostasis is reached at the exit of the medullary collecting ducts. Excesses of vitamins, amino acids, enzymes, neurotransmitters, insulin, minerals and hormones, but also proteins, antibodies, etc. which are transported by the excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma” are thus sent in the bladder. Maintaining homeostasis is the all important factor in the treatment of “DISEASES” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The kidneys will perform a wide range of functions, including: further filtering the “submicrofiltrate from the liver”, which it receives from the liver, through subtle removal or retention of “submicrofiltrate from the liver” components (the reabsorption of nutrients) in order to ensure the “hydromineral balance”⁶⁹⁴, the control of the osmotic pressure, of the electrolyte composition of the internal environment and even (thanks to the information provided by the endocrine route) of the volume of the blood and the various water compartments of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The kidneys also ensure the “acid-base balance”, the maintenance of the constancy of the pH of the internal environment of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

⁶⁹³ Homeostasis refers to any self-regulating “specific process” by which biological systems tend to maintain stability while adjusting to conditions that are optimal for survival. If homeostasis is successful, life continues; if unsuccessful, disaster shows up. The stability attained is actually a dynamic equilibrium, in which continuous change occurs yet relatively uniform conditions prevail. Any system in dynamic equilibrium tends to reach a steady state, a balance that resists outside forces of change. When such a system is disturbed, built-in regulatory devices respond to the departures to establish a new balance; such a process is one of feedback control.

As we have indicated in one previous annotation, the many functions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, beginning at the cellular level, operate as to not deviate from a narrow range of internal balance, a state known as dynamic equilibrium, despite changes in the external environment. Those changes in the external environment alter the composition of the extracellular fluid surrounding ⁶⁹⁴ Relating to water and electrolyte metabolism in an organism. Hydromineral balance is one aspect of homeostasis.

For life activity at cellular, tissue, organ and system levels to occur, a favorable ambient environment comprising, among other things, water and electrolytes, in particular potassium (K+), sodium (Na+), calcium (Ca++) and magnesium (Mg++) for cations, chlorine (Cl-), phosphorus and sulfur radicals, for anions, must be present.

The notion of hydro-electrolytic exchanges between each cell and the extracellular fluids of tissues, organs and systems, for example, cannot be dissociated from the notion of the exchanges of water and mineral substances which occur between those tissues, organs and systems, and the ambient environment.

In those tissues, organs and systems, there is a metabolism of carbohydrates, lipids and proteins occurring, because they are consumed or assimilated by the organism (anabolism and catabolism) containing those tissues, organs and systems. Mineral salts, on the contrary, are not consumed. However, we speak of mineral metabolism to account for the exchanges between the organism and its environment or between the different compartments of the organism.

the individual cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but a narrow range must be maintained to stave off the death of cells, tissues, and organs.

On the cellular level, homeostasis is observable in the biochemical reactions that take place. Regulation of pH, temperature, oxygen, ion concentrations, and blood glucose concentration is necessary for enzymes to function optimally in the environment of the cell, and the consumption and formation of products must be kept in control as not to disrupt the internal environment of the cells as well. The cell will remain alive as long as the internal environment is favorable and can be a functioning part of the tissue to which it belongs. Cellular homeostasis maintains a number of regulated variables including cell volume, osmolarity, electrolyte concentration (e.g., Na⁺, K⁺, and Cl⁻ concentrations), pH, membrane potential, and concentrations of intracellular ions, proteins, nutrients, cholesterol, oxygen, and reactive oxygen species, etc...

Homeostasis is involved in every organ system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In a similar vein, no one organ system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” acts alone; regulation of temperature cannot occur without the cooperation of the integumentary system, nervous system, musculoskeletal system, and cardiovascular system at a minimum. Chemosensors in the carotid and aortic bodies measure arterial PCO₂ and PO₂, send the information to the brainstem (control center), to tell the effectors (the diaphragm and respiratory muscles) to alter breathing rate and tidal volume to return to balance. Altered reabsorption and secretion of inorganic ions are the result of chemosensors in the adrenal cortex (for potassium concentration), parathyroid gland (for calcium concentration), and kidney and carotid and aortic bodies (for sodium concentration) which help to bring these regulated variables back to the normal range.

To maintain homeostasis, many physiological adaptations have been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. One of these is maintaining an acid-base balance, or pH homeostasis.

The pH homeostasis of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is a fundamental pillar for maintaining optimal health in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is essential for many processes necessary to life including oxygen delivery to tissues, correct protein structure, and innumerable biochemical reactions that rely on the normal pH to be in equilibrium and complete. In the absence of pathological states, the pH of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” ranges between 7.35 to 7.45, with the average at 7.40. Why this number? Why not a neutral number of 7.0 instead of a slightly alkaline 7.40? A pH at this level is ideal for many biological processes, one of the most important being the oxygenation of blood. Also, many of the intermediates of biochemical reactions in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” become ionized at a neutral pH, which causes the utilization of these intermediates to be more difficult. A pH below 7.35 is an acidemia, and a pH above 7.45 is an alkalemia. Due to the importance of sustaining a pH level in the needed narrow range, this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” contains compensatory mechanisms.

Every organ of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” relies on pH balance; however, the renal system and the pulmonary system are the two main modulators. The pulmonary system adjusts the pH using carbon dioxide; upon expiration, carbon dioxide is projected into the environment. Due to carbon dioxide forming carbonic acid in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” when combining with water, the amount of carbon dioxide expired can cause the pH to increase or decrease. When the respiratory system is utilized to compensate for metabolic pH disturbances, the effect occurs in minutes to hours. The renal system, on the other hand, affects the pH by reabsorbing bicarbonate and excreting fixed acids. A disturbed acid-base balance, or pH homeostasis, can be the cause of many inconveniences such as fatigue, migraines, and even osteoarthritis or osteoporosis.

PRODUCT OF THE KIDNEYS — The product of the work performed by the kidneys, from the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” supplied by the liver, is a complex ultrafiltered biofluid, the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. It is a purified derivative of the blood itself, made by the kidneys, of whose the principal function is not excretion but regulation/maintenance of homeostasis of all the elements and their concentrations in the blood. This “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, is in a reduced state and it contains the low molecular weight compounds of plasma and which are the result of the work of the special filtration units of the kidneys. Urine consists mainly of water (95%). The remaining 5% of urine is constitutes by more than 4700 high levels metabolites (small molecules of molecular weight < 1000 Da, which are intermediates or end products of cellular metabolism) from 230 different chemical classes, which are extracted from the blood by ultrafiltration and contain almost all of the life-sustaining nutrients, proteins, hormones, antibodies, growth and immunizing agents, which are found in the blood.⁶⁹⁵ This include, among others:

URINARY⁶⁹⁶ HYDROGEN PEROXIDE (H₂O₂), is an organic acid composed of a pair of covalently single bonded oxygen atoms each bonded to a hydrogen atom. Hydrogen peroxide occurs as part of normal metabolism in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Hydrogen Peroxide is produced primarily by the mitochondria, through autoxidation of respiratory chain components, and by peroxisomes⁶⁹⁷, as a ⁶⁹⁵ An extensive list of constituents of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, can be found in the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB), which is a freely available electronic database, <https://hmdb.ca>, containing detailed information about small molecule metabolites found in the human “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The database contains 220945 metabolite entries including both water-soluble and lipid soluble metabolites. Additionally, 8610 protein sequences (enzymes and transporters) are linked to these metabolite entries. Each MetaboCard entry of the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB) contains 130 data fields with 2/3 of the information being devoted to chemical/clinical data and the other 1/3 devoted to enzymatic or biochemical data.

⁶⁹⁷ As you would know already, peroxisomes, found in all eukaryotic cells, are bounded by a single membrane, the peroxisomal membrane with non-selective pore-forming proteins that allow the exchange or free diffusion of small molecules (< 300–600 Da), and they contain neither DNA nor elements of a translation system. These organelles harbor high concentrations of oxidative enzymes such as catalase and urate oxidase and are a major site of oxygen utilization. Peroxisomes generate hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂), which they then use (via catalase) to oxidize a variety of substrates. The generated hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) can also permeate across the peroxisomal membrane for cellular for H₂O₂ signaling. By virtue of this function, peroxisomes play an important role in the detoxification of substances that are potentially harmful to the cell. Peroxisomes are biochemically diverse, even within a single cell.

Peroxisomes are are best-known for their involvement in cellular lipid metabolism. This entails the α- and β-oxidation of fatty acids and the biosynthesis of ether-phospholipids, bile acids, and docosahexaenoic acid. Other metabolic functions of peroxisomes include glyoxylate detoxification, amino acid catabolism, polyamine oxidation, and the production and scavenging of reactive oxygen and nitrogen species. In addition, peroxisomes are also metabolic by-product of their many oxidase enzymes, within every eukaryotic cell in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, in order:

- To keep cells healthy.
- To act as reactive signaling species. The primary messenger action of H_2O_2 depends on its ability to oxidize a variety of target proteins with a high degree of specificity, predominantly through reaction with nucleophilic cysteine thiolate groups. Depending on the context and circumstances (e.g., the subcellular location, the H_2O_2 concentration, and duration of exposure, etc.), the oxidation of signaling proteins may occur through direct reaction of H_2O_2 with hyper-reactive thiols or indirectly through thioredoxin- or peroxiredoxin- catalyzed redox relay reactions.
- To regulate cellular processes such as membrane signal transduction, gene expression, cell cycle (cell growth, proliferation, differentiation, senescence, and apoptosis), insulin metabolism, cell shape determination and growth factor induced signaling cascades. The H_2O_2 molecule can instruct such decisions, directly or indirectly, by affecting the functionality of transcription factors and/or other proteins (e.g., kinases, phosphatases, proteases, antioxidant enzymes, etc.) involved in key signal transduction pathways.
- To regulate other processes, such as protein turnover, metabolism, or it is produced by cells in response to a call to “COMBAT” by the immune system, for tissue repair, inflammation, circadian rhythm, depending on the cellular context. For example, when the immune system is activated in response to a wound, a burst of hydrogen peroxide causes neutrophils, the first responders to “COMBAT”, to rush to the wound to fight microorganisms, remove damaged tissue and then start the inflammation process.

Hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) stimulates NK (Natural Killer) cells. As an immune response in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, hydrogen peroxide is released by T-cells to destroy harmful substances (bacteria, deleterious particles, and fungi). Blood platelets release hydrogen important hubs in innate immune-, lipid-, inflammatory-, and redox-signaling networks. To perform these functions, peroxisomes can dynamically regulate their number, shape, and protein content in response to changing environmental conditions.

peroxide when they encounter deleterious particles in the blood. In the large intestine, lactobacillus acidophilus produces hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) that keeps the generally ubiquitous candida yeast out of uncontrolled multiplication. When candida spreads into the intestine, it escapes the natural control system, and can gain a foothold in the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, causing what is known as chronic fatigue syndrome.

Hydrogen peroxide is also produced within red blood cells (erythrocytes) in the bloodstream, when the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” has an excess of vitamin C. Excess of vitamin C in the bloodstream increases erythrocyte intracellular ascorbate, which in its turn increases oxidation of erythrocyte peroxiredoxin 2, which is a major thiol antioxidant protein and a sensitive marker of H_2O_2 production within erythrocyte.⁶⁹⁸ Ascorbate, as you would know, is the metabolite of vitamin C, the physiological form of vitamin C, which is used within this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It serves as the most powerful water-soluble antioxidant. It can be “fully reduced”, which means its electrons are all in place and ready to be donated for full antioxidant activity. It can also be “fully buffered”. A “fully buffered” ascorbate is one that has been combined with small amounts of selected minerals (for example, calcium, magnesium, zinc, potassium). “Fully buffered” ascorbate reduces metabolic acidity and contributes to a life-supporting, slightly alkaline tissue pH.

In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, haemoglobin (Hb) is the predominant protein in erythrocytes, with the reduced form acting as an oxygen carrier (oxyhaemoglobin, $Hb^{2+}O_2$). Electron transfer from the haem to bound oxygen can occur ($Hb^{3+}O_2^-$), resulting in the slow release of superoxide (O_2^-). Ascorbate ($AscH^-$) accelerates the rate of autoxidation by donating an additional electron to the $Hb^{3+}O_2^-$ complex, generating H_2O_2 , as follows:

⁶⁹⁸ A thiol or thiol derivative is any organosulfur compound of the form $R-SH$, where R represents an alkyl or other organic substituent. The $-SH$ functional group itself is referred to as either a thiol group or a sulfhydryl group, or a sulfanyl group. Thiols are the sulfur analogue of alcohols but in which sulfur replaces the oxygen of the hydroxyl group. Thiols and alcohols are also very different in their reactivity, thiols being more easily oxidized than alcohols.

Protein thiols are an important component of intramitochondrial antioxidant defenses owing to their selective interaction with reactive oxygen and nitrogen species. Reversible modifications of protein thiols resulting from these interactions are also an important aspect of redox signal transduction.

The methaemoglobin (Hb^{3+}) produced during autoxidation is either reduced back to oxyhaemoglobin by methaemoglobin reductase, or can be further oxidised to unstable products that denature and form microscopic appearances of denatured hemoglobin, which stem from oxidative injury. It is so that ascorbate is known to increase the rate of haemoglobin autoxidation and Hydrogen Peroxide (H_2O_2) production within the erythrocyte. Once used by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” the excess hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) remaining and thus produced will end up in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”.

Hydrogen peroxide is also produced in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” by enzymes with the primary function of reactive oxygen species (ROS) generation. The major metabolic sources of H_2O_2 include the flavin-dependent oxidases, e.g., the endoplasmic reticulum oxidoreductase 1; the acyl-coenzyme A (acyl-CoA) oxidases in peroxisomes; and superoxide dismutases (SODs). The latter group of enzymes catalyzes the dismutation of superoxide anion radicals (O_2^-), which are predominantly produced by the mitochondrial electron transport chain and membrane-associated NADPH oxidases (NOXs) that are located in various subcellular compartments.⁶⁹⁹ Other oxidases include as “xanthine oxidase”⁷⁰⁰ and ⁷⁰⁰ Xanthine oxidase is a homodimer consisting of two 150 Kdalton subunits. Like aldehyde oxidase and other molybdenum-containing enzymes, xanthine oxidase catalyzes nucleophilic oxidations at electron-deficient carbons found within nitrogen-containing heterocyclic compounds. The highest levels of xanthine oxidase are found in the liver, though it is also found in cardiac, pulmonary, and adipose tissue. Within those tissues, xanthine oxidase is localized in capillary endothelial cells. It is also found in epithelial cells in lactating glands. The mechanism by which xanthine oxidase mediates oxidation requires substrate binding to the molybdenum center with reducing equivalents introduced there subsequently shuttled to Flavin Adenine Dinucleotide (FAD).

Xanthine oxidase catalyzes the oxidative hydroxylation of hypoxanthine to xanthine and xanthine to uric acid, the final two steps of purine metabolism in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. As a result of its broad substrate specificity, the xanthine oxidase enzyme is also frequently involved in the metabolism of several types of heterocyclic chemotherapeutic agents.

5-lipoxygenase⁷⁰¹. The Major H₂O₂-scavenging enzymes include catalase (CAT) and various thiol-based peroxidases such as glutathione peroxidases (GPXs) and peroxiredoxins (PRDXs). While catalase is predominantly located in peroxisomes, glutathione peroxidases (GPXs) and peroxiredoxins (PRDXs) are often localized in various subcellular compartments.

An important antioxidant enzyme that is found in the bloodstream, is catalase. It is a tetramer of four polypeptide chains, each over 500 amino acids long. It contains four iron-containing heme groups that allow the enzyme to react with hydrogen peroxide. Like haemoglobin, catalase is a haematin- protein complex, the activities of which are highest in the liver, kidney, and red blood cells and lower in the brain, heart, and skeletal muscle. Catalase is present in all aerobic organisms; it is found principally in the red-blood cells and liver cells and is produced in the marrow and liver cells. Catalase is known to catalyze H₂O₂ into water and oxygen in an energy-efficient manner in the cells exposed to oxidative damages, and thus protecting the cell from oxidative damage by reactive oxygen species (ROS).

Another important protein that is found in the bloodstream, is cytochrome c. It is an intermembrane mitochondrial protein that is released to the bloodstream following “specific mechanisms”, which were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Elevated levels of circulating cytochrome c in the bloodstream are often associated with mitochondrial injury in a variety of “DISEASES” conditions.

In the bloodstream in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) is converted to water (H₂O) and a singlet oxygen (O⁻), under the mediation of catalase enzyme that is present in the bloodstream and using either iron or manganese as a cofactor. In the bloodstream in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, hydrogen peroxide also binds with cytochrome-C. This binding to cytochrome-C delays/prevents the immediate effect of catalase enzyme on the binded hydrogen peroxide until it is delivered through the bloodstream to other cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, at which time the cellular ⁷⁰¹ 5-Lipoxygenase (5-LO) is an important enzyme of the arachidonic acid cascade and catalyses with the help of the 5-lipoxygenase-activating protein (FLAP). The 5-lipoxygenase-activating protein (FLAP) is an integral membrane protein, which is essential for the initial step in leukotriene biosynthesis in the nucleus in some cell types and in the cytosol of others. Leukotrienes (LTs) are proinflammatory mediators derived from arachidonic acid (AA), which play significant roles in inflammatory diseases.

“cytochrome-C oxidase”⁷⁰² acts on the delivered hydrogen peroxide to also form water (H₂O) and a singlet oxygen (O⁻).

This singlet oxygen (O⁻) is a powerful oxidizing agent. It is the active agent in hydrogen peroxide. It transforms biological waste and harmful substances transported by the bloodstream into inert substances by oxidizing them. This makes them easy to be processed by the kidneys and liver. At the cellular level, this singlet oxygen (O⁻) doubles the rate of enzymatic metabolism in the mitochondria within each cell.

It is thus that, this singlet oxygen (O⁻) enables the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to cleanse itself of harmful substances and still have plenty of (cellular) energy to handle the business of living from moment to moment. This increase in metabolism accounts for some of the antibacterial, anti fungal, and anti viral effects of hydrogen peroxide.

The classical physiological role attributed to this singlet oxygen (O⁻) is its capability to induce the destruction of, or severely inhibits the growth of, anaerobic organisms (bacteria and deleterious particulates that use carbon dioxide for fuel and leave oxygen as a by-product). This action occurs immediately on contact with the anaerobic organism.

It is so that, thanks to the release of this singlet oxygen (O⁻), hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) inhibits the growth of lung cancer cells via the induction of cell death and G₁-phase arrest of cell cycle progression. A cell cycle arrest is a stopping point in the cell cycle, where it is no longer involved in the processes surrounding duplication and division. Cell cycle arrest is often used by cells to facilitate DNA repair before cell proliferation. If, however, the DNA damage is too severe, other signaling mechanisms work to induce cell senescence or apoptosis to prevent malignancies. The G₁-phase arrest of cell cycle progression provides an opportunity for cells to either undergo repair mechanisms or follow the apoptotic pathway.

Hydrogen peroxide is the only substance that is composed only of oxygen and water, which induce the destruction of, or severely inhibits the growth of, anaerobic organisms (bacteria and deleterious particulates that use carbon dioxide for fuel and leave oxygen as a by-product) through the oxidation process, and it is the safest all-natural disinfectant that is produced by all cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” for many physiological reasons. Granulocytes produce H_2O_2 as the first line of defense against bacteria, yeasts, deleterious particles, parasites, and most fungi. It is involved in a metabolic pathway that calls on the different types of oxidized enzymes. It is involved in proteins, carbohydrates, lipids immunity, vitamins and minerals, metabolism or any other system.

⁷⁰² The enzyme cytochrome c oxidase or Complex IV, is a large transmembrane protein complex found mitochondria of eukaryotes. It is a member of the oxygen reductase family of enzymes; it is the terminal enzyme of the electron transfer chain in the inner mitochondrial membrane. It catalyzes the four-electron reduction of dioxygen to two water molecules and harnesses the redox energy to pump four protons across the membrane against an electrochemical proton concentration gradient.

Hydrogen peroxide is a powerful oxidizer, thanks to the release of this singlet oxygen (O^-). It is more powerful than dichloromethane (Cl_2), chlorine dioxide (ClO_2), and potassium permanganate ($KMnO_4$). By catalysis, hydrogen peroxide can be converted to hydroxyl radical (OH). The oxidation potential of hydrogen peroxide is just lower than that of ozone.

To benefit the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, by augmenting the natural level of hydrogen peroxide, the urinary hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) must reach the blood circulation, for example through oral intake, and for distribution to cells throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, where it will be broken down to water (H_2O) and a singlet oxygen (O^-), by the mediation of catalase enzyme in the bloodstream and “cytochrome-C oxidase” enzyme at cellular level.

Hydrogen peroxide has a long record of medical application.⁷⁰³ In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the produced hydrogen peroxide dissolves cholesterol and ⁷⁰³ Diseases for which hydrogen peroxide is successfully used, include: allergies, headaches, herpes, Alzheimer's, Parkinson's, multiple sclerosis (MS) which is an autoimmune disease of the central nervous system (the brain and spinal cord), shingles, anemia, AIDS, infections, arrhythmias, flu, asthma, insect bites, bacterial infections, liver cirrhosis, bronchitis, systemic lupus erythematosus, cancer, candidiasis, parasitoses, cardiovascular diseases, cerebral vascular disease, periodontal disease, chronic pain, prostatitis, type 2 diabetes, rheumatoid arthritis, diabetic retinopathy, sinusitis, digestion problems, sore throat, ulcers, emphysema, viral infections, food allergies, warts, fungal infections, vaginitis, gingivitis, typhoid fever, cholera, ulcers, whooping cough and tuberculosis, etc....

It improves: the psychological and emotional state, the 5 senses (sight, hearing, touch, smell, taste), libido, thermal regulation of cold extremities (disappearance of the feeling of cold), overcoming chronic fatigue syndrome, memory and concentration, general appearance: brighter hair, more sparkling eyes, stronger nails, revived skin radiance, less visible wrinkles, etc.

It helps to reduce: varicose veins, age spots, arthritis and other pain, dependence on medications, the use of diuretics), hair loss (and sometimes stopping and reversing the calcium deposits associated with atherosclerosis. It is a good treatment for vascular disorders. It also facilitates the lessening or disappearance of angina, leg pain, and transient ischemic attacks to the brain, which cause dizziness. It also helps reverse some of the damage left over by a stroke.

Hydrogen peroxide also clears the lungs, in cases of emphysema, by producing oxygen bubbles in the alveoli (tiny air sacs in the lungs), literally lifting the mucus deposits up, so they can be coughed out. In addition, hydrogen peroxide facilitates the treatment of asthma, leukemia, multiple sclerosis, degenerative spinal disc disease, and high blood pressure. It is particularly effective with asthma, arthritis, and back disorders.

Hydrogen peroxide has a remarkable clearing effect on the skin. It is used in dermatology, as a topical antiseptic and hemostatic agent. It facilitates the treatment of wounds, skin inflammation, and hyperpigmentation. It works by delivering oxygen, which causes frothing that assists remove with dead cleaning cells.

Besides being produced by mitochondria and peroxisomes within every cell, including red blood cells, in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, as organic hydrogen peroxide, inorganic hydrogen peroxide is also present in the ocean, it is present in rainwater, it is present in vegetables.⁷⁰⁴ process), erectile disorders, the recovery period after cataract surgery (optimized vision), etc...

⁷⁰⁴ In its bulk liquid form, water is a relatively benign substance with little chemical activity. But down at the scale of tiny droplets, water is reactive. In microdroplets of water, just millionths of a meter wide, a portion of the H₂O molecules present can convert into hydrogen peroxide, H₂O₂. Such water’s hydrogen peroxide transformation is a general phenomenon, occurring in fogs, mists, raindrops and wherever else microdroplets form naturally.

Hydrogen peroxide is also available in several different foods, such as tree ferns, napa cabbages, lingonberries, chives, and sesames.

As you would have understood, such natural transformation of water (H₂O) molecules into hydrogen peroxide (H₂O₂) cannot be patented for its medicinal values by the merchants of death to make their usual profits out of it.

Have you ever heard of the sanctified water which, due to their use and consumption, induce the “miraculous” healings of all kinds of “DISEASES”? By well-defined and established “specific processes” that induce the catalysis of the reaction of hydrogen (H₂) with atmospheric oxygen (O₂), those sanctified waters are indeed loaded, you guessed it, URINARY UREA, $\text{CO}(\text{NH}_2)_2$, also referred to as carbamide, is a nitrogenous compound containing a carbonyl group attached to two amine groups (carboxyl + amide = carbamide), with chemical formula $\text{CO}(\text{NH}_2)_2$, and with osmotic diuretic⁷⁰⁵ property. It is formed in the liver via the urea cycle from ammonia, it is the main end product of catabolism of protein in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Urea is a hygroscopic molecule (capable of absorbing water) present in the epidermis as a component of the natural moisturizing factor (NMF) and is essential for the adequate hydration and integrity of the stratum corneum. Administration of urea in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” elevates blood plasma osmolality, resulting in enhanced flow of water from tissues, including the brain, cerebrospinal fluid and eye, into interstitial fluid and plasma, thereby decreasing pressure in those tissues and increasing urine outflow.

Excretion of urea is directly proportional to the protein intake. It consists of 80-90% of the total urinary nitrogen. In and of itself, urea is enormously valuable and indispensable to the functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Not only does urea provide invaluable nitrogen to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but it actually aids in the synthesis of protein; it helps the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” use protein more efficiently.

Urinary urea is also an extraordinary antibacterial, anti-viral, and anti-neoplastic (anti-tumor) agent, and it is one of the best natural diuretics. It not only acts as an extraordinary therapeutic agent for skin disorders, but also attracts moisture to the skin while at the same time preventing water loss in the skin layers, actually increasing the water-binding capacity of the skin. Urea penetrates the deepest layers of the skin where it actually binds water in the horny skin layers, plumping up the skin for a firm, supple, wrinkle-free appearance, (water retention within skin cells gives skin its elasticity and wrinkle-free appearance) providing skin renewal. It is the best and effective skin moisturizers; it increases the water-binding capacity of the skin by opening skin layers for hydrogen bonding, which with hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2). Yes, that same hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) that you found in your urine.

These are parts of the manifested “secrets of Heaven (Hydrogen) and Earth (Oxygen)”.

⁷⁰⁵ A diuretic is any chemical substance that increases the flow of urine. Diuretics promote the removal from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of excess water, salts, poisons, and accumulated metabolic products. There are many types of diuretics, but most act by decreasing the amount of fluid that is reabsorbed by the tubules of the kidneys, whence the fluid passes back into the blood.

then attracts moisture to dry skin cells.⁷⁰⁶ It causes hard dry skin cells to “unpack” and expose their water binding sites, thus enabling the cell to absorb and retain additional moisture. This action is also known as hydrotopic solubilization.

Urea is a topical emollient and moisturizing, keratolytic and antipruritic agent, and it plays a key role in keratinocyte gene regulation. It is used for numerous medicinal and other purposes including the treatment of wounds due to its proteolytic and antibacterial properties, the treatment of scaly and dry skin such as atopic dermatitis, ichthyosis, xerosis, seborrheic dermatitis and psoriasis, among others, and the treatment of eye, skin and liver cancer.

AMMONIA (NH_3), which is formed by the kidney from glutamine or amino acids in acidosis. In the presence of water, ammonia acts as a caustic but weak base. Its high pH breaks down organic material, making urine the perfect substance for cleansing because much deleterious particulates and grease — which are slightly acidic — get neutralized by the ammonia.

URINARY CREATINE ($\text{C}_4\text{H}_9\text{N}_3\text{O}_2$), which is an endogenous carbon-nitrogen compound (making it an organic acid) that plays an important role in energy metabolism in almost all tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Creatine is synthesized endogenously from methionine, glycine, and arginine, at a rate of about 1-2g/day in the kidneys, liver, and pancreas, by l-arginine:glycine amidinotransferase to guanidinoacetate. The guanidinoacetate is then methylated by the enzyme guanidinoacetate N-methyltransferase with S-adenosyl methionine to form creatine. As a naturally occurring chemical in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, creatine is largely stored in skeletal muscle tissue. Once it is stored in the biological cells, it is transformed into phosphocreatine and saved for later use. Creatine and the phosphocreatine function as buffers for ATP in tissues, maintaining ATP levels when energy demand is transiently greater than the rate of ATP synthesis. The phosphorylated form, phosphocreatine, provides, through regeneration of sufficient adenosine triphosphate (ATP) molecule, an immediate energy source for the brain and muscles, and therefore, the primary rationales for ⁷⁰⁶ Because of its properties, urea is used as a key ingredient in most skin care products, to treat dry/rough skin conditions (such as eczema, psoriasis, corns, callus) and some nail problems (such as ingrown nails). It is also used to help remove dead tissue in some wounds to help wound healing. Urea is known as a keratolytic. It increases moisture in the skin by softening/dissolving the horny substance (keratin) holding the top layer of skin cells together. This effect helps the dead skin cells fall off and helps the skin keep more water in.

supplementation are to increase, rapidly replete, and prolong this energy source to increase the metabolic capacity of these target tissues, such as the capability of a muscle to contract more powerfully longer and heal faster. Creatine also participate in reducing certain types of muscle damage (not all) from high intensity resistance training and endurance exercise allowing more complete recovery before subsequent exercise bouts. It increases the metabolic capacity of the target tissues, such as the capability of a muscle to contract more powerfully longer and also helps with faster complete recovery.

URINARY CREATININE ($C_4H_7N_3O$), which is a breakdown product of creatine phosphate from muscle and protein metabolism. It is released at a constant rate by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, depending on muscle mass. Combined with urea and other enzymes and antigens that are present in urine, creatinine hydrates facilitate the destruction of cellular tumors associated with many chronic diseases.

URINARY GUANIDINE ($NHC(NH_2)_2$, or CH_5N_3), which is an aminocarboxamidine and strongly alkaline crystalline compound, which is formed by the oxidation of guanine. Guanidine is naturally found in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, as a normal product of protein metabolism. Guanidine can be considered a nitrogen analogue of carbonic acid. The substance is one of the strongest organic acids and spontaneously reacts in the air with air humidity and carbon dioxide to form guanidinium carbonate. Guanidine is used to treat muscle weakness and fatigue in conditions that affects the signals sent from the nerves to the muscles. It is also used in the treatment of diabetes.

URINARY SPERMIDINE ($C_7H_{19}N_3$), which is a polyamine, meaning it has two or more primary amino groups. It is naturally occurring and is widely encountered in ribosomes and living tissues. It plays a critical role in cell metabolism and survival. While its designation will raise a few eyebrows, the health benefits of spermidine through the process of autophagy⁷⁰⁷ are numerous ⁷⁰⁷ Autophagy (or autophagocytosis; from the Ancient Greek αὐτόφαγος, autóphagos, meaning “self-devouring” and κύτος, kýtos, meaning “hollow”) is a “self-degradative specific process” that is important for balancing sources of energy at critical times in development and in response to nutrient deprivation. Autophagy also plays a housekeeping role in removing misfolded or aggregated proteins, clearing damaged organelles, such as mitochondria, endoplasmic reticulum and peroxisomes, as well as eliminating intracellular pathogens, through a lysosome-dependent regulated mechanism. It can be either non-

and diverse. Spermidine has anti-inflammatory and anti-antioxidant properties, and can also enhance respiration and metabolic function. Increased dietary spermidine intake is thought to reduce the risk of diseases like liver fibrosis and hepatocellular carcinoma which are one of the most common causes of liver cancer, metabolic disease, heart disease and neurodegeneration. It can also improve memory and slow cognitive decline, as autophagy clears Alzheimer's-causing amyloid-beta plaques in the brain and can thereby be used to prevent memory loss in older people suffering from mild dementia.

URINARY SPERMINE (C₁₀H₂₆N₄), which is a deliquescent crystalline aliphatic tetramine widely distributed in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is found in semen in combination with phosphoric acid, in the plasma, in cells and in tissues of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Spermine is a strongly basic, low molecular weight compounds, which appear to be a universal prerequisite for cellular growth. The free spermidine concentration is much higher in cells than in plasma. Spermine [NH₂–(CH₂)₃–NH–(CH₂)₄–(CH₂)₄–NH–(CH₂)₃–NH₂] is a basic aliphatic polyamine and, because of its four positive charges, it binds strongly to acidic or negatively charged molecules such as phosphate ions, nucleic acid, and phospholipids. It is a ubiquitous biogenic molecule that accumulates at sites of infection or injury and inhibits the activity of several cytokines at a post-transcriptional level, including Tumor Necrosis Factor (TNF)⁷⁰⁸, Interleukin-1 selective or selective in the removal of specific organelles, ribosomes and protein aggregates.

In addition to elimination of intracellular aggregates and damaged organelles, autophagy promotes cellular senescence and cell surface antigen presentation, protects against genome instability and prevents necrosis, giving it a key role in preventing diseases such as cancer, neurodegeneration, cardiomyopathy, diabetes, liver disease, autoimmune diseases and infections. Like many physiological processes in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, autophagy declines with age, but its activation can also be induced and increased, for example through the consumption of polyphenols rich food, and which may lead to improved longevity, or it can also be induced by various conditions, including calorie restriction, fasting, and exercise.

Vegetables high in polyphenols include: broccoli, carrots, spinach, red lettuce, onions, asparagus, artichokes, shallots, garlic. Fruits high in polyphenols include: Olives and olive oil, blueberries, strawberries, raspberries, blackberries, cranberries, grapes, cherries, lemon, grapefruit, oranges, pears, apples, peaches, plums, pomegranate, nectarine, apricots.

⁷⁰⁸ Tumor necrosis factor (TNF) is a multifunctional cytokine that plays important roles in diverse cellular events such as cell survival, proliferation, differentiation, and destruction.

family (IL-1 family), and the macrophage inflammatory proteins 1 α and 1 β (MIP-1 α , MIP-1 β) in macrophages and monocytes.

URINARY BILIRUBIN (C₃₃H₃₆N₄O₆). Bilirubin is a tetrapyrrole pigment present in various chemical forms in the bloodstream, namely, conjugated with glucuronic acid (direct bilirubin), unconjugated bound to serum albumin (indirect bilirubin) and unconjugated-unbound (free bilirubin). Bilirubin is formed in cells by two sequential reactions, catalysed by heme oxygenase (biliverdin-producing) and biliverdin reductase. Approximately 250–300 mg bilirubin/day is formed in a normal adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Most bilirubin (70%-90%) arises in the spleen from the catabolism of haemoglobin released from red blood cells. When a red blood cell, hence hemoglobin, undergoes degradation, after a mean life span of 120 days, the heme and the globin parts are separated. The globin chains will be either recycled or broken down into individual amino acids by the action of proteases enzymes. The resulting amino acids will be reutilized for general protein synthesis in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The heme groups will be degraded to form bilirubin by the microsomal enzymes in the macrophages. Heme degradation will involve the following steps:

- Heme oxygenase enzyme converts heme into biliverdin (C₃₃H₃₄N₄O₆);
- Biliverdin reductase enzyme reduces biliverdin (C₃₃H₃₄N₄O₆) to form bilirubin (C₃₃H₃₆N₄O₆).

The bilirubin thus formed will be released into the bloodstream. It is a fundamental substance which acts as an antioxidant and anti-inflammatory agent in the plasma and in vascular endothelial cells. It can neutralize free radicals and prevent peroxidation of lipids. It can interact with free oxygen radicals, producing its own oxidation which transforms it once again into biliverdin. This reconversion is catalyzed by biliverdin reductase which, by virtue of the same, detoxifies up to 10000 times the oxidant excesses. Since bilirubin is soluble in lipids it can protect cells against lipid peroxidation. All soluble oxidants are neutralized or detoxified by glutathione using a cycle that requires two enzymes: glutathione peroxidase and glutathione reductase. This protects hydrosoluble proteins from oxidation by glutathione while lipids are protected by bilirubin.

As a pro-inflammatory cytokine, TNF is secreted by inflammatory cells, which may be involved in inflammation-associated carcinogenesis. TNF exerts its biological functions through activating distinct signaling pathways such as nuclear factor κ B (NF- κ B) and c-Jun N-terminal kinase (JNK).

Bilirubin and glutathione have complementary antioxidant and cytoprotective roles.

As bilirubin is water-insoluble, it can also be immediately bound by albumin to form a bilirubin-albumin complex. This complex will transport bilirubin to the hepatocytes where it will be converted into water-soluble bilirubin diglucuronide.

Bilirubin also facilitates and enhances the protection of the cardiovascular system, neuronal systems, the hepatobiliary system, the pulmonary system and the immune system. Elevated levels of bilirubin are also associated with a decreased risk of coronary disease, and preserve coronary flow and microvascular coronary functions.

URINARY TRYPTAMINE

(C₁₀H₁₂N₂). Tryptamine is a molecule that results from the degradation of tryptophan which itself is an amino acid present naturally in trace amounts in the brain in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It has no psychotropic effect (acting on the psyche) although it is the chemical skeleton of serotonin, an important neurotransmitter from the intestine, which contributes to feelings of well-being and happiness, although it has a multitude of functions related to learning, memory, reward and many other physiological processes. Tryptamine is also present in the pituitary gland which is responsible for the secretion of hormones. Tryptamines also occur naturally as alkaloids found in larger amounts in a variety of plants and they exist in more than 1500 natural varieties. The basic element of tryptamine is the indole structure — a fused benzene and pyrrole ring and a 2-aminoethyl group at the third carbon.

The tryptamine structure is a common feature of some aminergic neuromodulators, including: melatonin, a hormone involved in regulating the sleep-wake cycle; serotonin, an important neurotransmitter in the brain; naturally occurring compounds such as psilocybin (magic mushrooms) and bufotenine, and psychedelic derivatives such as dimethyltryptamine (DMT), psilocybin, psilocin, and others.

Tryptamine plays important biomedical role as neurotransmitter and neuromodulator, vasoconstrictor and vasodilator, antimicrobial and antibacterial, antioxidant and antifungal agents. It activates trace amine-associated receptors expressed in the brain and regulates the activity of the dopaminergic, serotonergic, and glutamatergic systems. In the human gut, symbiotic bacteria convert dietary tryptophan to tryptamine, which activates 5-HT₄ receptors and regulates gastrointestinal motility. Multiple tryptamine-derived medicines have been developed to treat migraines, while trace amine-associated receptors are being used for the treatment of neuropsychiatric disorders.

URINARY HIPPURIC ACID ($C_9H_9NO_3$), which is a white crystalline nitrogenous acid, which is formed in the liver as a conjugation of glycine with aromatic phenolic acids such as benzoic and salicylic acid from ingested food. It is an acyl glycine formed from the conjugation of benzoic acid with glycine. N-acyl glycines are glycine conjugates of acyl-CoA species. They are linked to several important biological roles including antinociception⁷⁰⁹, anti-inflammation, proliferative control, intracellular calcium mobilization, insulin release, temperature regulation of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, locomotion, nitric oxide production in sensory neurons, and skin aging. Hippuric acid is a normal component of urine and is typically increased with increased consumption of phenolic compounds (tea, wine, fruit juices). These phenols are converted into benzoic acid which is then converted into hippuric acid.

URINARY CITRIC ACID ($C_6H_8O_7$), which is an organic acid and a natural component of many fruits and vegetables. Citric acid is a staple in medicines due to its antioxidant properties. It has many impressive health benefits and functions. It is a useful disinfectant against a variety of bacteria and deleterious particulates. It maintains stability of active ingredients and is used as a preservative. It is also used as an acidulant to control pH and acts as an anticoagulant⁷¹⁰ by chelating calcium in blood. As an intermediate in the citric ⁷⁰⁹ Nociception is the process by which noxious stimulation is communicated through the peripheral and central nervous system. Nociceptors are specific receptors within the skin, muscle, skeletal structures, and viscera that detect potentially damaging stimuli. Nociceptive afferent neurons extend through the spinal cord via the dorsal horn. In addition to receiving incoming nociceptive information, the dorsal horn integrates information from descending pathways from the brainstem and brain, which modulates the flow of nociceptive information back to the higher structures. Dorsal horn neurons proceed through the anterolateral system to a complex array of subcortical and cortical areas including but not limited to the brainstem, thalamus, forebrain, and somatosensory cortex.

Antinociception is the action or process of blocking the detection of a painful or injurious stimulus by sensory neurons.

⁷¹⁰ Anticoagulants, commonly known as blood thinners, are chemical substances that prevent or reduce coagulation of blood, prolonging the clotting time. As a class of medications, anticoagulants are used in therapy for thrombotic disorders. Oral anticoagulants (OACs) are taken by many people in pill or tablet form, and various intravenous anticoagulant dosage forms are used in hospitals. Some anticoagulants are used in medical equipment, such as sample tubes, blood transfusion bags, heart-lung machines, and dialysis equipment. Anticoagulants are closely related to antiplatelet drugs and thrombolytic drugs by manipulating the various pathways of blood coagulation. Specifically, antiplatelet drugs inhibit platelet aggregation (clumping together), whereas acid cycle, which occurs in the metabolism of all aerobic organisms, it metabolizes energy. It enhances the bioavailability of minerals, allowing the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to better absorb them. Citric acid — in the form of potassium citrate — prevents kidney stone formation and breaks apart those already formed.

anticoagulants inhibit specific pathways of the coagulation cascade, which happens after the initial platelet aggregation but before the formation of fibrin and stable aggregated platelet products.

The “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, and which the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wears produces, is the best anticoagulant and blood cleanser there is, with zero undesirable side effects, zero risk of bleeding, as it contains appropriate growth factors for wound healing.

Anticoagulant are used for the treatment and prevention of a variety of diseases and conditions, including:

- Atrial fibrillation — commonly forms an atrial appendage clot;
- Coronary artery disease;
- Deep vein thrombosis — can lead to pulmonary embolism;
- Ischemic stroke — which occurs when a vessel supplying blood to the brain is obstructed. It accounts for about 87 % of all strokes;
- Hypercoagulable states (e.g., Factor V Leiden, which is a variant (mutated form) of the clotting factor V, one of several substances that helps blood clot, which causes an increase in blood clotting (hypercoagulability). Factor V (pronounced factor five) is a protein of the coagulation system, rarely referred to as proaccelerin or labile factor. In contrast to most other coagulation factors, it is not enzymatically active but functions as a cofactor.) — can lead to deep vein thrombosis;
- Mechanical heart valves;
- Myocardial infarction;
- Pulmonary embolism;
- Restenosis from stents — which occurs when a section of blocked artery that was opened up with angioplasty or a stent has become narrowed again;
- Cardiopulmonary bypass (or any other surgeries requiring temporary aortic occlusion);
- Heart failure.

Your own “urine” is your lifesaving medication for such diseases and conditions.

URINARY URIC ACID, (2,6,8-trihydroxypurine, $C_5H_4N_4O_3$), which is the end product of the oxidation of purines in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and is generated in the liver. Uric acid is not only formed from dietary nucleoprotein but also from the breakdown of cellular nucleoprotein in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Pure uric acid is colourless. Deposits of uric acid and urates are coloured by absorbed urinary pigments, particularly the red uroerythrin. Uric acid homeostasis is determined by the balance between production, intestinal secretion, and renal excretion. The kidney is an important regulator of circulating uric acid levels, by reabsorbing around 90% of filtered urate, while being responsible for 60–70% of total uric acid excretion of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Uric acid is one of the most important antioxidants in biological fluids of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and is responsible for neutralizing over 50% of the free radicals in the blood.

URINARY PHOSPHOCHOLINE, $C_5H_{15}NO_4P^+$. Phosphocholine belongs to the class of organonitrogen compounds (organic compounds containing a nitrogen atom) known as phosphocholines, in the super class of organic nitrogen compounds. Phosphocholine is an intermediate in the synthesis of phosphatidylcholine⁷¹¹ in tissues. Phosphocholine is made in a reaction, catalyzed by choline kinase, that converts ATP and choline into phosphocholine and ADP. Phosphocholines are compounds containing a [2-(trimethylazaniumyl)ethoxy]phosphonic acid or derivative. In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, phosphocholine participates in a number of enzymatic reactions. In particular, it can be converted to the high-energy nucleotide derivative, which is designated as Cytidine 5′-diphosphocholine, CDP-choline or citicoline, through mediation of the enzyme choline-phosphate cytidyltransferase. Cytidine 5′-diphosphocholine is an essential intermediate in the biosynthetic pathway of the structural phospholipids of cell membranes, especially in that of phosphatidylcholine. Cytidine 5′-diphosphocholine increases noradrenaline⁷¹² and dopamine⁷¹³ levels in both the peripheral and central nervous systems. It restores the activity of mitochondrial ATPase and of membranal Na^+/K^+ ATPase. It also activates the biosynthesis of structural phospholipids in the neuronal membranes, increases cerebral metabolism and acts on the levels of various neurotransmitters, facilitates the treatment of cerebral vascular disease, head trauma of varying severity and cognitive disorders of diverse etiology — that is to say, the cause, set of causes, or manner of causation of a disease or condition.

URINARY PHOSPHORYLCHOLINE, $\text{C}_5\text{H}_{14}\text{NO}_4\text{P}$, also known as 2-(trimethylazaniumyl)ethyl hydrogen phosphate, and choline phosphate, belongs to the class of organic compounds known as phosphocholines. Phosphocholines are compounds containing a [2-(trimethylazaniumyl)ethoxy]phosphonic acid or derivative. In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, phosphorylcholine

It can act as both a neurotransmitter (a chemical messenger used by nerve cells) and a hormone (a chemical that travels in the blood and controls the actions of other cells or organs). Neurotransmitters are synthesized in specific regions of the brain, but affect many regions systemically.

In the brain, norepinephrine increases arousal and alertness, promotes vigilance, enhances the formation and retrieval of memory, and focuses attention

In the rest of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, norepinephrine increases heart rate and blood pressure, triggers the release of glucose from energy stores, increases blood flow to skeletal muscle, reduces blood flow to the gastrointestinal system, blocks urination, and slows the rate at which food moves through the gut.

⁷¹³ Dopamine (DA, a contraction of 3,4-dihydroxyphenethylamine) is a neuromodulatory molecule that plays several important roles in cells. It is an organic chemical of the catecholamine and phenethylamine families. Dopamine constitutes about 80% of the catecholamine content in the brain. It is an amine synthesized by removing a carboxyl group from a molecule of its precursor chemical, L-DOPA, which is synthesized in the brain and kidneys. In the brain, dopamine functions as a neurotransmitter — a chemical released by neurons (nerve cells) to send signals to other nerve cells. The brain includes several distinct dopamine pathways, one of which plays a major role in the motivational component of reward-motivated behavior.

Outside the central nervous system, dopamine functions primarily as a local paracrine messenger. In blood vessels, it inhibits norepinephrine release and acts as a vasodilator (at normal concentrations); in the kidneys, it increases sodium excretion and urine output; in the pancreas, it reduces insulin production; in the digestive system, it reduces gastrointestinal motility and protects intestinal mucosa; and in the immune system, it reduces the activity of lymphocytes. With the exception of the blood vessels, dopamine in each of these peripheral systems is synthesized locally and exerts its effects near the cells that release it.

participates in a number of enzymatic reactions. In particular, phosphorylcholine can be converted into choline, in the liver, through its interaction with the enzyme phosphoethanolamine/phosphocholine phosphatase. Choline is an essential nutrient for health and optimized physical performance. The majority comes from dietary sources such as nuts, beans, vegetables (such as broccoli, cauliflower, potatoes), and eggs. It benefits athletes in several ways, including enhancing muscle performance during physical exercise, improving stamina, supporting communication with muscle fibers and promoting muscle recovery following repetitive motion. Choline is important for the nervous system and for the development of normal brain functioning, for maintenance of cellular structural integrity, DNA synthesis, metabolism of fats, improving memory and cognition, protecting heart health. It also help to decrease swelling and inflammation related to asthma.

In addition, phosphorylcholine can be converted to the high-energy nucleotide derivative, which is designated as Cytidine 5'-diphosphocholine, CDP-choline or citicoline, through mediation of the enzyme choline-phosphate cytidylyltransferase. In this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment", phosphorylcholine is involved in phospholipid biosynthesis.

URINARY TRANS-FERULIC ACID ($C_{10}H_{10}O_4$). Trans-Ferulic acid is the naturally occurring isomer of ferulic acid (4-hydroxy,3-methoxy cinnamic acid), an organic phytochemical and a derivative of hydroxycinnamic acids, which is widely available in many foods such as tomato, eggplant, rice, banana, wheat, etc. Trans-Ferulic acid (TFA) has many pharmacological properties including antioxidant, antimicrobial, antifungal, and anti-inflammation. It also elevates the expression levels of antioxidant enzymes, superoxide dismutase (SOD) and catalase. It is also known to:

- Alleviate muscle soreness after exercise;
- Stimulate the immune system;
- Facilitate protection against diabetes;
- Facilitate the treatment of hot flashes;
- Reduce blood pressure;
- Protect against cardiovascular diseases.

URINARY ACETIC ACID (CH_3COOH). Acetic acid, also called ethanoic acid, is a colorless liquid organic compound with the chemical formula CH_3COOH . It is the most important of the carboxylic acids and it contains an acetyl group that is fundamental to all forms of life. Acetic acid is the main component of vinegar⁷¹⁴, the medicinal health benefits of which include: blood sugar control, weight management, reduced cholesterol, cleansing, antifungal, antiviral, antibacterial and antimicrobial properties, and prevention of skin infection and treatment of wounds.

URINARY 4-HYDROXYPHENYLACETIC ACID (C₈H₈O₃), is the most abundant polyphenol (a polyhydroxy phenol) in urine. Phenol (also called carbolic acid) is a normal metabolic product, excreted in quantities up to 40 mg/L in urine. It is a weak acid and an aromatic organic compound with the molecular formula C₆H₅OH. It is a white crystalline solid that is volatile. The molecule consists of a phenyl group (–C₆H₅) bonded to a hydroxy group (–OH). Mildly acidic, it requires careful handling because it can cause chemical burns. Phenol is also widely used as an antiseptic.

Polyphenols are secondary metabolites of plants and are naturally occurring compounds with antioxidant properties. They are a large family of naturally occurring organic compounds characterized by multiples of phenol units and are found largely in the fruits, vegetables, cereals and beverages.⁷¹⁵ They can be subdivided into flavonoids, phenolic acid, polyphenolic amides, and other ⁷¹⁴ Standard white vinegar is a clear solution generally containing 4–7% acetic acid and 93–96% water. As you would know, vinegar is used not just for cooking but also as a medicine (as a digestive aid, an antibacterial balm to dress wounds, and for the treatment of cough, ear infections (otitis externa, otitis media, and granular myringitis), acne and other chronic skin issues), a natural disinfectant, a preservative, and a drink to boost strength and promote wellness. Vinegars are also a dietary source of polyphenols, compounds synthesized by plants to defend against oxidative stress.

⁷¹⁵ Vegetables high in polyphenols include: Broccoli, Carrots, Spinach, Red lettuce, Onions, Asparagus, Artichokes, Shallots, Garlic. Grains high in polyphenols include: Oats, Rye, Wheat. Legumes high in polyphenols include: Black beans, White beans, Soybeans, Tofu, Tempeh (made from fermented soybeans) Fruits high in polyphenols include: Blueberries, Strawberries, Raspberries, Blackberries, Cranberries, Grapes, Cherries, Lemon, Grapefruit, Oranges, Pears, Apples, Peaches, Plums, Pomegranate, Nectarine, Apricots, Olives and olive oil.

Olive oil, for example, contains at least 30 different phenolic compounds, including oleacein, tyrosol and hydroxytyrosol. One well-known benefit of olive oil is its high proportion of monounsaturated fat, which has been linked to a reduced risk of heart disease and stroke. Olive oil is about 98 percent fat, but that remaining two percent is made up of polyphenols and other minor constituents that lend to the health benefits of olive oil.

polyphenols. Polyphenols provide significant medicinal health benefits, which include: prevention of blood clots, reduction of blood sugar levels, and lowering of heart disease risk, promotion of brain function, improvement of digestion, and protection against cancer, cardiovascular diseases, diabetes, osteoporosis and neurodegenerative diseases.

Oleocanthal ($C_{17}H_{20}O_5$), for example, is a natural antioxidant polyphenols. It is a phenylethanoid, or a type of natural phenolic compound found in extra-virgin olive oil, in grapeseed oil, and in avocado oil. It is known to aids in the elimination of cancer cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, without harming healthy cells.

Flavonoids mainly consists of a benzopyrone ring bearing a phenolic or polyphenolic groups at different positions. They are phytochemical compounds most commonly found in fruits, herbs, stems, cereals, nuts, vegetables, flowers and seeds⁷¹⁶. The presence of bioactive phytochemical constituents present in these different plants parts gives them their medicinal value and biological activities as therapeutic agents, including antitumor (anticancer), antioxidant, anti-inflammatory, antiviral, antimicrobial, antiangiogenic, antimalarial, neuroprotective, cardio-protective, and anti-proliferative properties. Flavonoids also have neuroprotective and effects. These biological activities depend upon the type of flavonoid, its (possible) mode of action, and its bioavailability.

The antioxidant potential of flavonoids is associated with the molecular structure, and more precisely, with the location and total number of the –OH groups, the conjugation and resonance effects, the surrounding environment which modifies the thermodynamically favored antioxidant site, and the particular antioxidant mechanism for a compound.

⁷¹⁶ Grape seed, for example, is a complex mixture of several compounds, mostly represented by polyphenols and phenolic acids, including resveratrol, phenolic acids, anthocyanins, and flavonoids. They possess many biological properties, such as antioxidant, cardioprotective, anticancer, anti-inflammation, antiaging and antimicrobial. The consumption of grape seeds is known to exert several and meaningful health benefits. In particular, grape-related anti-tumoral activity encompasses a wide array of biological mechanisms and cellular targets, eventually leading to inhibition of cell growth and to enhanced apoptosis in several cancer cell lines, including lung, colon, breast, bladder, leukemia and prostate tumors. Grape seeds related anti-cancer activity mostly relies on the induced increase in reactive oxygen species, followed by the orchestrated down- and up-regulation of several key-molecular pathways, including MAPK kinases, PI3K/Akt, NF-kB, cytoskeleton proteins and metalloproteinases.

Quercetin (C₁₅H₁₀O₇) is a natural antioxidant flavonoid, which is present in plants and in commonly consumed foods such as berries, tisane of LEMONGRASS (Cymbopogon Citratus)⁷¹⁷, green tea, and grains. It has been used most effectively for colorectal cancer. Cell cycle arrest, increase in apoptosis, antioxidant replication, modulation of estrogen receptors, regulation of signaling pathways, inhibition of metastasis and angiogenesis are among various mechanisms underlying the chemo-preventive effects of quercetin in colorectal cancer. Quercetin, when present in the blood stream, improves vascular health and reduces risk of cardiovascular disease in its conjugated form. The quercetin and its derivatives prevent thrombosis or blood clotting and prevent chances of stroke.

Flavonoids also prevent age related neurodegenerative diseases, and in particular, dementia, Parkinson's and Alzheimer's disease.

URINARY 3-HYDROXYBUTYRIC ACID (C₄H₈O₃), also known as β-Hydroxybutyric acid, is a butyric acid substituted with a hydroxyl group in the beta or 3 position. It is a small molecule metabolite, which is involved in the synthesis and degradation of ketone bodies. Ketone bodies are small, lipid-derived molecules that provide energy to tissues when glucose is scarce, such as during fasting or prolonged exercise. Over 80% of the stored energy in this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment" resides in the fatty acids contained in "adipose tissue"⁷¹⁸.

⁷¹⁷ See conversation of July 01, 2005, Aristide with the Archangel RAPHAEL, on how to cleanse an organ; to rid it of impurities, rid it of everything which, like bacteria, infectious particle, etc ..., is detrimental to its proper functioning.

⁷¹⁸ The adipose tissue, or fatty tissue, is the connective tissue consisting mainly of fat cells (adipose cells, or adipocytes), which are specialized to synthesize and contain large globules of fat, within a structural network of fibres. It is found mainly under the skin but also in deposits between the muscles, in the intestines and in their membrane folds, around the heart, and elsewhere. It is also found in the bone marrow, where it imparts a yellow colour; yellow marrow is most abundant in adults. The fat stored in adipose tissue comes from dietary fats or is produced in the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment".

The adipose tissue is a central metabolic organ in the regulation of whole energy homeostasis of this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment" and which acts as a caloric reservoir. In excess nutrient conditions, the adipose tissue stores surplus nutrients in the form of neutral lipids, whereas in nutrient deficit conditions, it supplies nutrients to other tissues through lipolysis.

There are two different types of adipose tissue: white adipose tissue and brown adipose tissue. White adipose tissue, the most common type, provides insulation, serves as an energy reservoir for other organs for times of starvation or great exertion, and forms pads between organs. Brown adipose tissue accumulates lipids for cold-induced adaptive

During fasting, after muscle and liver stores of glycogen are depleted, fatty acids are mobilized from adipocytes and transported to the liver for conversion to ketone bodies. Ketone bodies are then distributed via blood circulation to metabolically active tissues, such as muscle or brain, where they are metabolized into acetyl-CoA and eventually ATP.

Like the other ketone bodies (acetoacetate and acetone), levels of 3-hydroxybutyric acid are raised in the blood and urine in ketosis, the metabolic state in which fat that has been stored is converted into energy, releasing ketones in the process. 3-Hydroxybutyric acid is a typical partial-degradation product of branched-chain amino acids (primarily valine) released from muscle for hepatic and renal gluconeogenesis. This acid is metabolized by 3-hydroxybutyrate dehydrogenase (catalyzes the oxidation of D-3-hydroxybutyrate to form acetoacetate, using NAD⁺ as an electron acceptor). The enzyme functions in nervous tissues and muscles, enabling the use of circulating hydroxybutyrate as a fuel. In the liver mitochondrial matrix, the enzyme can also catalyze the reverse reaction, a step in ketogenesis. 3-Hydroxybutyric acid is a chiral compound having two enantiomers, D-3-hydroxybutyric acid and L-3-hydroxybutyric acid.

In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, 3-hydroxybutyric acid is synthesized in the liver from fatty acids and represents an essential carrier of energy from the liver to peripheral tissues when the supply of glucose is too low for the energetic needs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, such as during periods of prolonged exercise, starvation, or absence of dietary carbohydrates. It also acts as a regulator of cellular signaling via numerous pathways in various cellular organelles in a manner that is independent of nicotinamide adenine dinucleotide (NAD) levels. It is used for the purpose to increase athletic performance, for the treatment of many age-related diseases, including cardiovascular disease, cancer, arthritis, dementia, cataracts, osteoporosis, diabetes, hypertension, dry eye, thermogenesis. When muscles and other tissues need energy, certain hormones bind to adipose cells and trigger the hydrolysis of triacylglycerol, resulting in the release of energy-rich fatty acids and glycerol: a process known as lipolysis. The enzyme responsible for hydrolysis is lipase, which occurs in the blood, certain gastrointestinal juices, and adipose tissue. Lipase is activated by the hormones epinephrine, norepinephrine, glucagon, and adrenocorticotropin, which bind to adipocytes.

Adipose tissues secrete various hormones, cytokines, and metabolites (termed as adipokines) that control systemic energy balance by regulating appetitive signals from the central nerve system as well as metabolic activity in peripheral tissues. In response to changes in the nutritional status, the adipose tissue undergoes dynamic remodeling, including quantitative and qualitative alterations in adipose tissue-resident cells.

migraine, Alzheimer disease, Parkinson disease, and many other ailments. The level of 3-hydroxybutyric acid in urine increases during fasting and dietary restriction. An increased level of 3-hydroxybutyric acid in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” also prolongs life and delays the onset of age-associated diseases.

The increase in β -hydroxybutyrate, as depicted by the redshift of the arrow in the figure, reduces metabolic complications caused by insulin resistance, reduces cellular aging phenotypes, including senescence and inflammation, and regenerates sciatic nerves.

URINARY GLUCURONIC ACID ($C_6H_{10}O_7$), a metabolite of glucose, is produced in the liver. It is a carboxylic acid that has the structure of a glucose molecule that has had its sixth carbon atom (of six total) oxidized. The salts of glucuronic acid are known as glucuronates. Glucuronic acid is a precursor of ascorbic acid (vitamin C, formerly called L-hexuronic acid). Glucuronic acid naturally occurs in plants, fruits, wine, honey, rice, vinegar, and other natural sources. It is a highly soluble compound that can bind to substances such as hormones, oestrogen and progesterone, to keep their balance in check. Glucuronic acid is well established as an important detoxicant in the protection of health: it binds to xenobiotic toxins, poisonous substances, to facilitate their subsequent elimination from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. These linkages involve O-glycosidic bonds.

The process is known as glucuronidation, and the resulting substances are known as glucuronides (or glucuronosides). Glucuronic acid is also involved in the detoxification of the structure/remodeling of the extracellular matrix.

URINARY SCYLLO-INOSITOL ($C_6H_{12}O_6$), also known as Scyllitol, and Scyllo-Cyclohexanehexol, is one of the stereoisomers (that is to say, each of two or more compounds differing only in the spatial arrangement of their atoms) of inositol. Inositols are sugar-like, cyclohexane hexaols (cyclitols), which are part of membrane molecules, participating as second messengers in several cell-signaling processes. They have a cyclic structure of six carbons and six alcohols, being classified as sugar alcohols (polyols with one hydroxyl group attached to each carbon atom). There are nine (9) stereoisomers of inositol that are composed of seven (7) achiral compounds and a pair (2) of enantiomers.⁷¹⁹ Inositols are used in the treatment of diabetic nerve pain, panic disorder, high cholesterol, insomnia, cancer, depression, schizophrenia, Alzheimer disease, autism, hair growth, a skin disorder. Scyllo-inositol, is a therapeutic agent known to inhibit cognitive deficits and reduce aggregation of beta-amyloid peptide, which denotes peptides of 36–43 amino acids that are the main component of the amyloid plaques found in the brains of patients suffering with Alzheimer disease.

URINARY SUCCINIC ACID, is a dicarboxylic acid with the chemical formula $(CH_2)_2(CO_2H)_2$. It takes the form of an anion, succinate, which has multiple biological roles as a metabolic intermediate being converted into fumarate by the enzyme succinate dehydrogenase in complex 2 of the electron transport chain which is involved in making ATP, and as a signaling molecule reflecting the cellular metabolic state.

Succinate is generated in mitochondria via the tricarboxylic acid cycle (TCA). Succinate can exit the mitochondrial matrix and function in the cytoplasm as well as the extracellular space, changing gene expression patterns, modulating epigenetic landscape or demonstrating hormone-like signaling. As such, succinate ⁷¹⁹ A molecule or ion is achiral if it is superimposable, i.e. it can be superimposed on its mirror image. Achiral molecules have a plane of symmetry or a centre of symmetry. Achiral molecules having a stereocenter are known as Meso molecules.

Enantiomers are a pair of molecules that exist in two forms that are mirror images of one another but cannot be superimposed one upon the other. Enantiomers have exactly the same connectivity but opposite three-dimensional shapes. An enantiomer can be distinguished easily from its mirror image, just as a right hand can easily be identified and distinguished from a left hand.

links cellular metabolism, especially ATP formation, to the regulation of cellular function.

Succinic acid has antioxidant, antimicrobial and anti-inflammatory properties. It is a natural cleanser that also helps to improve cellular respiration, to prevent colds, to treat arthritis, to regulate cardiomyocyte. Succinic acid is among the four fatty acids with short chains that inhibit the growth of acne. It helps control sebum production on the skin, balance the skin pH levels, and decongest the skin pores.

URINARY

ACONITIC ACID, is an organic acid with the formula $C_6H_6O_6$ and the chemical designation is propene-1,2,3-tricarboxylic acid. The chemical designation name indicates what the structure actually is: a 3 carbon backbone (prop) with a carboxylic acid attached to each carbon and a double bond (ene) between two of the carbon atoms on the spine. This leaves two possible conformations around the double bond: cis, where the functional groups lie on the same side of the carbon chain, and trans, where the functional groups are on opposing sides of the carbon chain. The conjugate base of cis-aconitic acid, cis-aconitate is an intermediate in the isomerization of citrate to isocitrate in the citric acid cycle. It is acted upon by the enzyme aconitase.

ACONITIC

acid can also be found in various species of Achillea (Compositae)⁷²⁰ and Equisetum (Equisetaceae)⁷²¹, in beet root, and in sugar cane, and sorghum as a defense compound in these plants. It is used for the temporary relief of symptoms of chronic illness including fatigue, effects of toxin buildup, slowed metabolism, weakened constitution.

URINARY

GLYCOLIC ACID ($C_2H_4O_3$), is a 2-hydroxy monocarboxylic acid that is acetic acid where the methyl group has been hydroxylated. It is an “alpha ⁷²⁰ Achillea ligustica (Compositae or Asteraceae), also known as are known as bristly yarrow, yellow milfoil, or yarrow, is a medicinal plant with antimicrobial, antiseptic, diuretic, anthelmintic, stomachic, cardi tonic, hypoglycemic, emmenagogue, antispasmodic, antianemic, antioxidant, antiprotozoal, antiulcer, antiinflammatory, antinociceptive, antidiabetic, anxiolytic, anticancer properties. It is used in the treatment of a very wide range of disorders but is particularly valuable for treating of wounds, bleedings, headache, inflammation, pains, spasmodic diseases, flatulence and dyspepsia.

⁷²¹ Equisetum, commonly called Horsetail, is a natural diuretic and potent medicinal plant of the Equisetaceae family. It is used to stop bleeding, heal ulcers and wounds, and treat tuberculosis and kidney problems.

hydroxy acid”⁷²², which can also be found in sugar cane. Glycolic acid has the smallest-sized molecules of all the alpha hydroxy acids. This allows it to be absorbed into the skin and exfoliate it even better than other alpha hydroxy acids.

Glycolic acid triggers the skin to make more collagen as well. Collagen is the protein that makes skin firm, plump, and elastic. It also gives bones and connective tissues their strength.

As the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” ages, the production of collagen decreases. Using glycolic acid each day helps prevent the breakdown of collagen. Glycolic acid is one of the most widely used alpha hydroxy acids in skincare products; notably for:

- Anti-aging: It smooths fine wrinkles and improves the skin's tone and texture.
- Hydration: It plumps the skin and prevents it from getting dry.
- Sun damage: It fades dark patches caused by sun damage and protects collagen from the sun.
- Complexion: It brightens the skin when used regularly.
- Exfoliation: It prevents ingrown hairs and makes pores appear smaller by helping the skin shed dead skin cells.
- Acne: It cleans out pores to prevent comedones, blackheads, and inflamed breakouts.

URINARY HIPPURIC ACID (C₉H₉NO₃), or benzoyl-glycocol, is an acyl glycine produced by the conjugation of benzoic acid and glycine. Hippuric Acid has antibacterial properties and is used therapeutically in the form of its salts (hippurates of calcium and ammonium). Hippuric acid, present in the urine, by ⁷²² α-Hydroxy acids, or alpha hydroxy acids (AHAs), are a class of chemical compounds that consist of a carboxylic acid substituted with a hydroxyl group on the adjacent carbon. Prominent examples are glycolic acid, lactic acid, and citric acid.

Although these compounds are related to the ordinary carboxylic acids, and therefore are weak acids, their chemical structure allows for the formation of an internal hydrogen bond between the hydrogen at the hydroxyl group and one of the oxygen atoms of the carboxylic group.

A number of α-Hydroxy acids are used in skincare preparations for their exfoliating properties. These include daily anti-aging products, such as serums, toners, and creams, as well as occasional concentrated treatments via chemical peels.

reaction with hydrochloric acid, gives glycol hydrochloride and benzoic acid which is an antiseptic and antimicrobial preservative used for the treatment of chronic bronchitis (taking advantage of its expectorant effect) and cystitis and pyelitis (as balsamic). It facilitates the treatment of ulcers, wounds, cracked nipples and lips.

URINARY OXALIC ACID, is an organic acid with the designation ethanedioic acid and formula $\text{HO}_2\text{C}-\text{CO}_2\text{H}$, and which is produced in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” by the metabolism of ascorbic acid or glyoxylic acid. Oxalic acid forms the first of a series of dicarboxylic acids, which includes malonic acid, $\text{CH}_2(\text{COOH})_2$, and succinic acid, $(\text{CH}_2)_2(\text{COOH})_2$. Oxalic acid is the simplest dicarboxylic acid found in nature. It is a major constituent of many plants and a metabolic by-product of endogenous and exogenous compounds. Oxalic acid occurs naturally in many plants like the following: fruits, cocoa, leafy green vegetables, nuts, seeds, spinach, sweet potatoes, star fruit, turnip greens, endive, swiss chard, beet greens. When oxalic acid mixes with other minerals, it forms oxalate. Oxalic acid linked to the cure or prevention of cancer; it destroys cancer cells, virus, bacteria, and decalcifies the material in plaque in arteries.

URINARY BENZOIC ACID, is an organic acid which is described by the chemical formula $\text{C}_6\text{H}_5\text{COOH}$. It is the simplest aromatic carboxylic acid and it consists of a carboxyl group attached to a benzene ring. Benzoic acid occurs naturally in many plants (such as cherry bark, raspberries, tea, anise, and cassia bark, etc...) and it serves as an intermediate in the biosynthesis of many secondary metabolites. Benzoic acid is linked to several health benefits, thanks largely to its anti-inflammatory, antimicrobial properties. It inhibits the growth of mold, yeast and some bacteria. It is used for the treatment of chronic bronchitis (taking advantage of its expectorant effect) and cystitis and pyelitis (as balsamic). It is a major ingredient of acidic ointment used for the topical treatment of dermatophytosis, and fungal skin diseases such as tinea, ringworm, and athlete’s foot. It is also a major ingredient in topical antiseptics, expectorants, analgesics and inhalant decongestants. Benefits of benzoic acid in skincare include anti-aging, soothing, and moisturizing properties.

URINARY MALIC ACID (2-HYDROXYBUTANEDIOIC ACID, $\text{C}_4\text{H}_6\text{O}_5$), is an organic acid that is produced naturally in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” when carbohydrates are converted into energy. It also occurs naturally in a variety of fruits and vegetables. Apples are the richest sources. Other fruits include bananas, cherries, grapes, lychees, mango, nectarines, oranges, and strawberries. Vegetables rich in malic acid include broccoli, beans, carrots, peas, and potatoes.

Malic acid is considered an alpha-hydroxy acid (AHA). Due to its antioxidant and exfoliation benefits, it is commonly used for a range of skin concerns, including fine lines and wrinkles, hyperpigmentation, acne, large pores, milia, warts, calluses, and more. It helps in retaining moisture, balancing the pH of the skin, and keeping the skin hydrated.

Malic acid is a precursor to citrate, a substance that prevents calcium from binding with other substances in urine and from forming kidney stones. Citrate may also prevent crystals from getting bigger by preventing them from sticking together.

Regular consumption of malic acid helps improve overall muscle performance, thereby easing chronic fatigue syndrome (CFS). It is also beneficial in boosting energy levels, thereby easing the fatigue and improving the condition.

Primarily used for treating fibromyalgia and chronic fatigue syndrome, malic acid is also known to boost oral health and cleanse the liver. It helps to improve xerostomia or dry mouth, by stimulating the production of saliva and thereby reducing harmful bacteria in the mouth; which is one reason it is used in toothpaste and mouthwashes. Malic acid is beneficial for the liver health because of its metal chelator nature. The organic compound binds to the toxic metals accumulated in the liver and diffuses them, protecting the liver. It is also beneficial in removing gallstones. Removing gallstones in the gallbladder allows for more bile production and bile flow, and this lowers the amount of cholesterol and fat in the liver, and helps reverse fatty liver disease.

One of the major health benefits of malic acid is that it helps boost energy levels. An essential component in the Krebs cycle, a process that turns carbohydrates, proteins and fats into energy and water in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the organic compound improves physical and mental performance by boosting your energy levels.

URINARY FUMARIC ACID, is an organic acid with the formula $\text{HO}_2\text{CCH}=\text{CHCO}_2\text{H}$, and with a fruit-like taste. The salts and esters are known as fumarates, and are intermediates in the citric acid cycle used by cells, to produce energy in the form of adenosine triphosphate (ATP) from food. Fumarates are formed by the oxidation of succinate by the enzyme succinate dehydrogenase. Fumarates are then converted by the enzyme fumarase to malate.

Much like vitamin D, fumaric acid is formed by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, in the skin, during exposure to sunlight. It is produced in eukaryotic cells from succinate in complex 2 of the electron transport chain via the enzyme succinate dehydrogenase. It is one of two isomeric unsaturated dicarboxylic acids, the other being maleic acid. In fumaric acid the carboxylic acid groups are trans (E) and in maleic acid they are cis (Z).

Due to its has immune-regulating properties, fumaric acid is known to relieve skin discomfort associated with the autoimmune condition psoriasis. It also reduces chronic inflammation, helps to calm the itching, desquamation and discomfort characteristic of psoriasis.

URINARY LACTIC ACID ($C_3H_6O_3$), is an organic acid which is formed in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from pyruvic acid under the action of an enzyme, lactate dehydrogenase. It is an α -hydroxy acid, its chemical formula is $C_3H_6O_3$ and its structure is reflected in its systematic designation, 2-hydroxypropanoic acid. It forms mainly in the heart, muscles, kidneys, skin, red blood cells (erythrocyte), where it is also found, in the event of a lack of oxygen, during intense effort requiring increased energy release. It is involved in many biochemical mechanisms. Lactate is the conjugate base of this acid (in other words, the ionized form of lactic acid).

Lactic acid is a very powerful antibacterial, decontaminant and detergent. Its use is one of the most natural ways to prevent bladder cancer, but also skin cancer. Incorporated into anti-aging face care, lactic acid helps fight the signs of skin aging such as the appearance of wrinkles, fine lines and pigment spots. It helps to stimulate the synthesis of collagen and thus helps to maintain the suppleness and elasticity of the skin. It perfectly complements other ingredients with similar properties to limit dryness and help protect the skin from external aggressions. When applied to the skin, lactic acid has many benefits:

- It helps eliminate dead cells that clog pores, and it smoothes skin texture. It dissolves intercellular bonds thus stimulating cell renewal. This process is called exfoliation. Thus, it revives dull complexions and prevents the appearance of blackheads, and provides hydration and radiance to the skin.
- It effectively moisturizes the epidermis. It improves the natural moisturizing factor of the skin.
- It fades pigment spots and smoothes fine lines.
- It lightens post-inflammatory scars and redness, including acne marks.

MANY OTHER ORGANIC ACIDS, each with its own medicinal added value, are present in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, and to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Among those organic acids are, for example: Adipic Acid, 2,3-Dihydroxy Butyric Acid, 3,4-Dihydroxy Butyric Acid, Ethylmalonic Acid, Glycolic Acid, Homovanillic Acid, 4-Hydroxy Benzoic Acid, 3-Hydroxy Isobutyric Acid, 2-Hydroxy Glutaric Acid, 4-Hydroxy Phenyl Acetic Acid, 3-Methyl Adipinic Acid, Methyl Succinic Acid, Methylmalonic Acid, 2-Methyl-3-Hydroxy Butyric Acid, Octendicarboxylic Acid, 2-Oxoglutaric Acid, 5-Oxoproline, Pimelic Acid, Suberic Acid, VanillylMandelic Acid, Decadienic Dicarboxylic Acid, Azelaic Acid, 2,4-Dihydroxy Butyric Acid, 2-Ethyl-3-hydroxy Propionic Acid, Glutaric Acid, Hydroxy Malic Acid, 3-Hydroxy Adipic Acid, 4-Hydroxy Hippuric Acid, HydroxyDecadicarboxylic Acid, 5-Hydroxy Hexanoic Acid, 3-Hydroxy-3-methyl Glutaric Acid, 3-Hydroxy Phenyl Acetic Acid, 4-Hydroxy Phenyl Lactic Acid, 3-Hydroxy Propionic Acid, (3-hydroxy phenyl)-3-Hydroxy Propionic Acid, 3-Hydroxy Isovaleric Acid, 2-Hydroxy Isovaleric Acid, Furan-2, 5-Dicarboxylic Acid, 5-Hydroxymethyl-2-Furanoic Acid, 3-Methyl-4-Hydroxy Benzoic Acid, Phenyl Acetic Acid, Phenyl Lactic Acid and Phosphoric Acid.⁷²³

Although some of these acids are found in millimolar and trace amounts in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, this is more than enough for “THE SCIENCE” that is found behind this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, in order to achieve the expected effect that allows to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. To fully grasp this, consider, for example, the effects of the six “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”, and other Luminaries, on the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, inside the “Specific Septenary Equilibrium Zone” of the first “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” with respect to the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain”, and in relation to their distances to this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

⁷²³ An extensive list of organic acids constituents of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, can be found in the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB), which is a freely available electronic database, <https://hmdb.ca>, containing detailed information about small molecule metabolites found in the human “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The database contains 220945 metabolite entries including both water-soluble and lipid soluble metabolites. Additionally, 8610 protein sequences (enzymes and transporters) are linked to these metabolite entries. Each MetaboCard entry of the Human Metabolome Database (HMDB) contains 130 data fields with 2/3 of the information being devoted to chemical/clinical data and the other 1/3 devoted to enzymatic or biochemical data.

URINARY AMINO ACIDS. About 150–200 mg of “amino acids”⁷²⁴ nitrogen, the building blocks of proteins, is excreted in the urine of an adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in 24 hours. Among the more than 500 naturally occurring amino acids that are known to constitute monomer units of peptides and are found in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, there are Albumine, ⁷²⁴ As you would know already, amino acids are organic compounds that contain amino ($-\text{NH}_3^+$) and carboxylic acid ($-\text{CO}_2\text{H}$) functional groups, along with a side chain (R group) specific to each amino acid. The elements present in every amino acid are carbon (C), hydrogen (H), oxygen (O), and nitrogen (N) (CHON); in addition sulfur (S) is present in the side chains of cysteine and methionine, and selenium (Se) in the less common amino acid selenocysteine. More than 500 naturally occurring amino acids are known to constitute monomer units of peptides, including proteins, although only 22 appear in the genetic code, 20 of which have their own designated codons and 2 of which have special coding mechanisms: Selenocysteine which is present in all eukaryotes and pyrrolysine which is present in some prokaryotes. Amino acids combine to form proteins: they are the building blocks of proteins. When proteins are digested or broken down, amino acids are left. This “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” uses amino acids to make proteins, break down food, grow, repair tissue, and perform many other functions.

Amino acids can be classified according to the locations of the core structural functional groups, as alpha- (α -), beta- (β -), gamma- (γ -) or delta- (δ -) amino acids; other categories relate to polarity, ionization, and side chain group type (aliphatic, acyclic, aromatic, containing hydroxyl or sulfur, etc.). In the form of proteins, amino acid residues form the second-largest component (water being the largest) of muscles and other tissues. Amino acids can also be classified into three groups: essential amino acids, nonessential amino acids, and conditional amino acids. The 9 essential amino acids are: histidine, isoleucine, leucine, lysine, methionine, phenylalanine, threonine, tryptophan, and valine. Essential amino acids cannot be made by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. As a result, they must come from food. Nonessential means that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” can produce the amino acid, even if it does not get it from the food. Nonessential amino acids include: alanine, arginine, asparagine, aspartic acid, cysteine, glutamic acid, glutamine, glycine, proline, serine, and tyrosine. Conditional amino acids are usually not essential, except in times of illness and stress. Conditional amino acids include: arginine, cysteine, glutamine, tyrosine, glycine, ornithine, proline, and serine.

Amino acids can also be used as a source of energy by this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. When taken up into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from the diet, the 20 standard amino acids either are used to synthesize proteins, other biomolecules, or are oxidized to urea and carbon dioxide as a source of energy. The oxidation pathway starts with the removal of the amino group by a transaminase; the amino group is then fed into the urea cycle. The other product of transamination is a keto acid that enters the citric acid cycle. Glucogenic amino acids can also be converted into glucose, through gluconeogenesis. Beyond their role as residues in proteins, amino acids participate in a number of processes such as neurotransmitter transport and biosynthesis.

Proline, Beta-aminoisobutyric Acid, Carnosine, Alanine, Threonine, Histidine, Ethanolamine, Glutamine, Glycine, Serine, Taurine, Lysine, Methionine, antineoplastons, etc..., all of which have medicinal values for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

ALBUMINE (C₁₂₃H₁₉₃N₃₅O₃₇), is the most abundant plasma protein in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, alone constituting about 55% of the total protein content of plasma, and it is also found in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. It is a small globular protein that comprises a single polypeptide chain of 585 amino acids with a molecular weight of 66500 Daltons, and is synthesised entirely by the liver hepatocytes and rapidly excreted into the bloodstream at the rate of about 10 gm to 15 gm per day. Adequate supplies of nutrients and nitrogen are essential to fuel albumin synthesis. Very little albumin is stored in the liver, and most of it gets rapidly excreted into the bloodstream. Of the total content of albumin (about 250–350g for a healthy 70kg adult “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”), approximately 40% is located in the intravascular compartment, and its half-life is about 20 days.

Albumin is a multi-functional protein with both colloidal and pharmacological activity. The exchange of fluids between the intravascular and extravascular compartments is basically governed by the levels of hydrostatic and oncotic pressure and the degree of capillary membrane permeability. Albumin’s colloidal activity is essential in maintaining fluid balance between the intravascular and interstitial compartments. Because it is the predominant plasma protein, albumin accounts for approximately 75–80% of plasma colloid osmotic pressure (COP). Due to the presence of several histidine residues with an acid dissociation constant very similar to the plasma pH, albumin is an excellent buffer in plasma as well as the main extravascular buffer able to donate positive and negative charges in case of alkalosis and acidosis, respectively.

In addition, albumin is endowed with diverse biologically specific capabilities such as ligand binding, antioxidant, free radical-scavenging and anti-inflammatory activity, coagulation, wound healing, inhibition of apoptosis and cell signalling. As a transport vehicle for metabolites, albumin has binding sites for acidic, basic, and neutral substances. It specifically binds to a wide array of toxins and endogenous ligands, lipids, hormones, metal ions and high-affinity endothelial cell albumin receptors. Ligand binding itself may serve multiple purposes such as transport, sequestration and transcytosis. Toxic materials in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” can be detoxified and inactivated through albumin binding. Due to its antioxidant properties, albumin also neutralizes unused hypochlorite, a byproduct of metabolism that would otherwise be converted to hydroxyl radicals.

Albumin has the capacity to bind toxic substances generated during inflammation. The release of free radical species and lipid peroxidation during inflammation is a major cause of tissue damage. These free radical species are released as a result of oxygen deprivation injury to tissues. This important function of albumin is carried out at the expense of the albumin molecule and is referred to as the “sacrificial antioxidant”. Small quantities are used to scavenge free radicals as well as toxins that end up destroying the molecule. Denaturing of albumin at the site of inflammation can occur through changes in temperature and pH. When albumin is destroyed, amino acids are released that can be used for tissue repair. The extravasation of plasma albumin during the inflammatory phase provides carrier transport to and from the site. This fosters the healing process by delivering amino acids, fatty acids, zinc, and other nutrients to the site to promote healing and scavenging of toxic byproducts. Albumin effectively acts as a pH buffer and mediates coagulation in the healing process.

More albumin in the blood, for example through oral intake of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, helps to increase the volume of the blood in the blood vessels. It does this by helping to draw fluid from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into the blood vessels. This is especially useful in treating shock (when blood cannot carry enough oxygen to tissues in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”) due to various causes, including serious injury, bleeding, or severe burns, which cause blood loss. Albumin can also replace low blood protein. Albumin solutions are also used to treat acute liver failure because of its ability to bind excess bilirubin (a substance produced by the liver) and increase the volume of blood.

HISTIDINE ($C_6H_9N_3O_2$), is an essential α -amino acid that is used in the biosynthesis of proteins. It contains an α -amino group, a carboxylic acid group, and an imidazole side chain, classifying it as a positively charged amino acid at physiological pH. Some functions of histidine has in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” include:

- Reducing inflammation and oxidative stress;
- Producing red blood cells and maintaining normal hemoglobin levels;
- Helping form molecules containing iron, including ferritin, which is needed for energy supply;
- Helping regulate feeding behavior and energy metabolism;

- Forming myelin sheaths, the layers surrounding nerves that allow for chemical signaling;
- Helping regulate levels of elements like iron, copper, molybdenum, zinc and manganese;
- Utilizing the antioxidant superoxide dismutase;
- Modulating wakefulness, learning, memory and emotions in the brain;
- Producing histamine, a neurotransmitter involved in immune responses, including allergic reactions, and other functions like digestion;
- Producing carnosine, which reduces plaque buildup in the arteries and may lower the risk for some chronic diseases;
- Repairing tissue and wounds;
- Regulating the pH value of the blood; protecting the skin against ultraviolet radiation by producing urocanic acid, an absorber of ultraviolet radiation.

PROLINE (C₅H₉NO₂), like all natural amino acids, is used for biosynthesizing proteins. The rigid five-membered ring in proline gives proteins made from it significantly different secondary structures from proteins made from open-chain proteins. Proline is unique in that it is the only amino acid where the side chain is connected to the protein backbone twice, forming a five-membered nitrogen-containing ring. Strictly speaking, this makes proline an imino acid since in its isolated form, it contains an NH₂⁺ rather than an NH₃⁺ group, but this is mostly just pedantic detail. A major function of proline is helping repair damage to the skin, such as wounds, incisions and burns. It is involved in all three phases of the “wound-healing cascade” as it stimulates cellular migration and contributes to new tissue development. Proline also help in supporting digestive health, preventing joint pain, supporting the cardiovascular system, contributing to a healthy metabolism and fights inflammation.

 Zoom in,
short description of the three phases of the “wound-healing cascade” *****

A wound is defined as damage or disruption to the normal anatomical structure and function. This can range from a simple break in the epithelial integrity of the skin or it can be deeper, extending into subcutaneous tissue with damage to other structures such as tendons, muscles, vessels, nerves, parenchymal organs and even bone.

Wounds can arise from pathological processes that begin externally or internally within the involved organ. They can have an accidental or intentional aetiology or they can be the result of a disease process. Wounding, irrespective of the cause and whatever the form, damages the tissue and disrupts the local environment within it. Such structural damage to tissues will trigger the “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING” in order to restore impaired mechanical equilibrium. Wounds of different etiologies and anatomic location have specific mechanical properties that affect the way of their healing.

Normal wound healing is a dynamic series of events involving the coordinated interaction of blood cells, proteins, proteases, growth factors, and extracellular matrix components. In order to aid understanding of the physiological processes that are taking place in the wound and surrounding tissue, the wound healing process can be divided into three phases: (1) inflammatory phase; (2) proliferative phase; and (3) maturational phase. Although different predominant cells characterize these phases at differing times, a considerable amount of overlap can occur.

THE INFLAMMATORY PHASE is the first phase of wound healing and is characterized by hemostasis and inflammation. Hemostasis is initiated during the exposure of collagen during wound formation that activates the intrinsic and extrinsic clotting cascade. In addition, the injury to tissue causes a release of thromboxane A₂ and prostaglandin 2- α to the wound bed causing a potent vasoconstrictor response. Furthermore, the extravasation of blood constituents provides the formation of the blood clot reinforcing the hemostatic plug. This initial response helps to limit hemorrhage and provides an initial extracellular matrix for cell migration.

Platelets are among the first response cells that play a key role in the formation of the hemostatic plug. They secrete several chemokines such as epidermal growth factor (EGF), fibronectin, fibrinogen, histamine, platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF), serotonin, and von Willebrand factor. These factors help stabilize the wound through clot formation and also attract and activate macrophages and fibroblasts. They also act to control bleeding and limit the extent of injury. Platelet degranulation activates the complement cascade, specifically C₅, a potent neutrophils chemotactic protein. Vasoactive mediators and chemokines are released by the activated coagulation cascade, complement pathways, and parenchymal cells which play a key role in the recruitment of inflammatory leukocytes to injured skin.

Cutaneous hemostasis and inflammation phase

After hemostasis is achieved, capillary vasodilatation and leakage result secondary to local histamine release by the activated complement cascade. The increased blood flow and altered vascular permeability allow for the migration of inflammatory cells to the wound bed. The presence of foreign organisms further stimulates the activation of the alternate complement pathway. Complement C3 activation results in a cascade of nonenzymatic protein cleavage and interactions that eventually stimulate inflammatory cells and the lysis of bacteria.

The second response cell to migrate to the wound after complement activation and platelet recruitment is the neutrophil. It is responsible for debris scavenging, complement-mediated opsonization and lysis of foreign organisms, and bacterial destruction via oxidative burst mechanisms (i.e., superoxide and hydrogen peroxide formation). Neutrophils kill bacteria and decontaminate the wound from foreign debris. These wastes are later extruded with the eschar or phagocytosed by macrophages.

Macrophages are important phagocytic cells that play a key role in wound healing. They are formed from monocytes stimulated by fragments of the extracellular matrix protein, transforming growth factor β , and monocyte chemoattractant protein 1. In addition to direct phagocytosis of bacteria and foreign materials, macrophages secrete numerous enzymes and cytokines; collagenases, which debride the wound; interleukins and tumor necrosis factor (TNF), which stimulate fibroblasts and promote angiogenesis; and transforming growth factor (TGF), which stimulates keratinocytes. Macrophages also secrete platelet-derived growth factor and vascular endothelial growth factor which initiate the formation of granulation tissue and thus initiate the transition into the proliferative phase and tissue regeneration.

THE PROLIFERATIVE PHASE is the second phase of wound healing and is marked by epithelialization, angiogenesis, granulation tissue formation, and collagen deposition. Epithelialization occurs within hours after injury in wound repair. With an intact basement membrane, the epithelial cells migrate upwards in the normal pattern as occurs in a first-degree skin burn whereby the epithelial progenitor cells remain intact below the wound and the normal layers of epidermis are restored in 2 to 3 days. If the basement membrane has been damaged, similar to a deeper burn, then the normal epidermal cells from skin appendages (e.g., hair follicles, sweat glands) and the wound periphery reepithelialize the wound.

Cutaneous proliferation phase

The proliferative phase ends with granulation tissue formation. This new stroma begins to invade the wound space close to four days after injury. The new blood vessels at this time have provided a facilitated entry point into the wound to cells such as macrophages and fibroblasts. Macrophages continue to supply growth factors stimulating further angiogenesis and fibroplasia. The secreted platelet-derived growth factor and transforming growth factor β along with the extracellular matrix molecules stimulate fibroblasts differentiation to produce ground substance and then collagen. Fibroblasts are the key players in the synthesis, deposition, and remodeling of the extracellular matrix providing strength and substance to the wound.

THE MATURATIONAL PHASE is the third and final phase of wound healing. This is characterized by the transition from granulation tissue to scar formation. Twelve (12) days after injury, the wound undergoes contraction, ultimately resulting in a smaller amount of apparent scar tissue. Collagen deposition by fibroblasts continues for a prolonged period with a net increase in collagen deposition reached after twenty one (21) days from tissue injury. The entire process is a dynamic continuum dictated by numerous growth factors and cells with an overlap of each of the three phases of wound healing to provide continued remodeling.

Cutaneous remodelling phase

HEALING OF TENDONS, LIGAMENTS, BONES, AND MUSCLES

TENDON HEALING follows the phases of inflammation, proliferation, and remodeling. These tissues may heal at a slower rate than other connective tissues due to their dense and hypocellular nature. During the phases of tendon healing, tendon fibroblasts, or tenocytes, are the primary cell regulating homeostasis and respond to chemical and mechanical changes in the environment. These cells are responsible for collagen and other extracellular matrix proteins during the proliferative stage of healing. Initially, these proteins are highly disorganized, primarily composed of type III collagen, and subsequently undergo remodeling during the final phase of healing, resulting in replacement with type I collagen, decreased cellularity and vascularity, and improved structure and strength. However, as with other connective tissues, healed tendon does not have the same mechanical properties of uninjured tissue.

LIGAMENTS are most often injured in traumatic joint injuries, resulting in either partial or complete discontinuity. Ligament healing proceeds through the 3 phases of inflammation, proliferation, and remodeling. Ligament healing depends on the size of the initial injury and whether contact exists between torn segments. During the first phase, retraction of the disrupted segments of ligament leads to gap formation that is filled with clot, which is subsequently resorbed and replaced with cellular infiltrate. Of note, several intra-articular ligaments, such as the anterior cruciate ligament, have limited clot formation at the site of injury, due to circulating levels of plasmin within the synovial fluid, which may prematurely dissolve the fibrin clot. In the next phase, fibroblast proliferation increases production of collagen and extracellular matrix, bridging the torn ends of the ligament. Initially, this disorganized tissue is primarily composed of type III collagen. As healing proceeds into the remodeling phase, the healed tissue becomes more organized and collagen is arranged longitudinal to the multiple planes of force transmitted. Several changes persist after the conclusion of the healing cascade, including limited collagen crosslinking, increased cellularity, smaller collagen fibril size, increased vascularity, and abnormal innervation. Functionally, healed ligamentous tissue is less elastic than healthy tissue.

BONE healing also proceeds through the typical phases of inflammation, proliferation, and remodeling. The inflammatory phase of bone healing begins with bleeding from the periosteal vessels and clot formation at the site of fracture. Cytokines and growth factors are released and responsible for the migration and proliferation of chondroblasts and osteoblasts. The fracture gap is initially filled with granulation tissue and a primitive callus develops, providing some degree of stability at the fracture site. During proliferation, the formation of callus continues, with the differentiation of chondrogenic stem cells into chondrocytes, producing cartilage to initially form of a soft callus. Osteoblasts gradually replace the cartilage in the soft callus with immature woven bone via endochondral bone formation, further stabilizing the injured site and forming a hard callus. The hard callus is further reinforced during the remodeling phase, where irregular woven bone is converted into lamellar bone, along lines of force, restoring strength and stability to the repaired bone.

THE MUSCULAR TISSUE has a capacity to regenerate and the healing process consists of regeneration of muscle fibres and formation of a connective tissue scar. Repair of muscle tissue proceeds through the phases of inflammation, proliferation, and remodeling. When muscle tissue is injured, myofibers rupture along with local capillaries, a flux of calcium is released, and clot formation begins. Inflammatory cells migrate to the injured site, leading to phagocytosis of damaged tissues, and activation of fibroblast and satellite cells, which are myogenic stem cells. During the proliferative phase, satellite cells differentiate into myoblasts, fusing with the injured myofibers. In the remodeling phase, the new myofibers grow and differentiate into fully mature muscle fibers. The healing is also greatly dependent on the ingrowth of vascularity and regeneration of intramuscular nerve branches.

As we drew your attention in previous annotations, here too, with the three phases of the “wound-healing cascade”, try to understand beyond the descriptive text and try to get an idea about: (1) the logic that is found in the autonomous “wound-healing process”; (2) the in-depth reflection and the scope of the “INTELLECTUAL” work that was deployed to design and establish the autonomous “wound-healing process”; (3) “THE SCIENCE” which is found in this autonomous “wound-healing process” and the origin of that “SCIENCE”.

 Short description of the three phases of the “wound-healing cascade”

Zoom out *****

BETA-AMINOISOBUTYRIC ACID (C₄H₉NO₂), is an amino acid end product of the pyrimidine metabolism and it is produced in skeletal muscle during physical exercise. It is excreted in small quantities into the urine. Beta-aminoisobutyric acid has beneficial effects on obesity-related metabolic disorders such as diabetes and non-alcoholic fatty liver disease.

CARNOSINE (C₉H₁₄N₄O₃), is a dipeptide of striated muscles and which is formed from β-alanine and L-histidine. It is an activator of muscle enzymes. Highly concentrated in the brain, heart, liver, kidneys, muscle, and gastrointestinal tissues, carnosine is a natural antioxidant and anti-glycation molecule whose levels decline with the age of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Reactive oxygen components and αβ-unsaturated aldehydes, formed from fatty acids of the cell membrane during oxidative stress, are neutralized by carnosine. In the fibroblasts, carnosine is able: (1) to increase the number of times at which a normal cells population divides before entering the senescence phase, the phase at which cells cease to divide and undergo distinctive phenotypic alterations, including profound chromatin and secretome changes, and tumour-suppressor activation; and (2) to reduce the rate at which telomeres become shorter.

A telomere is a region of repetitive DNA sequences at the end of a chromosome. Telomeres protect the ends of chromosomes from becoming frayed or tangled. Each time a cell divides, the telomeres become slightly shorter. Eventually, they become so short that the cell can no longer divide successfully, and the cell life span expires. Telomeres consist of a repeated sequence of the same sequence of six nucleotides, namely the sequence 5'-TTAGGG-3' in which T, A, and G are the bases thymine, adenine, and guanine, respectively. Some cells contain as many as 1500 to 2000 repeats of this sequence at each end of each chromosome. The number of repeats determines the maximum life span of a cell: each time a cell undergoes replication, multiple TTAGGG segments are lost. Once telomeres have been reduced to a certain size, the cell reaches a crisis point and is prevented from dividing further. As a consequence, the cell life span expires. Thus, the processes of cell aging and cell death, hence the processes of aging of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, are regulated in part by telomeres. A reduction of the rate at which telomeres become shorter reduces the aging of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Some cells have the ability to reverse telomere shortening by expressing telomerase, an enzyme that extends the telomeres of chromosomes. Telomerase is an RNA-dependent DNA polymerase, meaning an enzyme that can make DNA using RNA as a template.

In addition to these effects of slowing down aging in the fibroblasts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, carnosine also acts to prevent the covalent attachment of a sugar to a protein or lipid.⁷²⁵

Due to these properties, carnosine offers many benefits to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”: it supports cognitive function and mental acuity, decreases occasional anxiety, supports memory, delays mental fatigue. It supports muscle function by providing pH buffering capacity and antioxidant properties to build better muscle which is vital to supporting a healthy frame, aiding in balance, and maintaining strength for everyday activities and overall quality of life. It supports heart health by facilitating the regulation of muscle contractions and prevent lipid oxidation in the bloodstream. It also supports healthy circulation and healthy blood pressure levels. Carnosine contributes to overall systemic protection, as an antioxidant. Through its anti-glycation action, carnosine benefits bone and joint health. It can also stimulate bone growth, which contributes to overall skeletal integrity.

The rate of carnosine, however, experiences a significant decrease over time, up to less than 63% of its amount from the age of 10, to the age of 70. This reduction is one of the main causes of sagging as well as muscle loss.

GLUTAMINE (C₅H₁₀N₂O₃), which is the most abundant amino acid in the blood and in the muscles and constitutes an important source of energy for many tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Glutamine is derived from the amino acids histidine and glutamic acid. It plays a role in protein synthesis, immune protection, maintaining the integrity of the intestinal wall and the acid-base balance of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is also used in the manufacture of endogenous glucosamine which, in turn, participates in the repair of cartilage and tendons. The health benefits of glutamine include: improving gastrointestinal and immune health by supporting gut function and digestive processes; as the major fuel source for cells of the small intestine, it supports intestinal health and help treat leaky gut; it supports brain health, being a precursor to the neurotransmitter glutamate in the brain; promotes muscle growth and decreases “muscle wasting”⁷²⁶ (thinning); improves physical performance and recovery from exercise; supports metabolic and heart health.

GLUTATHIONE (C₁₀H₁₇N₃O₆S), as you would know already, glutathione is produced by the liver and is an integral part of the biotransformation of xenobiotic substances. It serves to facilitate the protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from reducing agents. Glutathione conjugation, which is facilitated by a family of glutathione transferase enzymes, will facilitate the detoxification by binding electrophiles that could otherwise bind to proteins or nucleic acids, resulting in cellular damage and genetic mutations.

In addition to being an important intracellular antioxidant, glutathione will also play a part in the: metabolism of toxins and cancer-causing substances; natural creation and repair of DNA; production of protein and prostaglandin; activation of enzymes. Glutathione is also important as a cofactor for the enzyme glutathione peroxidase, in the uptake of amino acids, and in the synthesis of leukotrienes. As a substrate for glutathione S-transferase, this agent will react with a number of harmful chemical species, such as halides, epoxides and free radicals, to form harmless inactive products. In erythrocytes, these reactions will prevent oxidative damage through the reduction of methemoglobin and peroxides. Glutathione will also be involved in the formation and maintenance of disulfide bonds in proteins and in the transport of amino acids across cell membranes. It will also help with the breakdown of nutrients, and the regulation of many biological processes (including the immune response against viral pathogens).⁷²⁷

⁷²⁶ Muscle wasting is a weakening, shrinking, and loss of muscle mass. It can be caused by immobility, aging, malnutrition, certain systemic diseases (cancer, congestive heart failure; chronic obstructive pulmonary disease; AIDS, liver disease, etc.), deinnervation, intrinsic muscle disease or medications (such as glucocorticoids), or a wide range of injuries or diseases that impact the musculoskeletal or nervous system, and as a result of an imbalance between protein synthesis and protein degradation. Muscle wasting decreases strength and the ability to move.

Glutathione plays an important role in a multitude of cellular processes, including cell differentiation, proliferation, and apoptosis⁷²⁸. As a result, disturbances in glutathione homeostasis will be implicated in the etiology and/or progression of a number of diseases, which will affect the proper functioning of this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment". Glutathione deficiency will manifest itself largely through an increased susceptibility to oxidative stress. In addition, imbalances in glutathione levels will affect the immune system function. Just as low intracellular glutathione levels will decrease cellular antioxidant capacity, elevated glutathione levels generally will increase antioxidant capacity and resistance to oxidative stress. It is thus that, maintaining proper glutathione levels and oxidation state are important for a number of critical cell functions, and disruptions in these processes will lead to many diseases, which will take place inside this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment". Some of these diseases include: neurodegenerative diseases, age-related pathologies, cancer, cardiovascular diseases, pulmonary diseases such as emphysema and asthma and to more acute lung diseases such as acute respiratory distress syndrome, cystic fibrosis, inflammatory and immune system diseases, hyperglycemia and diabetes, etc...

⁷²⁸ Apoptosis describes the orchestrated collapse of a cell characterised by membrane blebbing, cell shrinkage, condensation of chromatin, and fragmentation of DNA followed by rapid engulfment of the disintegrated cell by neighbouring cells in an orderly fashion. It is a mechanism that allows cells to self-destruct when stimulated by the appropriate trigger. As a morphologically distinct form of programmed cell death, apoptosis is different from the other major process of cell death known as necrosis, which is a form of cell injury which results in the premature death of cells in living tissue by the destruction of cells or tissues by their own enzymes, especially those released by lysosomes. Apoptosis involves condensation of the nucleus and cytoplasm, followed by cellular partitioning into well-defined fragments for disposal. Apoptosis occurs on a cell-by-cell basis. For each affected cell, two primary phases are observed: one of initiation and a second of execution. The resulting cell remnants are processed for reuse. Both phases are complex and require exquisite organization of multiple cellular systems, including interactions between proteins and cellular membranes.

METHIONINE (C₅H₁₁NO₂S), is one of nine essential amino acids provided by food to this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁷²⁹ As the precursor of other amino acids such as cysteine and taurine, versatile compounds such as S-Adenosyl methionine (SAM), which is made from adenosine triphosphate (ATP) and methionine by methionine adenosyltransferase, and the important antioxidant glutathione, methionine plays a critical role in the metabolism and health of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Methionine is required for growth and tissue repair. As a sulphur-containing amino acid, methionine has a variety of functions, including the protection of tissues and maintaining proper functioning of cells, improving the tone and pliability of skin, hair, and strengthens nails. As an anti-oxydant, it is involved in many detoxifying processes. The sulphur provided by methionine protects cells from pollutants, slows cell aging, and is essential for absorption and bio-availability of selenium and zinc. Methionine chelates heavy metals, such as lead and mercury, aiding their excretion. It also acts as a lipotropic agent (one that facilitates the breakdown of fats) and prevents excess fat buildup in the liver. It facilitates the lowering cholesterol levels by increasing lecithin production in the liver.

Methionine is used to prevent liver damage in acetaminophen (Tylenol) poisoning. It is also used for increasing the acidity of urine, treating liver disorders, and improving wound healing. Other uses include treating depression, alcoholism, allergies, asthma, copper poisoning, radiation side effects, schizophrenia, drug withdrawal, colon cancer, and Parkinson’s disease.

⁷²⁹ The highest amounts of natural methionine are found in egg whites. Nuts, seeds and legumes are common foods containing methionine. Seaweed has the highest amount of all vegetables, although more common foods with methionine include turnip greens, spinach, zucchini, mushrooms and asparagus, kidney beans, white beans and black beans. Less commonly used vegetables include pumpkin leaves, bamboo shoots and taro leaves. Some vegetables have higher methionine levels when they are eaten raw, while others increase in value by being cooked. Several green leafy vegetables, some more common than others, are high in the essential amino acid.

Nuts, seeds rich in methionine include: Seaweed (dried), Brazil nut, Vital wheat gluten, Hemp seeds, Chia seeds, Sesame seeds, Sunflower seeds, Pumpkin seeds, Flaxseed, Pistachio nuts, Peanuts, Oats, Cashew, Pine nuts, Walnut, Hazelnut, Pecans, Almonds, Rye grain, Buckwheat groats, Soybeans, Black beans, Kidney beans, Chickpeas, Navy beans, Quinoa.

Cheese products such as cottage cheese, cream cheese, cheddar and Parmesan also are high in methionine.

Methionine also plays an important role in the angiogenesis, the growth of new blood vessels.

URIDINE (C₉H₁₂N₂O₆), is a glycosylated pyrimidine analog containing uracil attached to a ribose ring (or more specifically, a ribofuranose) via a β-N1-glycosidic bond. The analog is one of the five standard nucleosides which make up nucleic acids, the others being adenosine, thymidine, cytidine and guanosine. The liver creates uridine in the form of uridine monophosphate (UMP) and secretes it into the bloodstream. Uridine is present at high levels in the plasma and cerebrospinal fluid, where it contributes to the maintenance of basic cellular functions affected by UPase enzyme activity, feeding habits, and ATP depletion. Uridine is a necessary pyrimidine nucleotide for RNA synthesis.

Uridine contributes to systemic metabolism and it is related to the homeostasis of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, regulating glucose homeostasis, lipid metabolism, amino acid metabolism, and other life processes.

Uridine has multi-targeted effects because it can be converted rapidly into other biologically active molecules. It is salvaged into pyrimidine nucleotides necessary for RNA and DNA synthesis. Via cytidine triphosphate, uridine promotes membrane phospholipid biosynthesis. Via uridine triphosphate, uridine promotes the formation of uridine diphosphate glucose (UDPG) and uridine diphosphate N-acetylglucosamine (UDP-GlcNAc), which are substrates for glycogen biosynthesis and protein O-linked glycosylation, respectively. Uridine catabolism produces acetyl-CoA, a substrate for protein lysine acetylation. Uridine also serves to generate pyrimidine-lipid and pyrimidine-sugar conjugates required for glycogen deposition, protein and lipid glycosylation, extracellular matrix biosynthesis, and detoxification of xenobiotics.

Uridine improves brain function, relieves depression and nerve pain, and facilitates the protection of the heart.

ANTINEOPLASTONS, are peptide and amino acid derivatives that occur naturally in the blood of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and consequently they are also found in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. They inhibit the growth of abnormal of cells, also known as tumors, but they do not inhibit the growth of normal cells. Antineoplastons are used for the treatment of various cancers, brain cancer, breast cancer, colorectal cancer, liver cancer, lung cancer, encephalitis, hypercholesterolemia, hypertriglyceridemia, HIV/AIDS, Parkinson disease, sickle cell anemia, thalassemia, high cholesterol, brain swelling due to infection (encephalitis), and other conditions.

URINARY ALLANTOIN ($C_4H_6N_4O_3$), which is the partial oxidative products of uric acid, is excreted in small quantities by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Allantoin has soothing, moisturizing and healing properties. It moisturizes the skin to prevent dryness and irritation, and it helps in shedding dead skin cells.⁷³⁰ As a keratolytic⁷³¹ agent, it makes it possible to soften and separate the horny (hard) layer of the skin. It keeps the skin smooth as it facilitates the exfoliation of dead skin cells and manage conditions where the epidermis produces excess skin cells (such as lesions and warts). Allantoin also has a calming effect on the skin. It is known for soothing injured skin and healing wounds and scars faster and it is often used for skin irritation and rashes. It stimulates the fibroblasts (cells that produce collagen) and boosts extracellular matrix synthesis. This helps re-establish normal skin on the wound site, making it less visible. Allantoin prevents transepidermal water loss and facilitates the retention of water in the skin cells; making the skin plumper and softer. Allantoin also facilitates the synthesis of collagen, a fibrous protein that holds the skin cells together.

URINARY CHLORIDES, which are the major electrolytes, which works with other electrolytes such as potassium, sodium, and which the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” need in relatively larger amounts to stay healthy.

Chloride is involved in many “specific functions” inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Similar to sodium and potassium, chloride creates specific channels in the cells membranes, which help to carry different vital “specific tasks”. It interacts with sodium and potassium to facilitate the regulation of the volume of water in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to support the function of the muscles and nerve cells. For example, chloride channels are key in controlling the amount of water and the type of compounds and nutrients that go in and out of cells. Overall, they play an important role in keeping the balance of the fluids in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, thus, facilitate the regulation of blood pressure as well as the pH.

⁷³⁰ Because of its soothing, moisturizing and healing properties, allantoin is used as a key ingredient in most skin care products, to treat or prevent dry, rough, scaly, itchy skin and skin irritations. It can be found naturally in the roots and leaves of plants like chamomile, wheat sprouts, sugar beet and comfrey.

⁷³¹ Keratolytics are compounds that promotes the softening and peeling of epidermis, by breaking down the outer layers of the skin and decreasing the thickness of psoriatic plaques. This class of compounds includes salicylic acid (2%–10%), urea (20%–40%), and alpha-hydroxy acids (glycolic and lactic acids).

Chloride is also important to help the muscles and heart contract and to help nerve cells carry messages (nerve impulses) between the brain and the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. More so, this mineral is needed to help red blood cells exchange oxygen and carbon dioxide in both the lungs (taking up oxygen and releasing carbon dioxide) and other parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (delivering oxygen and taking up carbon dioxide).

Lastly, chloride also plays a role in the digestion of foods, by supporting the production and release of hydrochloric acid (HCl) in the stomach, without which foods could not be properly digested and absorbed.

URINARY BICARBONATE. Bicarbonate, also designated as hydrogencarbonate, is the carbon oxoanion (HCO_3^-), which results from the removal of a proton from carbonic acid (H_2CO_3). It is used by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the transport of carbon dioxide (CO_2) to the lungs and in maintaining of the acid-base (pH) homeostasis of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Carbon dioxide (CO_2) is transported in blood in three forms: dissolved in plasma, as bicarbonate, and coupled to proteins in the form of carbamino compounds. On the venous side of systemic capillaries, carbon dioxide (CO_2) enters red blood cells where it combines with water (H_2O) to form carbonic acid (H_2CO_3). This reaction is catalyzed by the enzyme carbonic anhydrase which is found in red blood cells. Carbonic acid then dissociates (H_2CO_3) to form bicarbonate ions (HCO_3^-) and hydrogen ions H^+ . This reaction also occurs outside the red blood cells, in the plasma, but it is much slower due to lack of carbonic anhydrase.

In the pulmonary capillaries, the reverse occurs: bicarbonate ions enter the red blood cell and combine with hydrogen ions H^+ to form carbonic acid (H_2CO_3), which is broken down into CO_2 and H_2O , with CO_2 diffusing out into alveoli.

URINARY PHOSPHATES, which consist of sodium and potassium phosphates as well as calcium and magnesium phosphates. The greater part of the excreted phosphates is derived from ingested food which contains organic phosphates, e.g., nucleoprotein, phosphoprotein and phospholipids. Phosphates of food are not completely absorbed. Some phosphate is also derived from cellular breakdown.

Phosphates are responsible for several functions in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Their role in different parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” include:

- Bone mineralization: This process begins in the matrix vesicle, which are extracellular structures derived from the cell membrane of the osteoblast and chondrocytes.
- Endochondral Ossification: Phosphate is responsible for endochondral ossification of the bone as increased intracellular phosphate levels induce apoptosis of the terminally differentiated chondrocytes.
- Teeth: Phosphate is important for mineralization of all the structural components of the teeth i.e., it is an integral component of enamel, dentin, cementum, and alveolar bone.
- Cellular functions: In the cells, phosphate is an important component of the lipid bilayer of cell membranes, DNA, RNA, and proteins. It is responsible for several enzymatic reactions within the cells, e.g., glycolysis and ammoniogenesis. It modifies the actions of different molecules by getting attached or detached from them in response to kinases and phosphates. It also carries out oxidative phosphorylation, which is the reaction that converts adenosine diphosphate to adenosine triphosphate, the energy currency of the cell.
- Phosphate has a role in the oxygen-carrying capacity of hemoglobin by regulating the synthesis of 2,3-bisphosphoglycerate.
- Urinary Buffer: Inorganic phosphate (HPO_4^{2-}) is an important urinary buffer, as it can reversibly bind with free hydrogen ions, and its pKa (the acid dissociation constant)⁷³², which is 6.8, is also very close to plasma pH. Also, the concentration of phosphate increases as the fluid is resorbed within the tubule, thus making it an excellent buffer.

URINARY SALTS. Urine contains all valuable salts associated to its organic acids and which are necessary for the proper functioning of cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The well-known and widely prevalent “Biochemic” therapeutic system uses just twelve of those salts to cure any and every disease. These 12 individual cell salts, each of which is a natural remedy geared toward ⁷³² The pKa, acid dissociation constant, is the pH value at which a chemical species will accept or donate a proton. The lower the pH, the higher the concentration of hydrogen ions $[\text{H}^+]$. The lower the pKa, the stronger the acid and the greater the ability to donate a proton in aqueous solution.

healing specific emotional and physical symptoms and ailments, and is present in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, are:

CALCIUM FLUORIDE, which is present in the surface of the bones, in the enamel of the teeth and in the elastic fibres of the skin and blood vessels. It contributes to restoring elasticity in the tissues, organs, ligaments and tendons, walls of blood vessels, muscular and connective tissue, surface of bones and tooth enamel. It is used for the treatment of relaxed organs conditions, sluggish circulation, varicose veins, cracks in skin, cracked and calloused heels and muscular weakness.

CALCIUM PHOSPHATE, which is the calcium salt of phosphoric acid. Calcium phosphate is mainly used as an antioxidant, but it can also be used as an acidity regulator, anti-caking agent, emulsifier, firming agent, leavening agent, sequestering agent, stabilizer or thickener. It is used to treat calcium deficiencies that may be associated with low blood calcium, a parathyroid disorder, or osteoporosis and other bone, teeth and muscle conditions. It is used for the treatment of allergies, allergenic bronchitis, emphysema, infectious bronchitis, nasal polyps, albuminous nasal discharges, enlarge tonsil, glandular pains and also catarrh that is combined with a fever and a thick discharge.

CALCIUM SULPHATE, which is the blood purifier (cleanser) salt; the suppuration remover and the cell healer. It facilitates the formation of new skin. It cleans out the accumulation of impurities in the blood, cells and tissues; hence its importance for the treatment of any “DISEASE” that arises from impurity of the blood, and is it important in the “COMBAT” against new infections. Calcium Sulphate facilitates the renewal of tissues, speeds up healing of wounds and skin conditions. It cleans the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of decaying matter and it has a potent detoxifying effect that greatly benefits the liver, by facilitating the removal of impurities from the blood stream. It is also used for the treatment of skin eruption, during the last stages of suppuration and when there is any inflammation or infection. It is used for the treatment of any inflammation of mucous membranes and excess mucous in nasal passages and in conditions such as: bronchitis, catarrh, coughs with expectoration, and fever and suppuration of the throat.

PHOSPHATE OF IRON, which is the first aid salt. It gives strength to arteries, blood vessels and the skin. It is a constituent of haemoglobin. It has the ability to carry oxygen to all cells of the subjective garment for use in the conversion to energy, and is regarded as such as the “Oxygen Carrier” to oxygenate the blood and the cells. It is used to reduce the first stages of any inflammation, redness, swelling and fever; cough and cold symptoms, respiratory conditions, congestion, toothaches, anaemia, sore throats and rheumatic pain. Iron assists in maintaining normal resistance of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to disease and, strengthens immune system. Phosphate of iron is indicated whenever disturbed circulation is the cause of the ailment with demonstrating symptoms of heat (fever), pain, redness (flushed face), and throbbing (quick pulse) and to relief of the symptoms caused during chemotherapy. Intake of phosphate of iron is indicated during the first stage of acute diseases, febrile disturbances, inflammatory and congestive diseases such as common cold, bronchitis, respiratory infection, laryngitis, pharyngitis, pneumonia, tonsillitis, diphtheria, Whooping Cough (Pertussis), Herpes Zoster, acute rheumatism. It is an excellent remedy in disorders of iron metabolism, anemia, bruises, blood loss, nosebleed, bleeding gums and Periodontal disease. It is effectively used in other infectious and inflammatory conditions like, nephritis, cystitis, incontinence of urine, apoplexy, and gastritis.

POTASSIUM CHLORIDE, which is the potassium salt of hydrochloric acid. It an essential electrolyte for maintaining tone, that is to say, the shape of cells, the transmission of nerve impulses, muscle contraction, protein synthesis and the proper functioning of the kidneys. It is used to toxins in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, relieve congestion and treat respiratory problems.

POTASSIUM PHOSPHATE, which is found in the tissues and fluids of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, notably of the brain and nerve cells and is the principal tissue salt for the nervous system. It is vital for regeneration of nerve tissue and forms “Grey matter”. Potassium phosphate is used as a natural tranquiliser and is reputable in the treatment of psychological problems, irritability, memory loss, dementia, sudden brain fog and rapid decomposition of the blood.

POTASSIUM SULPHATE, which, like ferrum phosphate, is another “Oxygen Carrier” to oxygenate the blood and cells. It promotes the health of the lungs, is useful in asthma and bronchitis and skin health. Also designated as the “Anti-friction” and the “Cellular Building Block”, potassium sulphate acts like a lubricant and helps to create new cells to replace those damaged by “DISEASE”. Its deficiency causes oil in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to thicken and clog the pores of the skin. Such oil is often expelled, also, as a yellowish sticky discharge from any part of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (the nose, vagina etc) or from a cancer, swollen gland or abscess, including boils. Potassium sulphate promotes healthy skin, pancreas and metabolism.

MAGNESIUM PHOSPHATE, which is a general term for salts of magnesium and phosphate appearing in several forms and several hydrates. It is produced by the process of partial neutralization of phosphoric acid with magnesium oxide. It is the anti-spasmodic tissue salt. It is used for the relief of: nerve pains such as neuralgia, neuritis, sciatica and headaches; all cramps and spasms in all their forms; and spasmodic palpitations.

SODIUM CHLORIDE, which, commonly known as salt (although sea salt also contains other chemical salts), is an ionic compound with the chemical formula NaCl, representing a 1:1 ratio of sodium and chloride ions. When depleted in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, sodium must be replaced in order to maintain intracellular osmolarity, nerve conduction, muscle contraction and normal renal function. The main functions of sodium chloride in the body are: to maintain blood pressure, to maintain fluid balance, to facilitate the transmission of nerve signals, to facilitate contraction and relaxation of muscles.

SODIUM PHOSPHATE, which is a generic term that may refer to any sodium salt of phosphoric acid. It is the biochemic antacid of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is found everywhere in the blood, nerves, eyes, muscles, blood, brain, lungs and lymphths, etc..., and is used to decompose acids, to prevent the crystallisation of fats, to regulate bile, and to balance pH. A deficiency of sodium phosphate salt predisposes to allowing uric acid to form salts that deposit around joints and tissues, giving rise to stiffness, pain and swelling, rheumatic and arthritic conditions.

SODIUM SULPHATE, which is the sodium salt of sulfuric acid. It acts as cleanser and purifier of toxins from the intercellular fluid surrounding every cell of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, especially from pancreas, liver, bile, intestines and descending colon for their healthy functioning. It facilitates the overall balance of water content in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It helps remove excess water from the cells and the connective tissues and improves and control the liver function. It regulates the density of intercellular fluid and helps the liver and blood eliminate toxins. It eliminates excess water and bile, to prevent diarrhoea. It is used for the treatment of all liver conditions and it is also used for toothaches and various conditions of the mouth and tongue.

SILICA OXIDE, which is a major constituent of blood, skin, hair, hooves, bones, nerve sheaths and some connective tissues. It acts as an insulator for the nerves; influences the bones, joints, glands, skin and mucous membranes. Silica oxide is the cleaning and conditioning salt. For blood conditioning, hair conditioning, it is the cleaner and eliminator of pus formation conditions like boils, styles, abscesses; it breaks calcium deposits and spurs, sinus related problems, improve skin and coat condition, brittle hooves, skin disorders and sore throat.

These salts are used to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, by facilitating the cleansing, detoxification, and repair of its cells and tissues. With regular use they help prevent “DISEASES” from occurring and maintain overall health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

URINARY OXALATES, which is formed when oxalic acid mixes with other minerals, is a naturally-occurring compound in plants. The amount of oxalate in the urine is low (20 mg/day) and found as calcium oxalate crystals in urinary deposits. The excretion of oxalate is increased by ingestion of fruits and vegetables containing high oxalates (spinach).

URINARY MINERALS, which include the 4 cations of the extracellular fluid — sodium, potassium, calcium and magnesium — are present in the urine. Sodium content varies with intake. Urine potassium increases when the intake is increased or in excessive tissue catabolism. The excretion of potassium is affected by alkalosis. Sodium and potassium excretion are also controlled by the activity of the adrenal cortex. Calcium and magnesium are not completely absorbed and their presence in the urine is low. But their presence in the urine varies in certain pathological states, particularly those involving bone metabolism.

URINARY ENZYMES, which are found in traces amount of many enzymes and are excreted in urine. Among these many enzymes, there are urokinase, pancreatic amylase, pepsin, trypsin, lipase, lactate dehydrogenase, alkaline phosphatase.

UROKINASE (C1376H2145N383O406S18), is an enzyme that is made in the kidney and found in the urine. It is also present in the blood and in the extracellular matrix of many tissues. It cleaves peptide bonds in proteins and catalyzes the conversion of plasminogen⁷³³ to plasmin, thus stimulating ⁷³³ Plasminogen is a glycoprotein (molecular weight 92 kDa) synthesized in the liver, and it circulates in the blood. Plasminogen is the precursor of plasmin, which lyses fibrin clots to fibrin degradation products and D-dimer; the conversion to active protease is mediated by tissue-type and urokinase-type plasminogen activators.

D-dimer (or D dimer) is a fibrin degradation product (or FDP), a small protein fragment present in the blood after a blood clot is degraded by fibrinolysis. It is so named because it contains two D fragments of the fibrin protein joined by a cross-link, hence forming a fibrinolysis and degradation of major basement membrane glycoproteins such as fibronectin and laminin. Plasminogen and fibrinogen coexist in the blood, and when fibrin — an insoluble and large, flexible protein composed of six proteins chains formed from fibrinogen during the clotting of blood — is formed through blood coagulation, plasminogen is incorporated into the fibrin clot.⁷³⁴ Urokinase acts to convert this plasminogen into plasmin and thereby to dissolve the thrombus in the blood vessels, and thus to restore the blood flow to the affected tissue. The plasmin thus generated within the fibrin clot is not affected by antiplasmins. Urokinase, which is secreted in the urine, is used in medicine for the treatment of myocardial infarction, stroke or pulmonary embolism. This blood thinner, which you get for FREE in your urine, is now synthesized in the laboratory and is a commercialized emergency drug. In more serious cases, when the clots are large, numerous or clog a major vessel in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wears, then you have to move up a gear: use your own urine!

AMYLASE (C₉H₁₄N₄O₃), is any member of a class of enzymes that catalyze the hydrolysis (splitting of a compound by addition of a water molecule) of starch into smaller carbohydrate molecules such as maltose (a molecule composed of two protein dimer. D-dimer concentration may be determined by a blood test to help diagnose thrombosis.

⁷³⁴ When the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear is injured, it bleeds, but the bleeding rapidly stops. As part of the “COMBAT” — the process of “HEALING” in order to annihilate any cause of cell malfunction —, blood has been endowed with a built-in emergency repair system that quickly blocks any damage to the circulatory system, creating a temporary patch that allows time for more permanent repairs. Three basic mechanisms are at work. First, platelets (small fragments of blood cells that circulate in the blood) clump at the site of the wound, forming a weak plug. Second, neighboring blood vessels constrict, reducing the amount of blood flowing into the area. Finally, the protein fibrin assembles into a tough network that clots the blood and forms an insoluble blockage. Together, these methods stop the loss of blood and create a sturdy scab to protect the area as the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” heals.

Fibrin is normally present and standing guard in an inactive form known as fibrinogen. Fibrinogen is soluble in water and is found in high concentrations in the blood, where it waits until needed to form a clot. When it receives the call to “COMBAT”, fibrinogen is converted to fibrin, which then assembles into an extended network of fibers. This changes normally-fluid blood into a jelly-like solid, which then dries to form a scab. Of course, it is very important to assemble fibrin networks only in the local area of the injury, and nowhere else, since the blood must continue flowing to other parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The fine-tuned control of blood clotting is controlled by a cascade of specialized proteins.

glucose molecules). Three categories of amylases, denoted alpha, beta, and gamma, differ in the way they attack the bonds of the starch molecules. The many benefits of this enzyme include its ability to improve digestion and prevent signs of premature aging, among others.

PEPSIN (C₆H₆CL₆), is an endopeptidase — proteolytic peptidases that break peptide bonds of nonterminal amino acids (i.e. within the molecule), in contrast to exopeptidases, which break peptide bonds from end-pieces of terminal amino acids — that breaks down proteins into smaller peptides. It is produced in the gastric chief cells of the stomach lining and is one of the main digestive enzymes in the digestive system, where it helps digest the proteins in food.

TRYPSIN (C₃₅H₄₇N₇O₁₀), is a digestive enzyme that breaks down protein in the gut. An enzyme is a catalyst protein that increases the speed of a chemical reaction by lowering the activation energy. Activation energy is the energy required for a reaction to begin. Trypsin is secreted by the pancreas in its inactive form and then is activated once it migrates to the small intestine. It belongs to a family of enzymes called serine proteases. These proteases are enzymes that break down proteins and contain the amino acid serine at its active site. An active site is the specific region of a molecule where a reaction occurs. Proteins are made up of amino acids linked together by peptide bonds. Trypsin cleaves peptide bonds to turn one large protein into smaller pieces. Even though trypsin belongs to the serine protease family, it is also called a proteolytic enzyme, or an enzyme that breaks peptide bonds. When the enzyme trypsin is directed to neoplastic (tumor) cells as part of the “COMBAT”, it digests the protective thin protein coating that protects the content of those cells and exposes them to the defense mechanisms that have been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The result of such exposure is the destruction of neoplastic (tumor) cells.

ADENYLYL CYCLASE (C₂₀₃H₃₃₁N₆₃O₅₃S), is the enzyme that synthesizes cyclic adenosine monophosphate or cyclic AMP from adenosine triphosphate (ATP). It is the sole enzyme to synthesize cyclic AMP (cAMP), a key second messenger that regulates diverse physiological responses including sugar and lipid metabolism, olfaction, and cell growth and differentiation.

Adenylyl cyclase is a also signal amplifier. It acts at the center of the signaling cascade that transduces binding of hormones into cellular responses. When hormones such as adrenaline or glucagon bind to G-protein coupled receptors, they activate G-proteins, which in turn activate adenylyl cyclase. Adenylyl cyclase then performs its catalytic reaction, clipping off two phosphates from ATP and forming an additional bond to the remaining phosphate. The resultant molecule, cyclic AMP or cAMP, is released and travels quickly throughout the cell, regulating the function of multiple proteins. In this role, cAMP is often called a “second messenger”, delivering the original message of the hormone. As an added benefit, the signal is amplified in the process, because adenylyl cyclase is an enzyme that can create many molecules of cAMP when activated.

Signaling by cAMP plays critical roles throughout this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, balancing the breakdown or formation of sugar for energy and controlling diverse processes in cell growth, development, learning, and memory. To regulate these many processes, cells have ten different subtypes of adenylyl cyclase. Nine of these have a similar form, with a membrane-spanning portion and a catalytic domain on the cytoplasmic side of the membrane.

SODIUM-POTASSIUM-ATPASE, $\text{Na}^+, \text{K}^+, \text{-ATPase}$, is an electrogenic transmembrane ATPase enzyme found on the cytosolic side in the outer plasma membrane of the cells. It is responsible for establishing Na^+ and K^+ concentration gradients across the plasma membrane and maintaining osmotic equilibrium and membrane potential in cells. It uses metabolic energy of ATP hydrolysis to transport (pump) sodium (Na^+) outward and potassium (K^+) inward the plasma membrane of the cells. It distributes ions between the intracellular and extracellular space and is responsible for total sodium homeostasis in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The activity of the $\text{Na}^+, \text{K}^+, \text{-ATPase}$ ion pump is regulated by catecholamines and peptide hormones; by the ligand of $\text{Na}^+, \text{K}^+, \text{-ATPase}$, ouabain; and by direct interaction with cytoskeleton proteins.

The $\text{Na}^+, \text{K}^+, \text{-ATPase}$ enzyme maintains the gradient of a higher concentration of sodium extracellularly and a higher level of potassium intracellularly. The sustained concentration gradient is crucial for physiological processes in many organs and has an ongoing role in stabilizing the resting membrane potential of the cell, regulating the cell volume, and cell signal transduction. It plays a crucial role on other physiological processes, such as to filter products in the nephrons (kidneys), reabsorb amino acids, reabsorb glucose, regulate electrolyte levels in the blood, to maintain pH, sperm motility, and production of the neuronal action potential.

β -GLUCOSIDASE, are enzymes responsible for the hydrolysis of β -glucosidic linkages in aryl-, amino-, or alkyl- β -D-glucosides, cyanogenic glucosides, and oligo- or disaccharides. They are produced by the cells of “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and are also excreted in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. In the enzymatic hydrolysis of cellulose, endoglucanases and cellobiohydrolases are responsible for degrading cellulose to cellobiose, after which β -glucosidases hydrolyze cellobiose to free glucose molecules. In the enzymatic metabolism of cyanogenic glucosides, β -glucosidases are responsible to hydrolyse cyanogenic glucosides into free hydrogen cyanide, benzaldehyde, or acetone and sugar. The released hydrogen cyanide (hydrocyanide) is (1) either detoxified in the bloodstream, or at somatic cells, by the very high concentration of the enzyme rhodanese to produce the relatively non-toxic thiocyanate⁷³⁵ molecule, which accounts largely for the thiocyanate that is found in blood, urine, saliva, etc., or (2) it binds to the oxygen-reducing cofactor of the cytochrome c into a non-toxic chemical compound in the bloodstream and to be transported to neoplastic cells at which point the undetoxified hydrocyanide is released. The rhodanese enzyme is a mitochondrial thiosulfate sulfurtransferase that belongs to a protein superfamily involved in diverse processes, including cyanide detoxification, Fe/S clusters formation, redox reactions as well as intracellular transport, and regulatory pathways. The sugar is normally metabolized. The released benzaldehyde in the presence of oxygen is (1) either immediately oxidized in the bloodstream, or at somatic cells, to benzoic acid which is non-toxic, or (2) the released benzaldehyde binds to an appropriate hemeprotein into a non-toxic chemical compound in the bloodstream and to be transported to neoplastic cells (tumor) at which point the unoxidized benzaldehyde is released. The cytotoxicity of hydrocyanide and benzaldehyde against neoplastic cells is well known. Indeed, neoplastic cells ferment, except possibly in a beneficial or physiological manner. Fermentative metabolism rather than respiratory metabolism plays a large role in cancer. This metabolism utilizes less oxygen (in the free state); therefore, oxidation of benzaldehyde occurs much more slowly. Unoxidized benzaldehyde lags, as it were, in the neoplastic cells. These cells are almost completely deficient in the very important rhodanese or thiosulfate transsulfurase enzyme possessed by somatic cells, and which converts hydrocyanide to the harmless thiocyanate. With the selective lag of both undetoxified hydrocyanide as well as unoxidized benzaldehyde in the neoplastic cells, and the multiplication of cytotoxicity that the combination affords, relative to the situation in normal somatic cells, the neoplastic cells suffer a lethal cytotoxicity while the hostal or somatic cells are totally unaffected.

⁷³⁵ Thiocyanate (also known as rhodanide) is the anion $[\text{SCN}]^-$. It is the conjugate base of thiocyanic acid. Common derivatives include the colourless salts potassium thiocyanate and sodium thiocyanate. Thiocyanate as well as its natural precursor, the hydrocyanic acid derived from dietary nitrilosides, supply the cyanide ion for the nitrilization of the precursor of vitamin B-12 (hydrocobalamin) to vitamin B-12 (cyanocobalamin).

It is thus that, the end result of the presence of β -glucosidase enzyme that causes the selective release of hydrocyanide in neoplastic (tumor) cells, plus an oxidative deficiency (fermentative metabolism) that causes a lag in benzaldehyde oxidation to benzoic acid, result in the selective persistence of free or undetoxified hydrocyanide plus free or unoxidized benzaldehyde, which synergistically exert their selective anti-neoplastic effect. This is why diets rich in amygdalin are used for the prevention and cure of hereditary, chronic metabolic deficiency “DISEASE” like cancer.

Amygdalin, with the chemical formula $C_{20}H_{27}NO_{11}$, and also designated as (6-O- β -D-glucopyranosyl- β -D-glucopyranosyl)oxyacetonitrile, is part of the nitrilosides family. It is a cyanogenic glycoside and its rigid sugar backbone is rich in directional hydroxyl groups. A nitriloside is a naturally occurring chemical compound which upon hydrolysis by a β -glucosidase yields a molecule of a non-sugar, or aglycone, a molecule of free hydrogen cyanide, and one or more molecules of a sugar or its acid. There are approximately 14 naturally occurring nitrilosides distributed in over 1200 species of plants, many of which are edible.⁷³⁶ Nitrilosides occurs in the kernels of seeds of practically all fruits, most notably in the seeds of non-citrus fruits, and the concentration of nitrilosides in plants varies widely and ranges from small traces to as much as 30 g/kg in some of the common pasture grasses (in the dry state).⁷³⁷ When someone eats less than the whole fruit, for example, by discarding the seed or kernel he experiences a specific and total deficiency not only in oils and proteins but in minerals and such substance as amygdalin which is found only in the seed, not in the flesh of the fruit. By discarding the seed or kernel, one experiences a specific and total deficiency in amygdalin so far as that fruit is concerned. The presence of amygdalin in the diet produces specific physiologic effects and leaves as metabolites, specific chemical compounds of a physiologically active nature. Those seeds are rich in protein, polyunsaturated fats, and other nutrients. They also contain as much as 2 per cent or more nitrilside.⁷³⁸ There are scores of other ⁷³⁸ Consider for example the papaya fruit. Papaya, the fruit of the papaya plant that is a caricaceae family, with the scientific designation of “Carica papaya”, is a succulent tropical fruit, having oval or pear shape, measuring between 10 and 20 cm and usually weighing between 0.5 and 1 kg, although it may even weigh up to 5kg. It is a berry of thin skin, of a green yellowish and orange colour. The pulp is of a red orange or yellow colour, sweet and very juicy. Inside the fruit there is a cavity containing the greyish black seeds.

The very juicy flesh is deep yellow or orange to salmon-coloured, slightly sweet, with an agreeable musky tang, which is more pronounced in some varieties and in some climates than in others. Along the walls of the large central cavity are attached the numerous round, wrinkled black seeds. The unripe fruit contains a milky juice in which is present a protein-digesting enzyme known as papain, whose action is similar to that of the enzyme pepsin. Papaya is commonly known for its nutritional and medicinal value worldwide.

100 grams of raw papaya flesh contains: Water (124 g) and Ash (0.9 g); Calories (163 kJ), Carbohydrate (150 kJ), Fat (5.0 kJ), Protein (8.4 kJ); Vitamin A (0.46 mg), Vitamin C (86.5 mg), Vitamin E (Alpha Tocopherol) (1.0 mg), Vitamin K (3.6 mcg), Niacin (0.5 mg), Folate

(53.2 mcg), Pantothenic Acid (0.3 mg), Choline (8.5 mg); Calcium (33.6 mg), Iron (0.1 mg), Magnesium (14.0 mg), Phosphorus (7.0 mg), Potassium (360 mg), Sodium (4.2 mg), Zinc (0.1 mg), Selenium (0.8 mcg).

When you slice open the buttery flesh of papaya, you are met with a hollowed-out center that runs along the length of the fruit. Inside this cavity are many black, round seeds that have a very shiny surface. These little seeds easily detach from the papaya's center, and are wet and slippery to the touch.

Papaya seeds contain 27.3%–28.3% protein, 28.2%–30.7% lipids, and 19.1%–22.6% crude fibers. They are rich in oil content (20.97–30.10%) that is enriched with essential fatty acids such as oleic acid (70.84–79.10%), palmitic acid (13.90–19.70%), stearic acid (4.20–6.68%), linoleic acid (0.04–6.06%), linolenic acid (0.17–0.90%), arachidic acid (0.38–1.10%), gadoleic acid (0.51%), palmitoleic (0.08–1.77%), myristic acid (0.04–0.49%), margoric acid (0.10–0.13%), and lauric acid (0.01–0.40%).

Papaya seeds are a good source of phytochemicals. They contain valuable phytochemicals such as: Amygdalin (Cyanogenic Glucoside, Vitamin B17; β -glucosidases are responsible to hydrolyse cyanogenic glucosides into free hydrogen cyanide, benzaldehyde, or acetone and sugar), Glucosinolate (is a sulfur-rich compound mainly found in the Brassicaceae and Caricaceae family such as Carica papaya; The hydrolysis of glucosinolates, which is catalyzed by a class of enzymes called myrosinases (β -thioglucosidases), leads to the formation of breakdown compounds, such as thiocyanates, isothiocyanates, indoles, oxazolidine-2-thiones (e.g., goitrin), epithionitrile, and nitrile. Isothiocyanates are antioxidants, anti-neoplastic (anti-tumor, anticarcinogenic) substances. Cruciferous vegetables, such as broccoli, cabbage, brussels sprouts, kohlrabi, and kale, are rich sources of glucosinolates, each cruciferous vegetable forms a different isothiocyanate when hydrolyzed.), Phenolics, p-Coumaric acid, Kaempferol-3-glucoside, p-Hydroxybenzoic acid, Quercetin-3-galactoside, Caffeic acid, Ferulic acid, Phytosterols, Campesterol, Stigmasterol, β -Sitosterol, Flavonoids, Alkaloids, Phytates, Steroids, Terpenoids, Oxalates, Glycosides, Strobosteroids, Carotenoids, Anthraquinones, Phlobatannins.

Many parts of papaya plant such as roots, leaves, peels, fruits, and seeds have nutritional and therapeutic significance, which make papaya plant a treasured medicinal plant with a full range of health benefits. Papaya flesh and seeds are used as a therapeutic remedy due to their fabulous curing abilities; this include: antioxidant, anti-neoplastic (anti tumor), gastroprotective, anti-sickling, anti-thrombocytopenic and immunomodulatory, antiparasitic, antimicrobial and antifungal, hypoglycemic and antidiabetic, hepato- and reno-protective, infertility and contraceptive properties.

Next time you slice open a papaya, be sure to enjoy both the delicious flesh and powerful seeds nestled inside to take advantage of the full range of health benefits this fruit has to offer. Consider saving the seeds, if you have too much, instead of discarding them.

Another fruit of great importance is mango. Mango, also known as the king of fruits is more than just a sweet fruit. It has various health benefits and not just the fruit, its seed, flower and the bark, all of them have numerous health benefits. The mango seed, also known as major foods naturally, or normally, very rich in nitriloxide. When the nitriloxide-rich seeds of fruit is ingested in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, during the metabolism, nitriloxide is hydrolyzed to free hydrocyanide, benzaldehyde, or acetone and sugar.

gutli or kernel, is generally thrown away or neglected; but this big-sized creamy-white seed in the centre of a mango possesses a dense supply of nutrients and antioxidants. The mango gutli is edible, but typically in unripe mangoes. Once the mango is ripened, the seed tends to get hardened, which can only be used in powdered form.

Mango fruit is an important source of macronutrients such as carbohydrates, lipid and fatty acids, protein and amino acids, and organic acids. Also, mango has micronutrients such as vitamins and minerals and, finally, non-nutrients compound such as phenolic compounds, flavonoids and other polyphenols, chlorophyll, carotenoids, and volatile compounds. The energy value for 100 g of the pulp ranges from 60 to 190 kcal (250–795 kJ), being an important fruit for the diet.

The mango seed contains 15.27 (IU) vitamin A; (1.30 mg/100 g) vitamin E; (0.59 mg/100 g) Vitamin K; (0.08 mg/100 g) Vitamin B1; (0.03 mg/100 g) Vitamin B2; (0.19 mg/100 g) Vitamin B6; (0.12 mg/100 g) Vitamin B12 and (0.56 mg/100 g) Vitamin C. The result of mineral analysis showed that mango seed contained sodium (21.0 mg/100 g), potassium (22.3 mg/100 g), calcium (111.3 mg/100 g), magnesium (94.8 mg/100 g), iron (11.9 mg/100 g), zinc, (1.1 mg/100 g) and copper (0.1 mg/100 g).

The prominent fatty acids found in the mango kernel are palmitic, stearic, oleic, linoleic, lignoceric, arachidic, linolenic, and behenic acids.

The seed of mango fruit contains various polyphenolics, especially mangifera, amygdalin (Cyanogenic Glucoside, Vitamin B17), glucosinolate, phenolic acid (gallic acid), flavonoids (quercetin), carotenoids, and ascorbic acid. Mangiferin (2-β-D-glucopyranosyl-1,3,6,7-tetrahydroxy-9H-xanthen-9-one) can be isolated from higher plants as well as the mango fruit and their byproducts (i.e. peel, seed, and kernel). It possesses several health endorsing properties such as antioxidant, antimicrobial, antidiabetic, antiallergic, anticancer, hypocholesterolemic, and immunomodulatory. It suppresses the activation of peroxisome proliferator activated receptor isoforms by changing the transcription process. Mangiferin protects against different cancers, including lung, colon, breast, and neuronal cancers, through the suppression of tumor necrosis factor α expression, inducible nitric oxide synthase potential, and proliferation and induction of apoptosis. It also protects against neural and breast cancers by suppressing the expression of matrix metalloproteinase (MMP)-9 and MMP-7 and inhibiting enzymatic activity, metastatic potential, and activation of the β-catenin pathway. It has the capacity to block lipid peroxidation, in order to provide a shielding effect against physiological threats. Additionally, mangiferin enhances the capacity of the monocyte-macrophage system and possesses antibacterial activity against gram-positive and gram-negative bacteria.

Upon hydrolysis in the intestinal tract, the nitriloside also exerts a variable antibiotic effect through the action of the freed hydrocyanide and, in the case of some nitrilosides such as amygdalin or dhuririn, through the antiseptic action of benzaldehyde or p-hydroxybenzaldehyde aglycone [non-sugar]. The latter from Sorghum halepense, before and after oxidation to a benzoic acid is about 30 times more antiseptic (in terms of the phenol coefficient) than ordinary benzaldehyde or benzoic acid.

Hydrocyanide and benzaldehyde are known to destroy trophoblasts⁷³⁹ and neoplastic cells in hereditary, chronic metabolic deficiency “DISEASE”. As you would know, there is no discernible differences between neoplastic (tumor) cells and pre-embryonic cells that are normal in the early stage of pregnancy and which are designated as trophoblasts. A trophoblast cell in pregnancy exhibits all the characteristics of neoplastic (tumor) cells. It spreads and multiplies rapidly as it eats its way into the wall of the uterus. A trophoblast is formed as a result of a differentiation, a chain reaction, which starts with a trophoblast stem cell. Whenever the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” undergoes a disruption (either by physical trauma, chemical action, or illness) to the normal anatomical structure and function of its cells, tissues and organs, it secretes the hormone estrogen at the location of the disruption and in great quantities, as a catalyst for the “COMBAT”. The hormone estrogen is well known for its ability to affect changes in living tissues and it performs many vital functions in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It accelerates the “COMBAT”, the “HEALING” process, which is associated with enhanced matrix deposition, rapid epithelialization, and a dampening of the inflammatory response, and which also uses stem cells. When a stem cell comes into contact with estrogen, it is triggered by an appropriate gene expression to produce trophoblast. When this happens to stem cells in the uterus and which have evolved from a zygote — a fertilized egg cell that results from the union of a female gamete (egg, or ovum) with a male gamete (sperm) —, the result is the formation of a placenta and the umbilical cord, from which the embryo will be nourished. But, when an inappropriate gene expression triggers a stem cell to produce trophoblast that subsequently comes into contact with estrogen, non sexually, and as part of the general “HEALING” process, if this contact goes unchecked, because the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” lacks the necessary ⁷³⁹ Trophoblasts are cells that helps a developing embryo attach to the wall of the uterus, protects the embryo, and forms a part of the placenta. They form the outer layer of a blastocyst. They are present four days post-fertilization in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

forces of “COMBAT” (for example, insufficient presence of certain proteolytic enzymes, like bromelain, chymotrypsin, ficin, papain⁷⁴⁰, serrapeptase, and trypsin) to stop it, then the result is the formation of neoplastic (tumor) cells.⁷⁴¹ When a neoplastic (tumor) cell begins to form, the “COMBAT” is triggered and an attempt is started to seal off the neoplastic (tumor) cell, by surrounding it with cells that are similar to those in the location where the neoplastic (tumor) cell has occurred. The result of this surrounding and sealing off is the formation of a bump or a lump, which is a mixture of trophoblasts and those surrounding cells. That mixture of trophoblasts and those surrounding cells, is surrounded by a protective thin protein coating that prevents the immediate destruction of that mixture of trophoblasts and those surrounding cells by the defense mechanisms that have been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The first line of defense of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to destroy such mixture of trophoblasts and surrounding cells is found in the pancreas, which secrete an enzyme designated as trypsin, which is also excreted in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. When the enzyme trypsin, in sufficient quantity, reaches the protective thin protein coating that protects the mixture of trophoblasts and surrounding cells, it digests that protective thin protein coating and exposes the trophoblasts and surrounding cells to the defense mechanisms that have been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which destroys the trophoblasts and those surrounding cells. This “specific process” also occurs in the uterus at the 8th week with the full destruction of trophoblasts, once the pancreas of the fetus has formed and started to function and produce trypsin, and the fetus is left untouched and alive in the amniotic fluid. The upper part of the intestine, for example, where the pancreas empties into it, is the only place in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, where neoplastic (tumor) cells never occur. This is due to abundance of the the enzyme trypsin at that location. When the rate of production of the enzyme trypsin is low with respect to the rate of neoplastic (tumor) cells growth, there are second lines of defense, which involve organic acids, antioxidants and anti-neoplastic (anti-tumor) compounds that will allow the defense mechanisms that have been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to destroy neoplastic (tumor) cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Among such antioxidants and anti-neoplastic (anti-tumor) are glutathione ($C_{10}H_{17}N_3O_6S$), hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2), and amygdalin ($C_{20}H_{27}NO_{11}$).

⁷⁴⁰ Papain is an enzyme found in the white fluid (latex) that occurs in raw papaya fruit. It is a protease, meaning it breaks down proteins.

The formation and occurrence of neoplastic (tumor) cells, or cancer cells, is the consequence of a stem cell coming into contact with estrogen, non sexually, and as part of the general “HEALING” process to disruption (either by physical trauma, chemical action, or illness) in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Cancer, as you would know, is a hereditary, chronic metabolic deficiency “DISEASE”, which is aggravated by the lack of antioxidants and the lack of amygdalin (also designated as vitamin B17), an essential food compound in the diet of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. A hereditary “DISEASE” is one that is caused by mutations (changes) in certain genes or chromosomes that are passed down in descent. A chronic “DISEASE” is one that does not transmit away from its own accord. A chronic metabolic “DISEASE” is one that arises within the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, affects any aspect of metabolism — the many different chemical processes that occur in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to sustain life and normal functioning — and is not contagious. When the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is sufficiently powered (spiritually) by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that wears it, with “‘EARTHLY’ specific supply of subsistence” through the transfer of forces, that is to say, the exchange of communication (reception and transmission of instructions, specific signals), between the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, then the solution to all chronic metabolic “DISEASE” that may affect that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is found in factors related to appropriate nutrition, increased levels of appropriate enzymes for the metabolism of their compounds, and appropriate physical exercise to oxygenate the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and improve the blood flow. Those appropriate enzymes are transported in the blood flow throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and are excreted in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, and which can be re-introduced in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to best support its health.

LIPASE ($C_{11}H_9N_3NAO_2+$), are a family of enzymes that catalyzes the hydrolysis of fats. Some lipases display broad substrate scope including esters of cholesterol, phospholipids, and of lipid-soluble vitamins. Lipases are involved in diverse biological processes which range from routine metabolism of dietary triglycerides to cell signaling and inflammation. Thus, some lipase activities are confined to specific compartments within cells while others work in extracellular spaces.

LACTATE DEHYDROGENASE (also called lactic acid dehydrogenase, or LDH) is an enzyme found in almost all tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It plays an important role in cellular respiration, the process by which glucose (sugar) from food is converted into usable energy for the cells. It catalyzes the interconversion of pyruvate and lactate with concomitant interconversion of NADH and NAD⁺. It converts pyruvate, the final product of glycolysis, to lactate when oxygen is absent or in short supply, and it performs the reverse reaction during the Cori cycle in the liver. Lactate is important in supplying cardiac tissue with ATP required for aerobic metabolism and it is a valuable metabolite for brain function and is a major energy substrate utilized by neurons during physical exercise.

ALKALINE PHOSPHATASE is an enzyme found in all tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” but is mostly concentrated in the bones, kidneys, liver, intestines, and placenta. It exists in different forms, depending on where it originates from. Some major functions include protecting the intestinal tract against bacteria, aiding in digestion, breaking down fats and some B vitamins, and promoting bone formation.

URINARY RHODANIDE, also known as thiocyanate, is the anion [SCN]⁻. It is the conjugate base of thiocyanic acid. It results, for example, from the enzymatic metabolism of cyanogenic glucosides by β -glucosidases that are responsible to hydrolyse cyanogenic glucosides into free hydrogen cyanide, benzaldehyde, or acetone and sugar. The released hydrogen cyanide (hydrocyanide) is detoxified in the bloodstream, or at somatic cells, by the very high concentration of the enzyme rhodanese to produce the relatively non-toxic molecule designated as rhodanide, also known as thiocyanate, which accounts largely for the thiocyanate that is found in blood, urine, and saliva.

Rhodanide is a vital molecule to cellular regeneration, due to its regenerative, antioxidant, antimicrobial and hair follicles growth properties. It acts as a signal molecule to revive dormant stem cells for regrowth, nourishing and energising cells to maintain or maximise growth and anti-thinning. Rhodanide works against hair growth inhibitors such as dihydrotestosterone (DHT), prostaglandin D₂ (PGD₂), and harmful free radical molecules to improve hair density and promote growth. It strengthens hair shaft, hydrates and mends weakened or broken keratin bonds. It closes cuticles and hydrates hair, fattening and increasing volume, elasticity and resilience while improving the overall hair aesthetic.

Rhodanide is the usual substrate for the defensive peroxidases (components of innate defense that include lactoperoxidase, salivary peroxidase, myeloperoxidase, and eosinophil peroxidase). It participates in the internal defence system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” by converting, when needed, into a more powerful antimicrobial protectant designated as hypothiocyanite. Hypothiocyanite is the anion $[\text{OSCN}]^-$ and the conjugate base of hypothiocyanous acid. It is an organic compound part of the thiocyanates as it contains the functional group SCN. It is formed when an oxygen is singly bonded to the thiocyanate group. The initial product of the peroxidase-catalyzed oxidation of rhodanide by hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) is the antimicrobial agent hypothiocyanite $[\text{OSCN}]^-$. Rhodanide is oxidized to hypothiocyanite $[\text{OSCN}]^-$ by reactions with hydrogen peroxide (H_2O_2) catalyzed by lactoperoxidase, salivary peroxidase, myeloperoxidase, eosinophil peroxidase, and hypochlorite. In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, hypothiocyanite is found in millimolar concentrations in fluids produced by mucous membranes, and to a much lesser extent in the blood. Hypothiocyanite is a short-lived, antimicrobial agent, well known to destroy several microbes, bacteria, and also to destroy causative agents of influenza strains.

HORMONES, VITAMINS, AND CRITICAL ANTIBODIES, which cannot be duplicated or derived from any other source, and many other organic compounds, are found in small amounts. Hormones are the chemical messengers of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Once released by glands into the bloodstream, they act on various organs and tissues to facilitate the functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the behaviours and emotional responses that they produce. Hormones are also considered neurotransmitters, which means they carry messages across the spaces between nerve cells. Among the many hormones found in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, are: adenylate cyclase, 17-ketosteroids, corticosteroids, oxytocin, epinephrine, gonadotropins, dehydroepiandrosterone, melatonin, erythropoietin, sodium-potassium-ATPase, and Thyroxine.

ADENYLYL CYCLASE (also commonly known as adenylyl cyclase and adenylate cyclase) is a membrane bound enzyme that catalyses the formation of cyclic AMP from ATP. It is regulated by a family of G protein-coupled receptors, protein kinases, and calcium. It is the most polyphyletic known enzyme with six distinct classes, all catalyzing the same reaction but representing unrelated gene families with no known sequence or structural homology. All classes of adenylyl cyclase catalyse the conversion of adenosine triphosphate (ATP) to 3',5'-cyclic AMP (cAMP) and pyrophosphate. Adenylyl cyclase is the only enzyme that produces cAMP, using low concentrations of Mg^{2+} -ATP as substrate. The cAMP produced by adenylyl cyclase then serves as a regulatory signal via specific cAMP-binding proteins, either transcription factors, enzymes (e.g., cAMP-dependent kinases), or ion transporters. These regulatory roles include diverse processes underlying regulation of blood sugar levels, and lipid metabolism, olfaction, and cell growth and differentiation, regulation of heart function, water retention as well as higher brain functions of learning and memory.

Table. Examples of physiological effects mediated by adenylyl cyclases.

Hormone or chemical	Tissue	Isoform	Effect
Adrenaline	Heart	Adenylyl cyclases 5 & 6	Increased rate and force of contraction
Adrenaline glucagon	Liver	Adenylyl cyclases	Breakdown of glucagon into glucose
Neurotransmitters (e.g., serotonin and dopamine)	Brain	Adenylyl cyclases	Learning, memory, and synaptic transmission
Chemical odorants	Olfactory epithelium	Adenylyl cyclase 3	Odorant sensation
Antidiuretic hormone	Kidney	Adenylyl cyclases	Regulation of water retention
Prostaglandin	Arteries	Adenylyl cyclase 3	Inhibition of smooth muscle cell proliferation
Bicarbonate	Testes	Soluble adenylyl cyclase	Fertilization (sperm acrosome reaction)

17-KETOSTEROIDS, are endogenous steroid hormones that are produced by the adrenal cortex, testis, or ovary. A ketosteroid, or an oxosteroid, is a steroid in which a hydrogen atom has been replaced with a ketone ($C=O$) group. A 17-ketosteroid is a ketosteroid in which the ketone is located specifically at the C17 position. Examples of 17-ketosteroids include: androstenedione, androstanedione, androsterone, dehydroepiandrosterone, epiandrosterone, epietiocholanolone, etiocholanolone.

A steroid hormone is a steroid that acts as a hormone. Steroid hormones are transported through the blood by being bound to carrier proteins—serum proteins that bind them and increase the solubility of the hormones in water. Steroid hormones can be grouped into two classes: corticosteroids (typically made in the adrenal cortex, hence cortico-) and sex steroids (typically made in the gonads or placenta). Within those two classes are five types according to the receptors to which they bind: glucocorticoids and mineralocorticoids (both corticosteroids) and androgens, estrogens, and progestogens (sex steroids). Vitamin D derivatives are a sixth closely related hormone system with homologous receptors. They have some of the characteristics of true steroids as receptor ligands.

Steroid hormones help control metabolism, inflammation, immune functions, salt and water balance, development of sexual characteristics, and the ability to withstand injury and illness. When inflammation threatens to damage critical organs, steroids can be organ-saving and in many instances, life-saving: they reduce the production of chemicals that cause inflammation. This helps keep tissue damage as low as possible. Steroids also reduce the activity of the immune system by affecting the way white blood cells work. Steroids are used in medicine to treat a wide range of ailments, including: asthma and chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD), hay fever, hives and eczema, painful joints or muscles — such as arthritis, tennis elbow and frozen shoulder, pain caused by an irritated or trapped nerve — such as sciatica, inflammatory bowel disease — such as Crohn's disease, lupus, multiple sclerosis (MS).

CORTICOSTEROIDS (aldosterone, corticosterone, cortisone), are any of a group of steroid hormones produced in the adrenal cortex. Examples of these include the naturally occurring hydrocortisone (Cortef) and cortisone. There are two kinds of corticosteroids: glucocorticoids and mineralocorticoids. They have various metabolic functions and some are used to treat inflammation. They are typically used to treat rheumatologic diseases, like rheumatoid arthritis, lupus or vasculitis (inflammation of the blood vessels).

OXYTOCIN is a peptide hormone, of nine amino acids (a nonapeptide) in the sequence cysteine-tyrosine-isoleucine-glutamine-asparagine-cysteine-proline-leucine-glycine-amide (Cys – Tyr – Ile – Gln – Asn – Cys – Pro – Leu – Gly – NH₂, or CYIQNCPLG-NH₂), and a neuropeptide normally produced in the hypothalamus and released by the posterior pituitary into the bloodstream to regulate emotional responses. Oxytocin is a mediator of anti-stress, well-being, social interaction, growth and “HEALING” related processes. It is connected to serotonin and dopamine. This trio of neurotransmitters is often referred to as the “happy hormones”, because of the positive, happy and, sometimes, euphoric feelings of well-being that they produce.

EPINEPHRINE ($C_9H_{13}NO_3$), also designated as adrenaline, is both a hormone and a neurotransmitter. As a hormone, it is made and released by the adrenal glands, which are hat-shaped glands that sit on top of each kidney. As a central nervous system neurotransmitter, it is a chemical messenger that helps transmit nerve signals across nerve endings to another nerve cell, muscle cell or gland cell. Epinephrine is part of the sympathetic nervous system, which is part of the emergency response system to danger — the “fight-or-flight” response, which is also known as the acute stress response.

As a neurotransmitter, epinephrine plays a small role. Only a small amount is produced in the nerves. It plays a role in metabolism, attention, focus, panic and excitement. Abnormal levels are linked to sleep disorders, anxiety, hypertension and lowered immunity.

The major function of epinephrine is found in its role as a hormone. Epinephrine is released by the adrenal glands in response to stress. This reaction causes a number of changes in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The neurotransmitter noradrenaline reaches the following organs and tissues and causes these rapid reactions:

- Eyes: Pupils dilate to let more light in to better see more of the surroundings.
- Skin: Skin turns pale as blood vessels receive a signal to divert blood to areas more in need of oxygen, such as muscles.
- Heart: Heart pumps harder and faster to deliver more oxygenated blood to areas most in need, like muscles. Blood pressure also increases.
- Muscles: Muscles receive more blood flow and oxygen so they can react with greater strength and speed.
- Liver: Stored glycogen in the liver is converted to glucose to provide more energy.

- Airways: Breathing is deeper and faster. The airways open up so more oxygen is delivered to the blood, which goes to the muscles.

The neurotransmitter noradrenaline also reaches the adrenal gland, which releases the hormones adrenaline (epinephrine) and noradrenaline (norepinephrine). These hormones travel through the blood to all parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. They reach the eyes, heart, airways, blood vessels in the skin and the adrenal gland again. The “message” to these organs and tissues is to continue to react until the stress is cleared.

As a medication, epinephrine is used for the treatment of:

- Cardiac arrest/cardiopulmonary resuscitation (CPR): epinephrine stimulates the heart.
- Eyes: epinephrine helps keep the pupils dilated.
- Septic shock: epinephrine increases the blood pressure.
- Asthma: epinephrine opens airways and decreases airway spasms.
- Anaphylaxis: epinephrine relaxes airway muscles. It is the first-response treatment for this severe, life-threatening allergic reaction.

GONADOTROPINS are peptide hormones that regulate ovarian and testicular function and are essential for normal growth, sexual development and reproduction. In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, gonadotropins include follicle stimulating hormone (FSH) and luteinizing hormone (LH) which are made in the pituitary, and chorionic gonadotropin (hCG) which is made by the placenta. Follicle stimulating hormone (FSH) is a pituitary hormone that regulates growth, sexual development and reproduction, including menstruation, follicular development and ovulation. It is essential for sexual maturation and reproduction in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Urinary derived follicle stimulating hormone is used in treatment of infertility and hypogonadism. Luteinizing hormone (LH) is a pituitary hormone that is essential for sexual development and reproduction in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. In the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective, it stimulates production of testosterone by the testes. In the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective, it stimulates ovarian follicle maturation. All three gonadotropins are heterodimeric proteins that consist of two peptide chains, the alpha chain is similar in all three, whereas the beta chain is unique and determines the fine receptor specificity and function of each hormone. The pituitary gonadotropins are under the control of gonadotropin releasing hormone (GnRH), a decapeptide produced in the hypothalamus and released in response to circulating levels of estrogens and progesterone.

DEHYDROEPIANDROSTERONE (DHEA, $C_{19}H_{28}O_2$), also known as androstenedione, is an endogenous steroid hormone precursor to many other hormones, such as estrogen, testosterone, androstenedione, estrone, estradiol. It is one of the most abundant circulating steroids in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and responsible for maintaining an anabolic or protein building state. It is produced naturally from cholesterol in the adrenal glands on top of the kidneys, in the gonads in smaller amounts, and in the frontal lobes of the brain. Its production peaks just before puberty, then its levels gradually decline. At age 60, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will produce barely 15% to 20% of the dehydroepiandrosterone, which it had produced at age 20. Dehydroepiandrosterone functions as a metabolic intermediate in the biosynthesis of the androgen and estrogen sex steroids both in the gonads and in various other tissues. Dehydroepiandrosterone known for its regenerative properties and it stimulates bone marrow development and increases its production of red blood cells. It is used as remedy to facilitate the treatment or prevention of the following “DISEASES”: diabetes, obesity, anemia, breast cancer, heart disease, osteoporosis, and kidney disease, Alzheimer’s disease, chronic fatigue syndrome, depression, erectile dysfunction, fatigue, fibromyalgia, lupus, menopausal symptoms, metabolic syndrome, multiple sclerosis, parkinson’s disease, cardiovascular disease by decreasing visceral fat, etc... It is also used to improve sports performance, enhance sex drive, promote weight loss.

MELATONIN ($C_{13}H_{16}N_2O_2$), is a hormone (N-acetyl-5 methoxytryptamine) produced especially at night in the pineal gland and which helps: in the maintenance of the hormone balance and regulation of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; in immune system integrity; and in circadian rhythm (daily metabolic balance). Melatonin is synthesized from the amino acid tryptophan. Tryptophan (l-tryptophan) is an essential amino acid formed from proteins during digestion by the action of proteolytic enzymes. Tryptophan is converted to serotonin, a brain chemical involved with mood during the day and the latter finally converted to the indole melatonin.

Melatonin regulates many neuroendocrine functions and can inhibit secretion of luteinizing hormone (LH) and follicle stimulating hormone (FSH) from the anterior pituitary gland. In addition to its hormone actions, melatonin also has strong antioxidant properties and may scavenge and eliminate cell-damaging free radicals. It inhibits nitric oxide synthetase enzyme leading to reduction in the formation of peroxynitrite in tissues of brain. Melatonin stimulates the activities of antioxidant enzymes; glutathione peroxidase, superoxide dismutase and catalase.

Melatonin is not only confined to the pineal gland, but also extends to various other organs including the skin. After exposure to UV, melatonin is metabolized in the skin and in turn causes production of antioxidant melatonin metabolites in keratinocytes. Melatonin forms a defense mechanism against the multifaceted threats of environmental stress, especially UV, to which the skin is life-long exposed. Owing to its chemical structure, melatonin as well as its metabolites are strongly lipophilic, which renders them easily diffusible in every skin and cell compartment, therefore penetrating beyond the epidermis, namely to the dermis and the hair follicle.

ERYTHROPOIETIN ($C_{42}H_{73}NO_{16}$), also designated as erythropoetin, haematopoietin, or haemopoietin, is a glycoprotein cytokine secreted mainly by the kidneys in response to cellular hypoxia. Erythropoietin is produced by interstitial fibroblasts in the kidney in close association with the peritubular capillary and proximal convoluted tubule. It is also produced in perisinusoidal cells in the liver.

Erythropoietin acts in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as a glycoprotein hormone that regulates red blood cells production. Its function is that of a protein signaling molecule for red blood cells precursors in the bone marrow. Erythropoietin allows bone marrow to create red blood cells and thus extra hemoglobin. Consequently erythropoietin is most generally used among endurance athletes as a means to increasing their red blood cells count which in turn results in better oxygen transportation along these lines and a vast improvement in aerobic respiration. The quicker the rate of high-impact respiration, the higher the level at which the competitor can work without using the anaerobic frameworks. It enhances endurance, reduces fatigue, and increases metabolism.⁷⁴²

⁷⁴² If you follow sports, you have undoubtedly heard about athletes who are using performance-enhancing drugs. Anabolic steroids are some of the more well-known performance-enhancing drugs. But erythropoietin (EPO) falls under the same umbrella of performance-enhancing drugs. Erythropoietin (EPO) can be synthesized in the laboratory and injected intravenously or subcutaneously (similar to an insulin injection). Doing so may help reduce the recovery time between workouts, increase muscle power, and maintain an edge during competitions. It is that, which is referred to as “doping”.

Notwithstanding the benefits for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, erythropoietin is also involved in the healing process of muscles after the infliction of wounds and is part of the cerebral response to neuronal trauma.

THYROXINE ($C_{15}H_{11}I_4NO_4$), is the main main secretory product of the thyroid follicle cells (located in the neck just in front of the larynx) and is converted to the active hormone, triiodothyronine (T_3), in the tissues under the influence of microsomal deiodinase enzymes, which remove the iodine from the “outer” ring (5'-deiodination), or by organs such as the liver and kidneys. These hormones play an important role in regulating the metabolic rate, heart and digestive functions, muscle control, brain development, weight, energy levels, internal temperature, skin, hair, nail growth, of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Thyroxine’s principal function is to stimulate the consumption of oxygen and thus increases the rate of the metabolism of all cells and tissues in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and helps control their growth and development. Thyroxine is formed by the molecular addition of iodine to the amino acid tyrosine while the latter is bound to the protein thyroglobulin.

The production and release of thyroid hormones, thyroxine (T_4) and triiodothyronine (T_3), is controlled by a feedback loop system that involves the hypothalamus in the brain and the pituitary and thyroid glands. The hypothalamus secretes thyrotropin-releasing hormone which, in turn, stimulates the pituitary gland to produce thyroid stimulating hormone. This hormone stimulates the production of the thyroid hormones, thyroxine and triiodothyronine, by the thyroid gland.

Thyroxine is absorbed from the gastro-intestinal tract, although its absorption is variable. In the plasma, it is extensively bound to plasma proteins, mostly to thyroid-binding globulin but also to albumin and pre-albumin.

URINARY FUCOSE ($C_6H_{12}O_5$). Fucose⁷⁴³, also designated as or 6-deoxygalactose, is a hexose deoxy sugar with the chemical formula $C_6H_{12}O_5$. It is a six-carbon monosaccharide⁷⁴⁴ with an aldehyde group so that it belongs to the group of aldoses and therefore to the deoxyaldohexoses. Fucose is also called methyl pentose because it is a deoxy-methylated sugar.

Fucose is found naturally in a number of sites in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is found in extracellular mucoproteins and glycoproteins.⁷⁴⁵ It is found in the male testes, where it plays an important role during reproduction. It is also found in the epidermis, where it help in maintaining skin hydration. Beyond these sites, fucose is found at the articulation between each nerve, in the tubules of the kidney, and in significant quantities in breast milk of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

Fucose is an essential hexose deoxy sugar for the needs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It plays an important role in cell-to-cell optimal

⁷⁴⁵ A mucoprotein is a glycoprotein or proteoglycan, composed primarily of mucopolysaccharides. Glycoproteins are involved in the structure, reproduction, immune system, hormones and protection of cells and organisms. A glycoprotein (or glucoprotein) is a heteroprotein having a peptide part covalently linked to a carbohydrate part with carbon. Glycoproteins are molecules composed of a protein bound to one or more simple or compound carbohydrates.

Mucoproteins and glycoproteins are proteins that have carbohydrates attached to them. However, mucoproteins have an amount of carbohydrates greater than 4%, unlike glycoproteins where the amount of carbohydrates is less than 4%.

A carbohydrate chain is another designation for glycolipids, glycoproteins, and proteoglycans. The main purpose of a carbohydrate chains is cell-to-cell recognition. Carbohydrates can be thought of as an ID badge for a cell. They enable cells to be recognized. For example, carbohydrate chains are responsible for labeling red blood cells according to blood type. They are also important in the immune system. Carbohydrate chains allow the immune system to be able to distinguish cells belonging to the organism and cells that are foreign and need to be destroyed.

The biological functions of mucoproteins are very varied. They determine the immune properties, blood group affiliation, as well as the elasticity and permeability of tissues. They also participate in intercellular interactions. Cell surface glycoproteins are also important for cross-linking cells and proteins (eg, collagen) to add strength and stability to a tissue.

communication. Cell-to-cell communication is often conveyed by receptor-ligand interactions, a phenomenon by which the message in the incoming signal is translated into a biological response typical of the ligand and the cell. Fucose plays an important role in the transmission of information in the brain; it stimulates brain development and long-term memories capabilities. It inhibits tumor growth, in general. It also help reduce the growth of rheumatoid arthritis.

URINARY SELF-ANTIGENS. Antigens are molecules capable of stimulating an immune response. Each antigen has distinct surface features, or epitopes, resulting in specific responses. Cells of infective or physical tissue damage in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and which cause a “DISEASE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, release various self-antigens, some of which appear in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. These self-antigens are cellular proteins, peptides, enzyme complexes, ribonucleoprotein complexes, DNA, and post-translationally modified antigens against which auto-antibodies are directed. These self-antigens are causative agents or products of those cells of infective or physical tissue damage. They are unique and peculiar to the conditions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from which they are produced. Through oral intake, through freshly voided urine, these self-antibodies pass through the blood stream and provide the intestinal lymphatic system the many self-antigens, which are not normally available to the immune system, and against which antibodies can be produced, in order to “COMBAT” those cells of infective or physical tissue damage in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The produced antibodies will eventually inhibit the growth/reproduction of those cells of infective or physical tissue damage in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and their protection, and enable the process of “HEALING” of those infective or damaged tissues. This is the basis of “Isopathic⁷⁴⁶ Therapy” or “Isotherapy”, which is the process of “HEALING” of a “DISEASE” by administering the active causative agent, or products, or an extract, of the same “DISEASE”: The “DISEASE” that occurs in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is treated with the elements of the same cause that triggered that “DISEASE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This involves the notion of identity of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is not about the use of a similar “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but of the identical “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Hence the importance of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, which contains the appropriate self-antigens, and to be used in just about any “DISEASE” that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that produced that “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, may experience.

URINARY IMMUNOGLOBULINS (IgG, IgA, IgM). Immunoglobulins, also known as antibodies, are glycoprotein molecules produced by white blood cells. They act as a critical part of the immune response by specifically recognizing and binding to particular antigens, such as bacteria or deleterious particulates, and aiding in their destruction. The various antibodies produced by plasma cells are classified by isotype, each of which differs in function and antigen responses primarily due to structure variability.

URINARY ANTINEOPLASTONS, are a group of peptides, amino acids derivatives, organic acids and associated salts, and other small molecules contained in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, and which contribute to its anti-neoplastic (anti-tumor) properties. They allow the defense mechanisms that have been implemented in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to selectively destroy neoplastic (tumor) cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” while preserving healthy cells. Antineoplastons are used for the treatment of various cancers (brain cancer, breast cancer, colorectal cancer, liver cancer, lung cancer), high cholesterol, brain swelling due to infection (encephalitis), HIV/AIDS, Parkinson disease, hypercholesterolemia, hypertriglyceridemia, sickle cell anemia, thalassemia, and other conditions; which more substantiates the medicinal importance of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that produces it in the first place.

RENAL “STEM CELLS”⁷⁴⁷, which are cells with self-renewal capacity and differentiation potential into several new cell types. Urine is a non-invasive source from which renal stem cells are available: on a daily basis, approximately 2000 to ⁷⁴⁷ As you would know already, stem cells are “specific cells” that are not specialised to perform particular functions and that have been designed for the replacement purpose. These “specific cells” are designated as “stem cells”. They can be considered as the raw materials of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; the cells from which all other cells with specialized functions are generated in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Through “stem cells” and through “specific processes” designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be replenished with new cells that will perform particular functions. These “specific cells”, the “stem cells”, unlike regular cells, have two unique properties: they can divide over and over again to produce new cells; as they divide, they can change into the other types of cells that will perform particular functions.

7000 fully functional cells, among which approximately 0.2% are the renal stem cells, from the tubular network and downstream parts of the urinary tract (ureters, bladder, and urethra) detach and are excreted in urine. Derived from the convoluted tubules of nephron, renal pelvis, ureters, bladder and urethra, the renal stem cells have a similar phenotype⁷⁴⁸ to bone marrow-derived “mesenchymal stroma cells”⁷⁴⁹. The renal stem cells, possess properties of kidney progenitor cells and biological characteristics of stem cells, that is to say, clonogenicity, cell growth patterns and expansion capacity, cell surface marker expression profiles, capacity for multipotent⁷⁵⁰ differentiation, paracrine⁷⁵¹ effects, ⁷⁴⁸ The term “phenotype” refers to an observable trait. “Pheno”, which means “observable” and comes from the same root as the word “phenomenon”. And so, it is an observable characteristic of an organism, and it can refer to anything from a common trait, such as height or hair color, to presence or absence of a disease. Frequently, phenotypes are related and used — the term is used — to relate a difference in DNA sequence among individuals with a difference in trait, be it height or hair color, or disease, or what have you. But it is important to remember that phenotypes are equally, or even sometimes more greatly influenced by environmental effects than genetic effects. So a phenotype can be directly related to a genotype (total genetic inheritance), but not necessarily. There is usually not a one-to-one correlation between a genotype and a phenotype. There are almost always environmental influences, such as what one eats, how much one exercises, how much one smokes, etc. All of those are environmental influences which will affect the phenotype as well.

⁷⁵⁰ When a cell differentiates (becomes more specialized), it may undertake major changes in its size, shape, metabolic activity, and overall function. Stem cells are usually categorized as multipotent (able to give rise to multiple cells that have the ability to self-renew for long periods within a lineage), pluripotent (able to give rise to all cell types in an adult) and totipotent (able to give rise to all embryonic and adult lineages). To be classified as “multipotent,” stem cells must make at least two different lineages, usually from the same embryonic germ layer. In contrast, pluripotent stem cells can make multiple lineages from and immune-modulatory properties via inhibition of T-cell and B-cell proliferation. These renal stem cells form homogenous cell types and possess highly proliferative capacity because they maintain higher telomerase⁷⁵² activity and longer telomere length compared to other types of mesenchymal stroma stem cells.

These brief descriptions here above are meant to give you an idea of, to awaken you about, the medicinal values of the life-sustaining small molecules, nutrients, proteins, hormones, antibodies, epidermal growth factor, angiogenic (blood vessel formation) growth factors, platelet-derived growth factor, transforming growth factor- β , fibroblast growth factor, insulin-like growth factor, hepatocyte growth factor, placental growth factor, vascular endothelial growth factor, nerve growth factor, etc..., and immunizing agents, which have been compacted in the correct concentration and structure in the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”. Take the time to reflect on the “water from your own cistern”.

The urine of a healthy “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is yellow in color (due to the presence of urobilin), more or less clear, limpid in appearance. This usual appearance may vary depending on different circumstances: diet, metabolic activity and the state of kidney function.

THE ULTRAFILTRATE PLASMA ISOPATHIC THERAPY

As you would know already, the “blood” inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” of “life” and of “health”, and which is necessary to maintain “life” and to sustain “health” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It continuously transports all “vital” information for the proper functioning of the cells, tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It also transports feedback information sent by those cells, tissues and organs, in the form of thousands of small molecules of all three embryonic germ layers but not from extra-embryonic tissue. Finally, totipotent stem cells can make all three embryonic germ layers and the extra-embryonic tissue.

⁷⁵¹ Relating to or denoting a hormone which has effect only in the vicinity of the gland secreting it.

⁷⁵² Also designated as terminal transferase, a telomerase is the enzyme in a eukaryote that repairs the telomeres of the chromosomes so that they do not become progressively shorter during successive rounds of chromosome replication.

very low molecular weight (in the range of 0.1–1 kDa), and which are intermediates or final products of metabolisms that occur in those cells, tissues and organs. Small molecules are low molecular weight molecules that are only a few atoms large and which are held together by strong covalent bonds. Take water for example. Only three atoms make up this molecule, yet it is essential for life. Oxygen gas is a diatomic molecule that is crucial for cells to make energy. The properties of these small molecules provide them with unique characteristics that make them so important to life conditions. Small molecules have incredibly strong intramolecular forces. These are the covalent bonds that hold them together. These bonds are very strong and do not easily break. They are not the bonds that break when a molecule changes state. The forces involved in state changes are called intermolecular forces and include any forces involved in interactions between molecules. The intermolecular forces of small molecules include dipole-dipole interactions between polar molecules, London dispersion forces in non-polar molecules, and hydrogen bonds, which is a special type of dipole-dipole interaction that involves a dipole moment on a hydrogen atom.

Some examples of small molecules include water, carbon dioxide, oxygen, lipids, monosaccharides, second messengers, metabolites, etc... The molecular diameter of CO₂, a small ubiquitous molecule, is larger than that of O₂, with a value of 3.34×10^{-8} cm; the smallest molecule is the diatomic hydrogen (H₂), with a bond length of 0.74 Å.

Owing to the small size, small molecules infiltrate through the cell membrane easily to accomplish their “specific tasks” and regulate “specific cellular processes” by interacting with targeted molecules present inside a cell. They are able to affect the functions of various proteins, including protein–protein interactions, by forming complexes with their targets. For example, they can selectively bind to specific biological macromolecules and regulates their biological activity, by acting as ligands that can increase or decrease enzyme activity, cell signalling, increase mitochondrial ATP synthase, etc... These small molecules can function as therapeutic agents to disinfect and restore a deteriorated cell and its external environment to a better health condition, or in the case of irreparable deterioration, to dry out a deteriorated cell, annihilate its functioning and mark it for elimination.

As such, through small molecules of very low molecular weight, thousands of feedback information are transported back by the “blood”. Each of those thousands of small molecules is produced at a unique location (tissue and organ) inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and has a unique “specific task”. It is so that, that feedback information, which is carried by those thousands of small molecules of very low molecular weight, tells about a very accurate (up to tissue location in an organ) self-diagnostic mapping of the internal state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. That feedback information can be “read back” by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” itself for an appropriate response to best support or sustain its own health. All such autonomous functions of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Almost all of that feedback information is found in the excreted “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”.

It is so that, due to its content, the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, is an indicator of the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Analysis of the feedback information contained in urine allows an extremely reliable “reading” of the internal state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. All biochemical, bioelectronic and vibrational information of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, are contained in the excreted “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. It is, in a way, a faithful memory and an accurate assessment of the biological and physiological state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Through its more than 4700 high-level metabolites (small molecules of molecular weight < 1000 Da, which are intermediates or end products of cellular metabolism) from 230 different chemical classes, this “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is excreted from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, keeps with it almost all of the essential information in the form of metabolic products and in the form of small amounts or traces, as accurate as a fingerprint, and which can only be “read” by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to best support its own health.

The “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, of a considered “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is specific to the considered “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, because it contains the biochemical, bioelectronic and vibrational information of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in the correct concentration and structure, which are manufactured by this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” alone and which are peculiar to it. These elements are precious medicinal ingredients tailor-made to best support the health of that considered “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to “COMBAT” diseases, hence to respond to a health threat, using “specific processes”, which were designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE

FORCE” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.⁷⁵³ Each of the medically important elements in the urine is found in a perfect and immensely complex

⁷⁵³ Just as there are no two persons who are exactly the same, there are also no two urine samples that contain exactly the same components. Your own urine contains elements that are specific to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” alone that you wear and which are medicinally valuable ingredients tailor-made to your own health disorders.

The taste of urine is mild and it is NOT unpleasant at all. The taste depends on your constitution and your daily diet. Everything that you eat and drink has an effect on your urine and its taste. The better your dietary habits are, the better it will taste. If you are on a vegetarian diet, there will be almost NO unpleasant aftertaste. If you eat spicy or fast food, instead of fruits, then you will notice that it has a stronger salty taste. Drinking your own urine immediately after excretion, will lead you to seriously reflect about optimizing/improving the quality of your diet to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear.

Your urine contains thousands of elements that are manufactured by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” alone that you wear, to deal with your personal, specific health conditions. The “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear is constantly producing a huge variety of antibodies, hormones, enzymes and other natural chemicals to regulate and control its functions and to “COMBAT” “DISEASES” that you may or may not know you have.

The thousands of critical chemicals and nutrients of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, and which end up in your individual urine reflect your individual “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” functions, and when reutilized directly in your “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, they act as natural therapeutics, antibacterial, antiviral, anti-cancer agents, hormone balancers, allergy relievers, etc...: THE FREE PERFECT PREVENTIVE AND CURATIVE HEALTH CARE TREATMENT! And, of course, this does not fit into the business plans of the medicinal merchants of death, as they cannot patent the urine produced by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear; thus, taking advantage of your ignorance, their minions will aggressively hasten and tell you that your own FREE urine, which is the all purposes medicine, which has been produced by your “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and which is tailor-made to best support the health of your “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is a poisonous product that MUST NOT be reused. Meanwhile, they sell you their own concocted medicinal products of which the key ingredients are synthetics of the elements, which are found in your urine, to attenuate the symptoms of diseases, which your own urine cures, and they will hold you “hostage” to their products: “Good for the business, they say!”

Remember that every concoction prepared by the medicinal merchants of death and pushed onto you, work by the same mechanism: they poison the cellular communications and the small molecules transport and functioning systems of your “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, in order to make you sick and keep you hostage in sickness, until finally you are “DEAD”. If the results of the poisoning by their concoctions is not your interrelation with thousands of other important components (more than 4700 high-level metabolites) of the urine in the same “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Furthermore, the urine of a considered “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is in a reduced state, which means that it has more electrons (the charge is reduced in the negative direction) that come from the considered “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” itself and those electrons that are all in place in the urine, are ready to be donated for antioxidant activity: free electrons can be given to free radicals to “COMBAT” oxidation.

The excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”, and which results from the work performed by the kidneys on the “submicrofiltrate from the liver” and for which the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” has no immediate need once the reabsorption process is completed past the medullary collecting ducts, is sent to the urinary bladder for storage and, at appropriate moment, for excretion from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This does not imply that the excreted ultrafiltrate is toxic, bad, worthless, defective, or unusable material for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. For example, from the non-toxic “submicrofiltrate from the liver” that they receive from the liver, the kidneys filter water and sodium into the urine. Are water and sodium toxic? Of course not, they are both vital life-sustaining elements without which the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” cannot function. But both elements could be damaging to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” if there were too much water or sodium in the blood of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Now, what about potassium, calcium, and magnesium. These are familiar nutrients that are ingested in the food and vitamin pills everyday but they are also found in the the excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”. They are extremely valuable substances to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, certainly not toxic, and yet the kidney excretes these elements into the urine. Why? Because it is taking out the excess amount of the potassium, calcium, etc..., which is not needed by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” at the time that they exit the medullary collecting ducts and are sent to the urinary bladder for storage and excretion from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” at the appropriate moment.

You can consider this ultrafiltration “specific process” by analogy with the production of drinking water (that is to say, the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ immediate “DEATH”, then they designate those results as being “therapeutic benefits”, otherwise they designate those results as being “side effects”; in any case there are only “side effects” resulting from those concoctions.

Substance”-water) out of source, surface, or waste waters, using an ultrafiltration and disinfection system, which is a water treatment process that uses a hollow fiber or a sheet membrane to mechanically filter water by removing particulates and macromolecules from waste water, to produce potable water.

In this production of drinking water analogy, using an ultrafiltration and disinfection system, the liver-kidneys system, which are the most sophisticated and best ultrafiltration and disinfection system there is, are the equivalent of waste water treatment system as a whole; the kidneys being located at the level of the purification station equipped with the filter for the “ultrafiltration” of the “submicrofiltrate from the liver”. Waste water is the equivalent of blood coming from the stomach and intestines and going through the liver. The “plasma submicrofiltrate” resulting from the filtering in the liver will then go to the kidneys for the next filtering phase: ultrafiltration. The potable ultrafiltered water is the equivalent of the excreted excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine” and which contains the low-molecular-weight compounds of plasma. The ultrafiltered potable water is the vital life-sustaining “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”-water, certainly not toxic, for the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

This excreted excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine” and which contains the low-molecular-weight compounds of plasma, is the result of ultrafiltration of plasma and all that it contains as factors that are essential for the cell recruitment, multiplication and specialization of cells, and as forces (in all their forms, including renal stem cells as part of those forces) of “COMBAT” — the process of “HEALING” in order to annihilate the pathogens, to “COMBAT” against diseases, to restore balance and ensure proper functioning of the organs in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to preserve health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and to restore “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER —, in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Before exiting the medullary collecting ducts, as excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, a part of this “ultrafiltrate of plasma” (the constituents of which have been listed hereabove) has undergone the reabsorption process and has been transported by the blood stream to where they would best support health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which passes the medullary collecting ducts, and which is designated as “urine” still possesses the remaining nutrients, products, which help maintain homeostasis, and the many low-molecular-weight forces of “COMBAT” previously listed. That excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma” is the excedent of that, which has already been transported by the blood stream to where those forces of “COMBAT” previously listed will best support health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

This excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”, which is produced by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” itself and to best support its own health, as designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, for internal “COMBAT”, is a tailor-made internal “medicinal substance”, that is to say, a tailor-made internal preparation in a specified formulation for the treatment or prevention of cellular blockades and damages, which are the sources of malfunctions or “DISEASES”.

This excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which contains the forces of “COMBAT”, which are represented by a multitude of medicinally valuable low-molecular-weight chemical compounds, which are tailor-made for internal “COMBAT” to best support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” own medicine: a cell and plasma ultrafiltered based therapeutic and regenerative medicine. It is part of the “WEALTH” attributed to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and which is intended to lead the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to understand something very precise about the products that are formed and those which are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”; hence to understand something very precise about “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, of whom the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is created in the “IMAGE”. Once excreted from the urinary bladder of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the excreted excess ultrafiltrate can immediately be reintroduced in the same “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through oral intake, which is the fastest way to get it into the bloodstream, for further use to continuously support the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and also as a prophylactic treatment, that is to say, “an advance guard”, a course of action taken to prevent “DISEASES” or any other unwanted consequences. Such treatments are also used in many plasma-based regenerative therapy that are involved in the functional restoration of tissues or organs that have been damaged by serious injuries or chronic diseases. The ultrafiltrate of the plasma-based fluids that are used in those plasma-based regenerative therapy, and which contain the necessary growth factors for tissue repair, is fully contained (is a full subset) of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”.

An example of a plasma-based regenerative treatment is shown in Platelet-Rich Plasma Therapy, which is presented as a form of regenerative medicine that harnesses the internal “COMBAT” capabilities of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which are available in plasma and platelets and which amplify the natural growth factors that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” uses for “COMBAT”.⁷⁵⁴ Platelet-Rich Plasma is a filtrated component of blood that contains platelet concentrations above the normal level and includes platelet-related growth factors and plasma-derived fibrinogen. Platelets, as you would know already, are parts of the frontline forces of “COMBAT” for “HEALING” response to injuries as they release growth factors for tissue repair. Their primary roles of are to form aggregated and also contribute to homeostasis through adhesion, activation and aggregation. The ultrafiltrate of a Platelet-Rich Plasma is still fully contained (is a full subset) of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”.

⁷⁵⁴ Injuries are very common among athletes, long to treat and often recurrent. Sometimes conventional treatments are not sufficient and the transition to chronicity prevents any recovery. You may have heard about athletes getting Platelet-Rich Plasma (PRP) injections to treat torn tendons, tendinitis, muscle injuries, arthritis-related pain, and joint injuries. The ultrafiltrate of the fluid of those Platelet-Rich Plasma (PRP) injections is fully contained (is a full subset) of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”. In addition to helping injured tissue heal quickly, Platelet-Rich Plasma (PRP) injections also help curb pain and boost mobility for people with rotator cuff injuries. They help reduce hair loss in people with male or female pattern baldness, etc... All those health benefits, which are obtained from Platelet-Rich Plasma (PRP) injections, are available in your own “urine”! Your “urine” is by far much more enriched with medicinal ingredients, which are best tailored to the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wears.

In the case of the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”, the process of reintroducing this “ultrafiltrate of plasma” into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” orally or by external application on the skin, is a plasma-based regenerative isopathic therapy: it is THE ULTRAFILTRATE PLASMA ISOPATHIC THERAPY for the functional health maintenance or restoration of tissues or organs that have been damaged by injuries in all their forms or by chronic diseases.⁷⁵⁵

As we indicated earlier, due to its content, the “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, is an indicator of the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Its analysis allows an extremely reliable “reading” of the internal state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. All biochemical, bioelectronic and vibrational information of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, are contained in the excreted “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”. It is, in a way, a faithful memory and an accurate assessment of the biological and physiological state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Through its more than 4700 high-level metabolites (small molecules of molecular weight < 1000 Da, which are intermediates or end products of cellular metabolism) from 230 different chemical classes, this “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is excreted from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, keeps with it almost all of the essential information in the form of metabolic products and in the form of small amounts or traces, as accurate as a fingerprint, and which can only be “read” by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to best support its own health.

⁷⁵⁵ Open intellectual dispositions lead to open doors. Take this “Ultrafiltrate Plasma Isopathic Therapy” seriously. Your own urine contains curative compounds that are very specific to you alone and to no one else. It is antibacterial, antifungal, antiviral, antineoplastic (anticancer), anticonvulsive, and antispasmodic. It is a totally safe medicine. Multiple sclerosis, colitis, lupus, rheumatoid arthritis, cancer, hepatitis, hyperactivity, pancreatic insufficiency, psoriasis, eczema, diabetes, herpes, AIDS, mononucleosis, adrenal failure, allergies and so many other ailments are relieved through the use of this therapy. After you overcome your initial gag response and break psychological barriers, you will realize that you have always had the remedy to your ailments with you and, in ignorance, you have been “pissing” it away.

By reintroducing this “ultrafiltrate of plasma” into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” orally or by external application on the skin, “specific sensors” of biochemical, bioelectronic and vibrational information, from the site of entry (the mouth or the skin) will be triggered, “read back” this precise and essential information concerning the biological and physiological state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and will induce in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” an appropriate “HEALING” response. This is how the appropriate “specific processes” for “COMBAT” — the process of “HEALING” in order to annihilate the pathogens, to “COMBAT” against diseases, to restore balance and ensure proper functioning of the organs in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to preserve health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and to restore “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER —, in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which have been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, for internal “COMBAT”, and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will perform their defined “specific tasks”, taking into account the biochemical, bioelectronic and vibrational information received, in order to optimize the health of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

This excess “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”, which is produced by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” itself and to best support its own health, as designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, for internal “COMBAT”, on being immediately reintroduced in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, once excreted from the urinary bladder, is ULTRAFILTERED. It becomes finer and finer in the course of daily consumption in a cycle of self-cure, plus potable water if required to attenuate its concentration. First, its forces of “COMBAT” cleanse, then free from blockades/obstructions and finally facilitate the regeneration of the vital organs and passages, which have been damaged by the ravages of “DISEASES”. Under the action of the renal “stem cells” that it carries, it facilitates the regeneration not only of the tissues of the lungs, páncreas, liver, brain, heart, etc..., but also the repair of the linings of brain and bowel and other linings. In fine, it accomplishes what fasting merely on water or fruits can never achieve.

Take example from the fetus in the womb during pregnancy. As you would know already, in its early days into existence as embryo (and then the fetus) in the womb, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” resides in the amniotic sac, filled with amniotic fluid, where it grows and develops by feeding itself with the amniotic fluid, through “specific processes” that have been designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” for such purpose.

The amniotic fluid is a complex biological fluid contained in the amniotic sac during gestation, within the first 12 days following conception, and in which the embryo (and then fetus) bathes. The amniotic fluid is constantly renewed; it changes as the pregnancy progresses. The amniotic fluid constantly moves (circulates), as the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which is in development inside the womb, swallows (receives, in particular, its own urine, completely sanitized) and “inhales” the fluid, process it and then excretes the resulting plasma ultrafiltrate, and so on, constantly being renewed and allowing for the proper growth of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the fetus, during its entire stay inside the womb.

During early embryogenesis, the amniotic fluid is principally derived from plasma of hosting uterus by the passage of water and solutes through aquaporin water channels expressed in the fetal hosting uterus membranes (amnion and chorion). The expression of aquaporins⁷⁵⁶ changes as gestation advances and with certain pathologic states, such as polyhydramnios, which is the excessive accumulation of amniotic fluid.

⁷⁵⁶ Water is the major component of all living cells, and efficient regulation of water homeostasis is essential for many biological processes. Aquaporins are a family of small (24–30 kDa) pore-forming integral membrane proteins, which are characterized by six transmembrane helices that selectively allow water or other small uncharged molecules to pass along the osmotic gradient. In addition, some aquaporins also facilitate the transport of volatile substances, such as carbon dioxide (CO₂) and ammonia (NH₃), across

Between 10 and 20 weeks of gestation, the volume of the amniotic fluid increases in a predictable and linear manner from approximately 25 mL to 400 mL. During this period, the composition of the amniotic fluid is similar to fetal extracellular fluid, owing to the absence of keratin in the fetal skin. After this period, the volume of the amniotic fluid is a function of production, from fetal urine (600 to 1200 mL/day near term) and respiratory tract secretions (60 to 100 mL/kg fetal body weight/day), and removal through fetal swallowing (200 to 250 mL/kg fetal body weight/day). The amniotic fluid volume is also influenced by intramembranous (between amniotic fluid and fetal blood within the placenta) and transmembranous (between amniotic fluid and maternal blood within the uterus) pathways in both physiologic and pathophysiologic states. Finally, the status of hydration and the amount of decidual prolactin of the hosting uterus may alter the transfer of amniotic fluid through fetal and hosting host tissues. The amniotic fluid volume plateaus at 800 mL at around 28 weeks of gestation, after which it declines to approximately 400 mL at term.

The composition of amniotic fluid undergoes more marked variation than its volume. During the first trimester, the amniotic fluid consists mostly of water and electrolytes and contains minimal protein. Keratinization⁷⁵⁷ of the fetal skin is complete by 25 weeks of gestation and decreases the permeability of fetal tissues to water and solutes. The impact of this process, coupled with the ability of the fetal kidneys to produce urine, results in increased amniotic fluid concentrations of urea and creatinine, decreased concentrations of sodium and chloride, and reduced osmolality⁷⁵⁸. By term, the osmolality of the amniotic fluid is about 85% to 90% that of the serum of the hosting womb. A variety of carbohydrates, proteins, lipids, electrolytes, enzymes, and hormones, which vary in concentration depending on the gestational age, are also present; some of these elements, particularly the amino acids taurine, glutamine, and arginine, serve a nutritive function for mitotic cells involved in placental angiogenesis⁷⁵⁹. An abundance of growth factors are found in urine-filled amniotic fluid, including epidermal growth factor, transforming growth factor-alpha, transforming growth factor-beta 1, insulin-like growth factor-1, erythropoietin, and granulocyte colony-stimulating factor; many of these growth factors play an important role in fetal organs, especially intestinal and lungs development. Too little fluid for long periods may cause abnormal or incomplete development of these organs.

⁷⁵⁷ Keratinization refers to the cytoplasmic events that occur in the cytoplasm of epidermal keratinocytes during their terminal differentiation. It involves the formation of keratin polypeptides and their polymerization into keratin intermediate filaments (tonofilaments). Each keratin intermediate filament contains 20000–30000 keratin polypeptides. More than 30 different keratins have been identified: more than 20 epithelial keratins and 10 hair keratins. The epithelial keratins are divided by molecular weight and isoelectric points into two types: type I keratins, which are acidic and of lower molecular weight, and type II keratins, which are neutral basic.

Normally, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the fetus “breathes” this urine-filled amniotic fluid into its lungs. If the urinary tract of “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is blocked, the fetus does not produce the urine, and without it, the lungs will not develop.⁷⁶⁰ The volume of amniotic fluid is at all times a balance between the structures producing or allowing its passage into the amniotic cavity (chorion and membranes, skin, respiratory tree, and urinary tract) and those concerned with reabsorption (digestive tract, respiratory tract, amniotic-chorion interface on the uterine wall). The most important intermembrane phenomenon is related to the transfer between amniotic fluid and fetal blood perfusing the placental surface, fetal skin and umbilical cord. The transmembrane phenomenon concerns the exchanges between amniotic fluid and uterine muscle. The amniotic fluid plays an antibacterial role due to its bacteriostatic and bactericidal properties.

The virtues of this “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is called “urine”, lie in the synergy of the forces of “COMBAT” that it contains and which are a faithful memory and an accurate assessment of the biological and physiological state of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that produced them in the first place. These forces of “COMBAT” possess cleansing, disinfectant (anti-bacterial, anti-fungal and anti-candida), and regenerative properties of the volatile salts and the multitude of its chemical compounds and their synergetic capacity to powerfully absorb acids, to destroy the very root of most cellular blockades/obstructions, and to dissolve tartarous coagulations. Through “specific processes” designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, for internal “COMBAT”, and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, this plasma “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, ⁷⁶⁰ Do you, who is reading these writings, now understand that from your early days into existence as embryo (and then the fetus) until these days, you have already re-used, reingested, and you keep reabsorbing (through your kidneys) large amounts of your own urine and for a long period of time, and it is one of the reasons behind the development of your organs and why you are alive today and reading these writings? Urine, which is produced by the kidneys of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wears is absolutely vital to the proper functioning of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

which is designated as “urine”, cleanses and disinfects the tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of deleterious particulates, and it fosters the regeneration of cells in those cleansed and disinfected tissues and organs. In so doing, it facilitates the transfer of forces for internal “COMBAT” and the functional restoration of tissues or organs caused by severe injuries or chronic diseases; hence, the treatment of numerous “DISEASES”.⁷⁶¹ NOTHING in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” was designed at random, nor implemented at random; everything in there has its purpose.

This plasma “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, which is designated as “urine”, is an excellent remedy for all “DISEASES” inward and outward.

Applied externally, especially when it is freshly evacuated, on the skin of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, this “ultrafiltrate of plasma” allows: to solve dermatological problems; to soften and moisturize the skin; to soften calluses or treat mycoses and other fungi; to disinfect and dry wounds and prevent infections. Wash your ears with this “ultrafiltrate of plasma”, lukewarm, and it is good against deafness, noise and most other ear ailments. Wash your eyes with it and it heals sore eyes and cleanses and strengthens eyesight. Wash and rub your hands with it and it takes away numbness, chaps, and it cleanses, heals and dries up ⁷⁶¹ Including: allergies, acne, anxiety, arthritis, blisters, blood pressure, blood clots, burns, bolis, candida, cancer, chronic fatigue, cramps, deafness, depression, eye conditions, gout, hair loss, HIV/Herpes, heart palpitations, infections in all their forms — lung infection, throat infection or pharyngitis, chronic obstructive pulmonary disease (COPD) —, smoking-related breathing problems, respiratory allergies, asthma, bronchitis, cold or cough, pneumonia, sinusitis, rhinitis, tonsillitis, cystic fibrosis, menopause, erectile dysfunction, osteoporosis, parasites, poison (snake poison) antidote, pregnancy nausea, psoriasis, stuffy nose, swelling, oral infections, toothaches and dental care — helping to keep the mouth free of dental decay (caries) and gum disease (gingivitis) and lessening the discomfort associated with mouth dryness (xerostomia), tooth whitening (due to its high concentration of ammonia) —, skin rashes, wounds, migraine, gripe in all its forms, gripe, malaria, mysentery and womb, caclexia, rheumatism and hypochondriac diseases, epilepsies, vertigoes, apoplexies, convulsions, lythargies, palsies, lameness, numbness, loss of the use of limbs, atrophies, most cold and moist diseases of the head, brain, nerves, joints and womb, leucorrhoea, dysuria, ischuria, etc...

For the treatment of oral infections and mouth ailments — toothache, loose teeth, incurable gingivitis, pyorrhea/periodontitis (bleeding gums), abscesses and canker sores, dental inflammation, tartar (calculus), tooth root infection, etc... — fill your mouth with your own fresh urine (morning urine has the most therapeutic substances) and rinse with it for some minutes to allow the cells of the mouth to absorb its healing agents as deeply as possible. Repeat 2 or 3 times a day.

wounds, and makes the joints limber. Wash any green wound with it and it is an extraordinary good thing. Wash any part that itches and it takes the itch away.

Ingested internally in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, daily, especially when freshly evacuated, this “ultrafiltrate of plasma” produces the same effects as those observed externally on the skin of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It allows: to solve cellular problems in the tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; to disinfect and clean cells and tissues and prevent infections of tissues and organs; to eliminate cellular blockages/obstructions that are the basis of thickening, hardening and stiffness in tissues and organs; to restore the balance of cellular and biochemical homeostasis of articular tissues (cartilage, subchondral bone, synovial membrane, ligaments, tendons); to heal and facilitate the regeneration of tissues of organs, just as it ensures the growth of tissues and organs of the fetus, as well as a good healing of any wound inside the uterus. It makes the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” lightsome and cheerful.

The imbalance of cellular and biochemical homeostasis of joints in favor of the phenomena of degradation of joint tissues (cartilage, subchondral bone, synovial membrane, ligaments, tendons), is the basis of complex pathologies that affect these joint tissues and are characterized by their progressive destruction, leading to pain and functional loss of joints. One such pathology that affects the joints is osteoarthritis⁷⁶²: the most common joint disease. Its primum movens is associated ⁷⁶² “Arthritis” literally means joint inflammation. Although joint inflammation is a symptom or sign rather than a specific diagnosis, the term arthritis is often used to refer to any disorder that affects the joints. It describes more than 100 pathologies that affect the joints, tissues around the joint, and other connective tissues. Common ones include:

- Ankylosing Spondylitis is arthritis that affects the spine. It often involves redness, heat, swelling, and pain in the spine or in the joint where the bottom of the spine joins the pelvic bone.
- Gout is caused by crystals that build up in the joints. It usually affects the big toe, but many other joints may be affected.
- Juvenile Arthritis is the term used to describe arthritis in children. Arthritis is caused by inflammation of the joints.
- Osteoarthritis usually comes with age and most often affects the fingers, knees, and hips. Osteoarthritis causes cartilage — the hard, slippery tissue that covers the ends of bones where they form a joint — to break down. Sometimes osteoarthritis follows a joint injury. For example, someone might have badly injured his knee when he was young and develops arthritis in knee joint years later.

with mechanical cartilage injuries resulting in biomechanical and biochemical changes that trigger arthrotic involvement. As you already know, articular cartilage is a non-vascularized, non-innervated connective tissue that can undergo many changes, resulting from microtraumas or age-related changes. These changes lead to degradation of the extracellular matrix (ECM), a change in the phenotype of chondrocytes and a reduction in the cellularity of the tissue.

In general, in the case of osteoarthritis, the symptoms develop gradually and initially affect only one joint, or a small number of joints. The fingers, the base of the thumbs, the neck, the lumbar spine, the big toes, the hips and the knees are frequently affected. The new formation of bone and other tissues can increase

- Psoriatic Arthritis can occur in people who have psoriasis (scaly red and white skin patches). It affects the skin, joints, and areas where tissues attach to bone.
- Reactive Arthritis is pain or swelling in a joint that is caused by an infection.
- Rheumatoid arthritis is a chronic inflammatory disorder that can affect more than just the joints. In some people, the condition can damage a wide variety of systems, including the skin, eyes, lungs, heart and blood vessels. Unlike the wear-and-tear damage of osteoarthritis, rheumatoid arthritis affects the lining of your joints, causing a painful swelling that can eventually result in bone erosion and joint deformity.

joint volume. Irregular cartilaginous surfaces rub, scrape or crack during joint mobilization and tenderness develops. Bony growths usually develop at the fingertip or middle finger joint. In some joints (like the knees), the ligaments that surround and contain the joint become distended, causing instability. Conversely, the hip or the knee can stiffen until they lose their mobility. Pain from touching or moving joints (particularly when standing, climbing stairs, or walking) can be significant.

Osteoarthritis often affects the spine. Back pain is the most common symptom. Usually, affected spinal discs or joints cause only mild pain and moderate stiffness. On the other hand, cervical or lumbar spine osteoarthritis can cause numbness, pain and weakness in an upper or lower limb if bony growths compress the nerves. These bony growths can grow inside the spinal canal, which compresses the nerves before they exit to the lower extremities. This compression can cause pain in the lower extremities after walking, falsely suggesting that the person's legs have a reduced blood supply (intermittent claudication). In rare cases, these bony growths compress the esophagus, making it difficult to swallow.

Osteoarthritis can remain stable for years or progress very quickly, but usually progresses slowly after symptoms start. Many people develop some form of disability.

Urine makes it possible to restore the balance of cellular and biochemical homeostasis of joint tissues (cartilage, subchondral bone, synovial membrane, ligaments, tendons) and cure such pathologies.

REABSORPTION OF NUTRIENTS AND OTHER PRODUCTS — reabsorbed products include: glucose, amino acids, bicarbonate, sodium, water, phosphate, chloride, sodium, magnesium, and potassium ions, proteins, hormones, antibodies, epidermal growth factor, angiogenic (blood vessel formation) growth factors, platelet-derived growth factor, transforming growth factor- β , fibroblast growth factor, insulin-like growth factor, hepatocyte growth factor, placental growth factor, vascular endothelial growth factor, nerve growth factor, etc..., and immunizing agents.

MAINTAINING pH — the pH level for the proper functioning of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is between 7.38 and 7.42. Below this boundary, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” enters a state of acidemia, and above it, alkalemia. Outside this range, proteins and enzymes break down and can no longer function as they were designed to.

The kidneys and lungs will help keep a stable pH within this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The lungs will achieve this by moderating the concentration of carbon dioxide. The kidneys will manage the pH through two processes:

- Reabsorbing and regenerating bicarbonate from urine: Bicarbonate will help neutralize acids. The kidneys will either retain it if the pH is tolerable or release it if acid levels rise.
- Excreting hydrogen ions and fixed acids: Fixed or nonvolatile acids are any acids that do not occur as a result of carbon dioxide. They result from the incomplete metabolism of carbohydrates, fats, and proteins. They include lactic acid, sulfuric acid, and phosphoric acid.

OSMOLALITY REGULATION — osmolality is a measure of the electrolyte-water balance, or the ratio between fluid and minerals in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Dehydration will be primary cause of electrolyte imbalance. If, for example, osmolality will rise in the blood plasma, an appropriate chemical message will be sent by the hypothalamus to the pituitary gland. This, in turn, will perform its “specific work” and release the antidiuretic hormone (ADH). Upon reception of the emitted antidiuretic hormone (ADH), the kidney will also perform its assigned “specific work” and make a number of changes, including:

- Increasing urine concentration;
- Increasing water reabsorption;
- Reopening portions of the collecting duct that water cannot normally enter, allowing water back into the body;
- Retaining urea in the medulla of the kidney rather than excreting it, as it draws in water;
- Regulating blood pressure (through slower adjustments) when necessary;
- The kidneys regulate blood pressure when necessary, but they are responsible for slower adjustments;
- Etc...

The long-term pressure in the arteries will also be adjusted through kidneys by causing changes in the extracellular fluid. Although the kidneys are the major osmoregulatory organ, the skin and lungs also play a role in the process. Water and electrolytes are lost through sweat glands in the skin, which helps moisturize and cool the skin surface, while the lungs expel a small amount of water in the form of mucous secretions and via evaporation of water vapor.

SECRETION OF ACTIVE COMPOUNDS — Kidneys will also release a number of important compounds, including:

- Erythropoietin — this controls erythropoiesis, or the production of red blood cells. The liver also produces erythropoietin, but the kidneys are its main producers in adults.
- Renin — this helps manage the expansion of arteries and the volume of blood plasma, lymph, and interstitial fluid. Lymph is a fluid that contains white blood cells, which support immune activity, and interstitial fluid is the main component of extracellular fluid.
- Calcitriol — this is the hormonally active metabolite of vitamin D. It increases both the amount of calcium that the intestines can absorb and the reabsorption of phosphate in the kidney.

THE URETERS

The ureters are narrow, thick-walled ducts, about 25 to 30 centimetres in length and from 4 to 5 millimetres in diameter, which will transport the urine from the kidneys to the urinary bladder. In the retroperitoneum, the ureter is situated just lateral to the tips of the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae. The ureter consists of three segments: the abdominal, the pelvic and the intramural.

The abdominal segment of the ureter extends from the renal pelvis to the pelvic brim. The right ureter begins behind the descending part of the duodenum. Just below their origin the ureters are crossed by gonadal (testicular or ovarian) vessels. Behind the ureter the genitofemoral nerve (or its genital and femoral branches) runs on top of the psoas. On the left side, the sigmoid arteries and veins embedded in the sigmoid mesocolon run in front of the ureter towards the sigmoid colon. The inferior mesenteric artery and its terminal branch, the superior rectal artery, follow a curved course close to the left ureter. Proceeding from medial to lateral, the following sequence of structures is found: superior rectal vessels; left ureter; left testicular or ovarian vessels. Just above the entry to the pelvis, the ureter is still covered by peritoneum by virtue of the ureteric fold. Next to the ureteric fold, the gonadal vessels form an adjacent fold.

The pelvic segment of the ureter is about 15 cm long and accounts for roughly half of its total length. At the level of its beginning at the pelvic inlet, it crosses the common iliac vessels near their bifurcation (on the left side commonly anterior to the common iliac artery and on the right side commonly anterior to the external iliac artery). Within the pelvis the ureter can be divided into two portions. The descending part runs caudally still covered by peritoneum. It is dorsally accompanied by the internal iliac artery and its visceral branches as well as marked venous plexuses. Projected on to the lateral wall of the pelvis, the descending part of the ureter crosses the obturator artery, vein and nerve.

The intramural segment of the ureter runs obliquely through the bladder wall. Near the bladder the terminal ureter is enveloped by a muscular layer. It coalesces with bundles of the detrusor muscle in the bladder wall and consists of coarser longitudinally arranged muscle bundles. Reflux of urine is prevented because the ureter passes diagonally through the bladder wall musculature for a short distance before entering the bladder lumen.

The ureters enter the bladder wall about five centimetres apart, although this distance will increase when the bladder will be distended with urine. The ureters run obliquely through the muscular wall of the bladder for nearly two centimetres before opening into the bladder cavity through narrow apertures. This oblique course will provide a valvular-like mechanism; when the bladder will be distended, it will press against the part of each ureter that is in the muscular wall of the bladder, and this will help to prevent the flow of urine back into the ureters from the bladder.

The wall of the ureter has three layers, the adventitia, or outer layer; the intermediate, muscular layer; and the lining, made up of mucous membrane. The adventitia consists of a fibroelastic connective tissue that merges with the connective tissue behind the peritoneum. The muscular coat is composed of smooth (involuntary) muscle fibres and, in the upper two-thirds of the ureter, has two layers: an inner layer of fibres arranged longitudinally and an outer layer disposed circularly. In the lower third of the ureter an additional longitudinal layer appears on the outside of the vessel. As each ureter extends into the bladder wall its circular fibres disappear, but its longitudinal fibres extend almost as far as the mucous membrane lining the bladder.

The mucous membrane lining increases in thickness from the renal pelvis downward. Thus, in the pelvis and the calyces of the kidney the lining is two to three cells deep; in the ureter, four to five cells thick; and in the bladder, six to eight cells. The mucous membrane of the ureters is arranged in longitudinal folds, permitting considerable dilation of the channel. There are no true glands in the mucous membrane of the ureter or of the renal pelvis. The chief propelling force for the passage of urine from the kidney to the bladder will be produced by peristaltic (wavelike) movements in the ureter muscles.

The lumen of the ureter is coated with urothelium, an epithelium underlying the lamina propria. This mucous membrane contains the finely woven mucosal vascular plexus. The muscle coat, responsible for the bilateral alternating peristaltic movements of the ureter (2–3 cm/s), consists primarily of spirally arranged smooth muscle bundles. In cross section, the bundles form two muscle layers fused by connective tissue. The inner layer is mainly longitudinal in arrangement, and in the outer layer the muscle bundles are arranged circularly. Near the bladder the intrinsic musculature is separated from a third layer, the muscular layer of Waldeyer; it consists of coarser longitudinally arranged muscle bundles, which emerge from the bladder wall into the ureter.

Nutrient vascular structures and ureteric wall layers near the bladder

The connective tissue of the adventitia, the ureteric sheath (about 2.5 mm thick), contains the adventitial vascular plexus responsible for supplying the ureteric wall. It is divided into an outer and an inner vascular network. The inner one is characterized by densely convoluted, partly corkscrew-like arteries with small perforating arteries running radially and obliquely from there upwards and downwards through the intrinsic musculature and continuing to the mucosal vascular plexus. The outer network, which is coarsely reticulated, contains longitudinal vessels constituting manifold anastomoses.

The supplying arteries and veins, approaching the ureter from one direction, run through a layer of loose connective tissue to the adventitial vascular plexus. The sympathetic nerves supplying the ureter originate from the aortic plexus and its continuation, the superior hypogastric plexus, the paired hypogastric nerve and the subsequent inferior hypogastric (pelvic) plexus. The nerves accompany the nutrient branches of the neighbouring arteries and form circum-arterial plexuses or run free in the connective tissue. The intramural plexuses consist of unmyelinated visceromotor and viscerosensory fibres.

THE URINARY BLADDER

The urinary bladder is a temporary storage reservoir for urine. It is located in the pelvic cavity, posterior to the symphysis pubis, and below the parietal peritoneum. The size and shape of the urinary bladder varies with the amount of urine it contains and with the pressure it receives from surrounding organs. The urinary bladder wall is made up of three layers of muscle.

Urinary Bladder and Urethra

The inner lining of the urinary bladder is a mucous membrane of transitional epithelium that is continuous with that in the ureters. When the bladder is empty, the mucosa has numerous folds called rugae. The rugae and transitional epithelium allow the bladder to expand as it fills.

The second layer in the walls is the submucosa, which supports the mucous membrane. It is composed of connective tissue with elastic fibers.

The next layer is the muscularis, which is composed of smooth muscle. The smooth muscle fibers are interwoven in all directions and, collectively, these are called the detrusor muscle. Contraction of this muscle expels urine from the bladder. On the superior surface, the outer layer of the bladder wall is parietal peritoneum. In all other regions, the outer layer is fibrous connective tissue.

There is a triangular area, called the trigone, formed by three openings in the floor of the urinary bladder. Two of the openings are from the ureters and form the base of the trigone. Small flaps of mucosa cover these openings and act as valves that allow urine to enter the bladder but prevent it from backing up from the bladder into the ureters. The third opening, at the apex of the trigone, is the opening into the urethra. A band of the detrusor muscle encircles this opening to form the internal urethral sphincter.

There are two types of urethral sphincters: the internal urethral sphincter, characterized by smooth muscle and is under involuntary control, and the external urethral sphincter, where control is voluntary and consists of striated muscle. Both structures are essential for urinary continence. During urination, the detrusor muscles of the bladder contract, and the sphincters relax and open in an antagonistic style, to allow the urine to exit the bladder into the urethra and out of the body.

The bladder receives motor innervation from both sympathetic fibers, most of which arise from the hypogastric plexuses and nerves, and parasympathetic fibers, which come from the pelvic splanchnic nerves and the inferior hypogastric plexus. Sensation from the bladder is transmitted to the central nervous system via general visceral afferent fibers.

The urinary bladder usually holds 300–350 ml of urine. As urine accumulates, the walls of the bladder thin as it stretches, allowing the bladder to store larger amounts of urine without a significant rise in internal pressure of the bladder.

When the bladder becomes half full, stretch receptors send nerve impulses to the spinal cord, which then sends a reflex nerve impulse back to the sphincter (muscular valve) at the neck of the bladder, causing it to relax and allow the flow of urine into the urethra.

When comparing the structure in male and female, there are a few notable differences. In the female, the external urethral sphincter tends to be more intricate compared to in male. Furthermore, the muscles in the external urethral sphincter in the female are involved in the constriction of the urethra and vagina.

All this information on the kidneys, the location, the dimensions, the chemical reactions taking place at each nephron, the cells types used to build the over one million nephrons, their assigned “specific work”, the flow of blood, the flow of urine, etc..., are indications revealing the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, from which arise the comprehension of the “specific events” taking place in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” at the “Gate No.6 Occident” and “Gate No.6 Orient”, and from which arise “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in those kidneys.

THE MUSCULAR SYSTEM

THE MUSCULAR SYSTEM INFOGRAPHIC

THE MUSCULAR SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

The muscular system, in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is the set of layers of tissues, blood vessels, tendons, and nerves, which work in concert with the skeletal system and the nervous system, to produce the force needed for the manifestation of the “movement” associated with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”. These set of layers of tissues, blood vessels, tendons, and nerves, and which are designated as muscles, are specialized contractile cells, also designated as “myoblasts”, arranged in a stacked pattern. These stacked patterns contain proteins, which size can change, and as a result, it will cause a change in the overall size of a muscle.

Among the set of “specific behaviors” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and assigned to the specialized contractile cells of the muscular system, in order to manifest the “movement” associated with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, are those that will be designated as “contraction” in all its forms, “elongation” in all its forms, and “relaxation” that follows the termination of “contraction” and “elongation”.

The “specific work” performed by a specialized contractile cell, hence the “specific behavior” that is manifested at the completion of the “specific work” as a contraction, or a relaxation, is triggered by an appropriate “electrical potential for action” over the cell membrane from a motor neuron and as a result of an appropriate instruction sent by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” through to the nervous system.

The “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” is the control and command center of everything, voluntary or involuntary “movements” associated with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and it is the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will enliven the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through the nervous system. The “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” will send appropriate messages to the central nervous system, which will decode them and forward the decoded messages through electrochemical stimuli from sensory receptors to appropriate locations of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and at which point the decoded response is cascaded down, at “superluminal speed”⁷⁶³, through the layers of “Specific Atomic

⁷⁶³ In a way of speaking and so that you come to grip with understanding the massive amount of considerations, reflections, and intellectual work that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has unfolded in the design of the “THE HOLY ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Molecule ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the specialized contractile cells of the muscular system, themselves constituents of the structures of tissues, themselves constituents of structures of organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” at the considered locations, to all “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” concerned. Each of these “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Molecule ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituent of the specialized contractile cells of the muscular system at the considered locations will perform its predefined “specific work” and at completion, it will emit an instruction in return as output “specific signal” in the form of a more or less luminous radiation and will adopt a predefined “specific behavior” as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed it. The synergetic result of the combination of those output “specific signals” and those adopted predefined “specific behaviors” of all those “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” concerned, is manifested instantly at the scale of the considered cells, tissues as organized structures of multiple cells, and organs as organized structures of multiples tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” at those appropriate locations of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” where the decoded response was transmitted. It is so that, the considered structures of tissues and organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” at those appropriate locations of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will adopt their also predefined “specific behaviors” and the appropriate synergetic “movement” will be manifested into existence in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”. Such manifestation is a demonstration of the application, to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”. Without the “movement”, nothing can be accomplished.

THE MUSCLE

A muscle is an organized structure of fibers built by “THE DIVINE FORCE” using specialized cells that have been endowed the ability to contract and to relax, using a series of motor proteins especially arranged within those specialized cells; thus producing a desired synergetic “specific movement” manifested through parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

PROJECT”. Inside you, as human creature, things are moving at billions kilometres per second. It is because of those extremely fast invisible movements that you are able to move, speak and do things.

Three types of muscle will be distinguished: visceral, cardiac, and skeletal. Visceral muscles will be found inside of organs like the stomach, intestines, and blood vessels. Their assigned “specific work” will be regulated through the autonomic nervous system and will be used for the “movement” of “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” through organs. Cardiac muscles will be found only in the walls of the heart and they are also regulated through the autonomic nervous system. Most skeletal muscles are attached to the skeleton by bundles of collagen fibers designated as tendons and they will facilitate the manifestation of various “movements” of the parts of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in relation to each other, upon reception of instructions that will be emitted by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which will enliven it.

Regardless of the muscle type, they share common features, the most of which are found in the skeletal muscles type. The bulk of a muscle is formed by muscle fibers. They are bound together into bundles and are supplied with a rich network of nerves, blood vessels, and lymphatics, which nourish and control each muscle fiber. In addition to nerve fibers, capillaries form a rich network in the endomysium bringing oxygen to the muscle fibers. The muscle fibers are individually wrapped and then bound together by several different layers of fibrous connective tissue.

The epimysium (“epi”- outside, and “mysium”- muscle) is a layer of dense fibrous irregular connective tissue that surrounds the entire muscle. This layer is also often referred to as the fascia. Each muscle is formed from several bundled fascicles of muscle fibers, and each fascicle is surrounded by perimysium (“peri”- around). Each single muscle fiber is wrapped individually with a fine layer of loose (areolar) connective tissue designated as the endomysium (“endo”- inside). These connective tissue layers are continuous with each other and they all extend beyond the ends of the muscle fibers themselves, forming the tendons that will anchor muscles to other organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, moving those organs when the muscles will contract.

Deep to the endomysium, each muscle fiber is surrounded by a cell membrane designated as the sarcolemma (the prefixes sarc- and myo- are prefixes that refer to “muscle”).

A muscle fiber can measure up to 30 centimeters in length and the diameter of a bundle of fibers can measure up to 100 micrometers.

THE MUSCLE FIBER — structurally, a muscle fiber is a thin, flexible and elongated cylindrical-shaped structure, of diameter ranging between 0.02 to 0.08

micrometers in diameter⁷⁶⁴, and which “THE DIVINE FORCE” has built using specialized contractile cells that SHE has also built and held together by a membrane-bound structure, designated as the sarcoplasmic reticulum and, which is similar to the endoplasmic reticulum in other cells.

THE SARCOLEMMMA — each bundle of muscle fibers is surrounded by a complex multilayered structure designated as the sarcolemma. The sarcolemma of a bundle of muscle fibers contains numerous infolding of the outer layer so as to form pockets in the surface and which are designated as the transverse tubules (T tubules). These transverse tubules are perpendicular to the length of the bundle of muscle fibers. Transverse tubules will play an important role in supplying the muscle fibers with calcium ions.

THE SARCOPLASM — Sarcoplasm is for the muscle fiber the equivalent of the cytoplasm for the cell, but it is rich with glycosomes (granules of stored glycogen) and myoglobin, an oxygen-binding protein similar to hemoglobin that can store oxygen required for energy generation. The calcium ion concentration in sarcoplasma is also a special element of the muscle fiber; it is the means by which muscle contractions are triggered regulated.

THE MOYFIBRIL — each muscle fiber contains hundreds or even thousands of refined structures, designated as myofibrils, bundled together in a lengthwise direction from one end of each muscle fiber to the other. These myofibrils take up about 80% of the space inside the muscle fiber, and are so densely packed inside these muscle cells that mitochondria and other organelles get sandwiched ⁷⁶⁴ The variation in diameter of muscle fibers will depend on factors such as the specific muscle, age, gender, nutritional status, and physical training of the individual. Exercise will enlarge the skeletal musculature by stimulating formation of new myofibrils — which are refined structures inside a muscle fiber — and growth in the diameter of individual muscle fibers. This process, characterized by increased cell volume, is termed hypertrophy. Tissue growth by an increase in the number of cells is termed hyperplasia, which will take place very readily in smooth muscle, whose cells have not lost the capacity to divide by mitosis.

Strength training will increase both muscle mass and strength; endurance training will strengthen cardiovascular fitness. Strength training will lead to increased protein synthesis within the muscle. Muscle precursor cells (designated as “satellite cells”) will be developed and activated to form new muscle fibers. Endurance training, in contrast, will lead to increased blood supply and energy utilization, especially of fat. The combination of both types of training will provide the best results in terms of health and fitness.

between them while the nuclei get pushed to the outside and are located on the periphery right under the sarcolemma.

Inside the myofibril, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has arranged several varieties of protein molecules, following the designs established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, in a series of smaller structures – designated as the myofilaments. Actin and myosin contractile proteins are the most abundant proteins forming these myofilaments. Actin and myosin contractile proteins associate into a complex, designated as the actomyosin, which is a highly ordered structure having the ability to carry the “specific work” assigned to it very efficiently. There are two main types of myofilaments: thick filaments and thin filaments.

The arrangement of these filaments inside the myofibril space is not random: NOTHING WAS DONE AT RANDOM in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. “THE DIVINE FORCE” has arranged these filaments to form regular expressions of a manifested metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”: seven filaments in a configuration of one thick filament surrounded equidistantly by six thin filaments that are related to each other by symmetry and that completely enclose the myofibril space.⁷⁶⁵

⁷⁶⁵ It is for the purpose to lead human creatures, celestial Christians, to discern and understand such things that they have been asked to arrange the place where they celebrate

As we have indicated already in previous annotations, the use of regular hexagonal forms provides the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter. Space-efficiency is not the only benefit of using regular hexagons. Stacked together, regular hexagons fill spans in an offset arrangement with six short walls around each “tube”, giving the resulting structures a high compression strength. The regular hexagon is the base shape for a matrix that minimized the used of construction material while at the same time maximizing the strength and reducing the weight of the final product.

It is so that, every organ and its associated tissues and associated cells in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is an expression, a manifestation by metaphor, of a particular aspect of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”. All the organs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” assembled together in an organised structure — the anatomy structure of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” — is a manifestation by metaphor of what you know as the three branches “candlestick” with the three receptacles (one per branche) of the three branches “candlestick” empty. When “THE DIVINE FORCE” will dress the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” with this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the three receptacles (one per branche) of the three branches “candle stick” will lit up, containing a bright flame, and which indicates that the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” has been activated and the connection with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has been established directly through the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” wearing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. As a result, through “specific processes”, which were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, the whole “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is then surrounded by the radiation of the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” contained in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”.⁷⁶⁶ All this their services and to place seven chairs there: one chair withdrawn and surrounded equidistantly by six chairs; not to sit on these chairs and not to add other chairs either. This arrangement is made for the purpose of leading you to understand the basis of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has consolidated in HIMSELF.

⁷⁶⁶ As we have indicated in one previous annotation, and we keep repeating it, so that it gets imprinted into your consciousness, you, as human creature and through your “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, are akin to the First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” and NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” is. NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” has that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”, but you as human creature and through your “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” possess that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” manifested in you. It is what we are explaining through these descriptive texts of the organs and their associated tissues and associated cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear. You, as human creature and through your “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, are a living manifestation of the First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”; you are a living manifestation of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — . REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE! REMEMBER YOUR “PLENITUDE”! WRITE IT ON THE TABLE OF YOUR HEART AND STOP RUNNING AFTER THE WIND!

Consider the illustration below and which you know already about. It is a gross sketch of the outside of “THE SHEKINAH” inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE”. Inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE” where “THE SHEKINAH” is placed, everything is very bright, very illuminated, and as such, the illustration below is approximative, yet sufficient to bring you to “get the picture”.

In this illustration, the illuminated portal represents the entry to “THE SHEKINAH”. Inside “THE SHEKINAH”, you have the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”. The “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” — the First Begotten of “THE DIVINE FORCE” — is behind the “Specific ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Frontier” which is manifested inside “THE SHEKINAH” as an impenetrable wall of “PURE FIRE”. All the figures around and outside of “THE SHEKINAH” would be the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their true external appearances (which is not the winged human appearance that they take when they manifest in front of human creatures) and, when they gather every seven day to celebrate

“THE PRAISE” and to receive each, seven times their daily quantity of raw “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” so that they can carry out the weekly tasks that will be entrusted to them.

Observe attentively the illuminated portal and the manifestation of “PURE” “LIGHT” coming out of it; it is a representation of the First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”, seen from the outside. YOU ARE AKIN to that representation.

⁷⁶⁷ Stand in “PURITY” and speak to “THE DIVINE FORCE” and you will learn things. When SHE shows this in “VISIONS” (extracted from a communication by “VISIONS”, between Aristide and “THE DIVINE”, via “THE DIVINE FORCE”), showing in front of you, a very flattened object, of few millimeters thick, which refers to what you consider to be of great value, being opened by a screwdriver held by an “invisible hand” [it goes without saying that you should understand that, it is “THE DIVINE FORCE” at work] and the microscopic components of the precious object moving by themselves out of the precious object at fast speed and arranging themselves in sentences written with those microscopic components in the quality of symbols of an “alphabet” that you have never seen here on Earth, and afterwards those letters moving by themselves at lightning speed and start forming (attaching/moulding themselves into) a structure that is familiar to you — a full fledged three branches “candlestick” with the three receptacles (one per branche) of the three branches “candlestick” empty —. Once the “candlestick” has been formed, without knowing how, all its three receptacles lit up instantaneously with a nice smooth flame coming out of each. You will be taken aback at that very moment, like I was, and with an expression of surprise (mouth and eyes wide open), you will understand instantaneously that you are inexistent in front of “THE DIVINE FORCE”. You will speak to “THE DIVINE FORCE” and you will say:

Wow! The receptacle intended to “CARRY THE (MANIFESTED METAPHOR OF THE) PRESENCE OF ‘THE SHEKINAH’”: the human creature.

“... ”

And from those few seconds of little display of “THE DIVINE SCIENCE” you will “see/understand” beyond the displayed “VISION”, understanding the concept of the “seed” (a very flattened object, of few millimeters thick), and the application of the concept of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales (the microscopic components of the few millimeters thick flattened object arranging themselves in sentences), and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement” (the letters moving by themselves at lightning speed and start forming (attaching/moulding themselves into) a structure that is familiar to you), and you will confess your poverty and THICK FILAMENTS — thick filaments are composed primarily of many elongated myosin molecules shaped like golf clubs, the tails of which bind together leaving the heads exposed to the interlaced thin filaments. A single thick filament contains 200-500 molecules of myosin.

Myosins are motor proteins that interact with actin filaments and couple hydrolysis of ATP molecules to conformational changes that result in the movement of myosin and an actin filament relative to each other. Motor proteins are a class of molecular proteins that can manifest a metaphor of the “movement”, and which is a manifestation of re-arrangement of its “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” in the course of chemical reactions. During the course of such chemical reactions, motor proteins will convert chemical energy into mechanical work by the hydrolysis of ATP molecules. All myosins are composed of one or two heavy chains and several light chains.

ignorance: (1) with respect to “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has written down as chapters of the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear; (2) with respect to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and; (3) with respect to “THE DIVINE” who created “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

It is then that you will also understand what is said by: “O good Son! The flame of my altar which is in you was lit by “the hand of my power” [that is to say, by “THE DIVINE FORCE”]”.

As we have indicated in one previous annotation, the concept and definition of the “seed” extends to all assembled “specific energy” structures; namely, The “seed” of an assembled “specific energy” structure is the smallest “specific energy substance” construct which contains all the features of the assembled “specific energy” structure associated with a well-defined state of equilibrium expected from an appropriate “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and which will be applied to the atomic constituents of that assembled “specific energy” structure. The “seed” of an assembled “specific energy” structure will be the “cause” of reproduction of that assembled “specific energy” structure.

It is for the purpose to lead human creatures to understand such things that CHRIST gave the parable of the growing seed.

Read more in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the parable of the growing seed.

If you do not understand these things, you are similar to a three branches “candlestick” with the three receptacles (one per branche) of the three branches “candlestick” not lit up or containing an almost extinguished flame. Keep reading, we will explain how you came to be that way.

The heavy chains are organized into three structurally and functionally different domains. The globular head domain contains actin- and ATP-binding sites and is responsible for generating force; this is the most conserved region among the various myosins. Adjacent to the head domain is the α -helical neck region, which is associated with the light chains; this hinge region that can “bend” and “straighten” during contraction as a result of re-arrangement of the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” within the appropriate molecules surrounding the myosin protein and in the course of chemical reactions that will take place. The light chains regulate the activity of the head domain. The tail domain contains the binding sites that determine the specific activities of a particular myosin.

THIN FILAMENTS — thin filaments of muscle fiber are composed of actin, tropomyosin, troponin, and nebulin. The thin, helical actin filaments are each 1.0 μm long and 8 nm wide and run between the thick filaments.

ACTIN is a family of globular multi-functional proteins that form microfilaments. It is found in essentially all eukaryotic cells, where it may be present at a concentration of over 100 μM ; its mass is roughly 42-kDa, with a diameter of 4 to 7 nm. An actin protein is the monomeric subunit of two types of filaments in cells:

microfilaments, one of the three major components of the cytoskeleton, and thin filaments, part of the contractile apparatus in muscle fibers. It can be present as either a free monomer called G-actin (globular) or as part of a linear polymer microfilament called F-actin (filamentous), both of which are essential for such important cellular functions as the mobility and contraction of cells during cell division.

Actin participates in many important cellular processes, including muscle contraction, cell motility, cell division and cytokinesis, vesicle and organelle movement, cell signaling, and the establishment and maintenance of cell junctions and cell shape. Many of these processes are mediated by extensive interactions of actin with cellular membranes.

The thin filament is anchored to actin-binding proteins designated as alpha-actinin. The alpha-actinin proteins are actin-binding proteins and components of the actin crosslinking functional modules; they lack G-actin binding activity and lack actin initiation/nucleation activities. An alpha-actinin is an important organizer of the cytoskeleton that belongs to the spectrin superfamily (which includes spectrin, dystrophin, and related homologues).

All alpha-actinin proteins have a flexible amino-terminal F-actin binding domain (ABD, composed from two calponin homology [CH] domains), a central rod containing spectrin that repeats, and a carboxy-terminal calmodulin (CaM)-like domain composed of “EF-hand calcium-binding motifs”⁷⁶⁸. An alpha-actinin primarily influences the cohesiveness and mechanics of the cytoskeleton by cross-

⁷⁶⁸ As we have indicated already, a macromolecule binding site, also designated as a binding domain, is a region on a macromolecule that binds to another molecule with specificity. The binding partner of the macromolecule is referred to as a ligand.

Calcium is essential for the manifested “life” and plays major roles in structural and regulatory functions of cells. Calcium is primarily found outside of cells, where it is complexed with phosphates or carbonates to form exo- and endoskeletons, serving as macro-scale structural scaffolds while also functioning to buffer the approximately 10^{-3} M extracellular levels of Ca^{2+} ions. In contrast, intracellular calcium concentrations are at least 10000 times lower, and require control mechanisms to be maintained at the appropriately low levels. Any failure of these control mechanisms may lead to sustained calcium overload and eventual cell and organ malfunction. The disparity in extracellular and cytoplasmic concentrations of Ca^{2+} ions supports the unique signaling and regulatory roles of calcium within the cell.

At the level of the protein structure, calcium may play important structural roles at the molecular level, required for maintaining appropriate conformations of individual proteins. All of the various actions of calcium ions (Ca^{2+}) are mediated by calcium-binding proteins that, in turn, interact with their target proteins.

Many calcium-binding proteins belong to the same family and share a type of calcium-binding domain that is designated as the EF-hand and consisting of two alpha helices E and F perpendicularly placed and linked by a Ca^{2+} binding a short loop region of 12 amino acids sequence.

Conserved elements of the EF-hand domains include:

- A. The flanking “incoming” and “exiting” α -helices (helix I to helix IV), the two interacting nodes, where the flanking α -helices interact and form interacting clusters I and II (shown in black and grey circles), position of the Dx Dx DG calcium binding loops, and the central β -sheet.
- B. The structural alignment of the Odd and Even EF-hand motifs from the eleven fold representative structures.
- C. The structural superposition of amino acids from. The structural frame of reference, “X”, “Y”, “Z”, “-X”, “-Y”, “-Z” and “X-4”, designate the seven key equivalent structural positions within all EF-hand domains. The Odd EF-hand motif helix-loop-helix supersecondary structure is shown in grey. In panel A, B and C, the residues that belong to cluster I and cluster II are respectively highlighted in black and grey.

linking actin filaments and other cytoskeleton components to create a scaffold that imparts stability and forms a bridge between the cytoskeleton and signaling pathways.

In an “EF-hand calcium-binding motif”:

- The calcium ion is coordinated in a pentagonal bipyramidal configuration. The six residues involved in the binding are in positions 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 and 12; these residues are denoted by X, Y, Z, -Y, -X and -Z. The invariant glutamic acid (Glu) or aspartic acid (Asp) (see table of properties of common amino acids at the beginning of this section and concerning the cell description and functions) at position 12 provides two oxygens for liganding calcium ions Ca^{2+} (bidentate ligand). Whenever you come across such numbering in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, you MUST understand that they reveal details concerning “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has consolidated in HIMSELF. These position numbers designated as 1, 3, 5, 7, 9 and 12, are not the result of happenstance. These position numbers imply that there is an “INTELLIGENCE”, a “SCIENCE”, behind this arrangement. They are the fundamental basis that describe and summarise “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has consolidated in HIMSELF. The “INTELLIGENCE” behind these position numbers is held by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. Any change in these positions will result in catastrophe in all its forms; all hereditary diseases that you already know about and such as: cancer, autism, cardiac arrhythmias, alzheimer, skeletal muscle and neuronal diseases.
- The calcium ion is bound by both protein backbone atoms and by amino acid side chains, specifically those of the acidic amino acid residues aspartate and glutamate. These residues are negatively charged and will make a charge-interaction with the positively charged calcium ion. Five of the loop residues bind calcium and thus have a strong preference for oxygen-containing side chains, especially aspartate and glutamate. The sixth residue in the loop is glycine due to the conformational requirements of the backbone. The remaining residues are hydrophobic and form a hydrophobic core that binds and stabilizes the two helices.
- Upon binding to Ca^{2+} , this “EF-hand calcium-binding motif” may undergo conformational changes that enable Ca^{2+} -regulated functions as demonstrated in Ca^{2+} effectors such as calmodulin (CaM) and troponin C (TnC) and Ca^{2+} buffers such as calreticulin and calbindin D9k.
- EF-hands have very high selectivity for calcium due to the relatively rigid coordination geometry, the presence of multiple charged amino acid side chains in the binding site, as well as the ion solvation properties.

Throughout the actin filaments, alpha-actinin proteins are organized in an antiparallel fashion, thereby providing a backbone for the insertions of actin-based thin filaments, as well as titin and nebulin/nebulette. This antiparallel-like backbone is designated as the Z-line (or Z-disc) (from the German composite word “Zwischenscheibe”, meaning “intermediate plate”, “intermediate disc”).

These Z-lines themselves are aligned in parallel and are connected via the intermediate filament protein desmin. They maintain the actin filaments in a tetragonal lattice.

Actin filaments are anchored perpendicularly on the Z-line by the actin-binding protein alpha-actinin and exhibit opposite polarity on each side of this Z-line. Thin filaments are also tightly associated with two regulatory proteins: tropomyosin, a 40-nm-long coil of two polypeptide chains located in the groove between the two twisted actin strands, and troponin, a complex of three subunits: TnT, which attaches to tropomyosin; TnC, which binds Ca^{2+} ; and TnI, which regulates the actin-myosin interaction.

There are several other important structural proteins that hold myofilaments (both thin and thick filaments) in place and connect them to the Z-line; two of these are: titin and dystrophin.

TITIN — also designated as connectin, is a protein that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has encoded by the TTN “GENE” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Titin molecule (3700 kDa), greater than 1 μm in length, will be the largest protein in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It has roughly 30000 amino acids and functions as a molecular spring which is responsible for the passive elasticity of myofilaments. It forms the core of the thick myofilaments, holding them in place, and thus keeping their arrangements. Titin comprises 244 individually folded protein domains connected by unstructured peptide sequences. These domains will unfold within their defined limits, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, when the protein is stretched and they will refold when the tension is removed. It is thus that titin is the protein responsible for the elasticity property — which is the synergetic manifestation of the unfolding and refolding “specific tasks” of titin domains — of the muscle as a whole.

DYSTROPHIN is a rod-shaped cytoplasmic protein, and a vital part of a protein complex that connects the cytoskeleton of a muscle fiber to the surrounding extracellular matrix through the sarcolemma. This complex is also designated as the costamere or the dystrophin-associated protein complex (DAPC). Many muscle proteins, such as α -dystrobrevin, syncoilin, synemin, sarcoglycan, dystroglycan, and sarcospan, colocalize with dystrophin at the costamere. Dystrophin protein is located between the sarcolemma and the outermost myofilaments.

As a cohesive protein, dystrophin will link actin filaments to other support proteins that reside on the inside surface of each muscle fiber's sarcolemma. These support proteins on the inside surface of the sarcolemma in turn links to two other consecutive proteins for a total of three linking proteins. The final linking protein is attached to the fibrous endomysium of the entire muscle fiber. Dystrophin will support the muscle fiber strength, and the absence of dystrophin will reduce muscle fiber stiffness, increase sarcolemmal deformability, and compromise the mechanical stability of costameres and their connections to nearby myofibrils.

The Dystrophin DMD "GENE", encoding the dystrophin protein, will be one of the longest "GENE" in this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment", covering 2.3 megabases (0.08% of the genome of this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment") at locus Xp21.⁷⁶⁹

TROPOMYOSIN is a 40-nm-long coil of two polypeptide chains that runs along the actin filaments. It has a coiled-coil structure associating with actin. The amino acid sequence of tropomyosin is made up of repetitions of 7 residues. Some of these residues are hydrophobic and the rest otherwise. The two different subtypes (hydrophobic and hydrophilic) of residues interact and wound together producing the coiled structure. The tropomyosin is composed of 2 homologous helices each containing 284 residues. The helices are wound up together to form a coil structure. This coiled structure coils again around the actin filament resulting in the coiled-coil structure. This coiled-coil structure of tropomyosin stabilises the subunit associations in the protein. Though the structure of tropomyosin is stable, its movements are still flexible.

There are 2 major groups of tropomyosin: high molecular weight tropomyosin and low molecular weight tropomyosin.

- High molecular weight tropomyosin groups will be made up of 284 amino acids. They can bind 7 actin monomers to form an actin filament. The high molecular weight tropomyosin groups will also be found in non-muscle tissues such as fibroblasts, neurons, etc.

⁷⁶⁹ The primary transcript in muscle measures about 2100 kilobases and takes 16 hours to transcribe; the mature mRNA measures 14.0 kilobases. The 79-exon muscle transcript codes for a protein of 3685 amino acid residues.

- Low molecular weight tropomyosin groups have 245-250 amino acids. They can extend to up to 6 actin monomers. The low molecular weight tropomyosin groups are also commonly found in non muscle-tissues.

Tropomyosin functions include:

- Calcium Level Regulations — this is done through the movement of Tropomyosin along the length of actin filament. As Tropomyosin moves, the binding sites for calcium ions are either exposed or sheltered, depending on the needs of the muscle fiber. Tropomyosin may also inhibit the attachment of myosin to the actin filaments of the cell.
- Regulation of Actin Movement/Sliding — it maintains the repeat distance between the actin filaments, leading to a consistent alignment and distances between actin filaments. This process is dependent on Mg^{2+} levels.
- Alteration of Binding of other Proteins — the tropomyosin bound to the actin filaments acts as a regulator of the binding of myosin to the actin. As the tropomyosin runs along the actin filament, it covers the myosin-binding site inhibiting the attachment of myosin. Tropomyosin is also capable of moving and exposing the myosin-binding site allowing the attachment of myosin into the actin filament.
- Regulation of Muscle Contraction — through the Tropomyosin-Troponin complex.

TROPONIN — Troponin is a complex of three regulatory proteins, troponin C (TnC), troponin T (TnT), and troponin I (TnI), which are located between thin filaments, and each subunit has a unique function.

Troponin C (TnC) (molecular mass of 18 kDa) is the troponin complex subunit containing four calcium-binding EF-hand subdomains, although different isoforms may have fewer than four functional calcium-binding subdomains. It is a component of thin filaments, along with actin and tropomyosin. It contains an N lobe and a C lobe. The C lobe serves a structural purpose and binds to the N domain of troponin I (TnI). The C lobe can bind either Ca^{2+} or Mg^{2+} . The N lobe, which binds only Ca^{2+} , is the regulatory lobe and binds to the C domain of troponin I after calcium binding.

Troponin T (TnT) (molecular mass of 37 kDa) is the largest troponin complex subunit which is responsible for the binding of Troponin to Tropomyosin, hence forming the tropomyosin-troponin complex. On the double-helical actin filament a troponin–tropomyosin complex is associated with each repeating region of seven actin monomers. Each troponin–tropomyosin complex contains four distinct polypeptides: tropomyosin and the three proteins of the troponin complex (TnI, TnT, and TnC). Tropomyosin (molecular mass of 66 kDa) lies in the long pitched grooves on either side of the actin filament and acts as a “stiffener” for the filament. Troponin T will not be directly involved in the Ca^{2+} -regulatory interactions in the troponin complex, but the presence of troponin T, in addition to troponins C and I, is required for the Ca^{2+} -regulated contractile interaction to take place.

Troponin I (TnI) (molecular mass of 22.5 kDa) is the troponin complex subunit that prevents contraction in the absence of calcium and troponin C (TnC) by inhibiting actomyosin ATPase. Troponin I is a globular protein which on its own can bind to actin in a 1:1 stoichiometry and inhibit myosin binding. This inhibition is consistent with TnI and myosin competing for the same site on actin with little or no co-operativity in the interaction.

NEBULIN — Nebulin is an actin-binding protein which is localized to the thin filament of the sarcomeres in skeletal muscle. It is a very large protein (600–900 kDa) that will bind as many as 200 actin monomers. Because its length is proportional to thin filament length, it will act as a thin filament “ruler” and regulate thin filament length during contraction.

THE SARCOPLASMIC RETICULUM

The sarcoplasmic reticulum is a network of tubules that extend throughout muscle myofibrils, wrapping around (but not in direct contact with) the myofibrils. The sarcoplasmic reticulum concentrates a chemical needed for the myofibrils to perform their assigned “specific work” and to adopt its predefined “specific behaviour” (contraction, elongation, relaxation, etc...).

The sarcoplasmic reticulum contains structures designated as transverse tubules (T-tubules), which are extensions of a membrane-bound structure that travels into the centre of the myofibrils. T-tubules are closely associated with a specific region of the sarcoplasmic reticulum, designated as the terminal cisternae, with a distance of roughly 12 nanometers, separating them. This is the primary site of calcium release. The longitudinal parts of the sarcoplasmic reticulum are thinner projects, that run between the terminal cisternae/junctional of the sarcoplasmic reticulum, and are the location where ion channels necessary for calcium ion absorption are most abundant.

The sarcoplasmic reticulum contains ion channel pumps, within its membrane-bound structure that are responsible for pumping Ca^{2+} into the sarcoplasmic reticulum.

Located within the sarcoplasmic reticulum is a protein called calsequestrin. This protein can bind to around 50 Ca^{2+} , which will decrease the amount of free Ca^{2+} within the sarcoplasmic reticulum (as more will be bound to calsequestrin). Therefore, more calcium can be stored (the calsequestrin is said to be a buffer). It is primarily located within the junctional of the sarcoplasmic reticulum terminal cisternae, in close association with the calcium release channel.

The release of calcium ion from the sarcoplasmic reticulum will occur in the junctional of the sarcoplasmic reticulum terminal cisternae through a ryanodine receptor (RyR) and will be designated as a calcium spark. There are three types of ryanodine receptor, RyR1 (will be used in skeletal muscle), RyR2 (will be used in cardiac muscle) and RyR3 (will be used in the brain). Calcium release through ryanodine receptors in the sarcoplasmic reticulum will triggered differently in different muscles. In cardiac and smooth muscle an electrical impulse (electrical action potential) will trigger calcium ions to enter the myofibrils through an L-type calcium channel located in the myofibrils membrane (in smooth muscle) or T-tubule membrane (in cardiac muscle). These calcium ions will bind to and activate the RyR, producing a larger increase in intracellular calcium. In skeletal muscle, however, the L-type calcium channel will be bound to the RyR. Therefore, activation of the L-type calcium channel, via an electrical action potential, will activate the RyR directly, causing calcium release.

THE SARCOMERES

Myofilaments of actin, myosin, and other associated proteins are organized into three main regions: a region in which only thin filaments are present, a region in which thick filaments are present, and a region in which both thin filaments and thick filaments are interlaced with each other and slide over each other.

In the first region, in which only thin filaments are present, the thin filaments are anchored perpendicularly on the antiparallel-like backbone, designated as the Z-line, by the actin-binding protein alpha-actinin and exhibit opposite polarity on each side of this disc.

The region defined by two consecutive Z-lines along the length of a myofibril is designated as a sarcomere. Within a sarcomere, actin and myosin myofilaments are interlaced with each other and slide over each other via the sliding filament model of contraction. The regular organization of these sarcomeres gives a distinctive striated appearance to a muscle fiber.

The isotropic region delimited on each side of the Z-line and which consists of the portions of the thin filaments that do not overlap the thick filaments (which is why it stains more lightly) is designated as the I-band. The I-Band is so designated because of its isotropic nature, as far as its refractive index is considered, which is characteristic of amorphous substances or substances which lack long-range order. An important regulatory protein in I bands is titin (3700 kDa), which will be the largest protein in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” under production by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, with scaffolding and elastic properties, which supports the myofilaments and connects them to the Z-line. Another very large regulatory protein, nebulin (600-900 kDa), will bind each thin myofilament laterally, help anchor them to alpha-actinin, and it will specify the length of the actin polymers during myogenesis.

The anisotropic region within the sarcomere, which contains both thick filaments and the overlapping portions of thin filaments, is designated as the A-band. The A-band is so named because it is anisotropic in its refractive index which is a characteristic of orderly crystalline structure. Close observation of the A-band shows the presence of a lighter zone in its center.

The H-zone corresponds to a region with only the rodlike portions of the myosin molecule and no thin filaments. Bisecting the H-zone is the M-line (from the German word “Mitte”, meaning “middle”), containing a myosin-binding protein myomesin that holds the thick filaments in place, and creatine kinase. This enzyme will catalyze the transfer of phosphate groups from phosphocreatine, a storage form of high-energy phosphate groups, to ADP molecules, helping to supply ATP molecules for the myofibrils of contraction.

THE MUSCLE EXCITATION-CONTRACTION PROCESS

The sequence of events that result in the contraction of an individual muscle fiber begins with the reception of an appropriate external “specific signal” at the sarcolemma. From the received external “specific signal” as input, a localised “electrical action potential” will be generated at the sarcolemma, allowing the muscle fiber to carry out its assigned “specific work”. In cardiac and visceral muscles types, the localised “electrical action potential” will be generated upon reception of an external “specific signal” transported by a propagating “wave” of external “electrical action potential”. In skeletal muscles type, the localised “electrical action potential” will be generated as a result of stimulation — a release of the neurotransmitter (acetylcholine, ACh) at the neuromuscular junction, the site of signal exchange — from the motor neuron innervating that muscle fiber. The acetylcholine (ACh) will bind to receptor on the sarcolemma, causing increased permeability of the sarcolemma to sodium ions Na^+ . Increased permeability to sodium ions Na^+ will cause the occurrence of a localised “electrical action potential”) in the sarcolemma.

Once the localised “electrical action potential” has occurred, in all type of muscle, the excitation-contraction process will proceed forward following the same steps:

The “electrical action potential” will spread over entire surface of the sarcolemma, down into its T-tubules.

The “electrical action potential” in T-tubules will cause the released of enough calcium ions (Ca^{2+}) from the cistern of the sarcoplasmic reticulum and into the sarcoplasm and cascaded down to the myofibrils.

Figure: Muscle contraction process: A. relaxed state. Myosin head rises and extends. Tropomyosin partially blocks binding sites. Myosin is weakly bound to actin.

Following appropriate chemical reactions that will take place in the intercellular space of each myofibril, ATP molecules will be produced. Some of these ATP molecules will bind through the ATP-binding sites, to myosin heads in the myosin filament. Myosin molecules in the myosin heads will hydrolize these ATP molecules, breaking them by Myosin ATPase into ADP molecules and inorganic phosphate molecules (Pi). This will produce the chemical energy required by each myosin head and cause it to undergo a conformational change, to adopt a predefined “specific behaviour” — namely, each myosin head will rise and “extend” — which is a manifestation of the molecular “movement”, toward the actin filament, where myosin-binding sites are located, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

Figure: Muscle contraction process: B. initiation of contraction. 1. Ca^{2+} levels increase in the sarcoplasm and triggers appropriate chemical reactions. 2. Following appropriate chemical reactions, Ca^{2+} released from the cistern of the sarcoplasmic reticulum and into the sarcoplasm, binds to troponin N (TN) on actin filament. 3. Following appropriate chemical reactions, Troponin- Ca^{2+} complex pulls tropomyosin away to uncover myosin cross-bridge binding site on actin filament. 4. Myosin binds strongly to actin and completes power stroke. 5. A “movement” is manifested through the actin filament, as a synergetic “movement” from all its constituent molecules.

In the meantime, calcium ions (Ca^{2+}) will also bind to Troponin molecules, causing Tropomyosin filament molecules to slide OFF myosin-binding active sites on actin filament.

If the myosin-binding active sites on actin filament are exposed, a cross-bridge will be established; that is, the myosin head will span the distance between the actin and myosin molecules and myosin-binding sites in the actin filament will bind to myosin, establishing cross-bridges — which are the attachment of myosin molecules with actin molecules.

Inorganic phosphate (Pi) will then be released, allowing myosin to expend the stored chemical energy as a conformational change, adopting a predefined “specific behaviour”, as designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

Each myosin head will move toward the M-line, pulling the actin filament along with it. As the actin filament will be pulled, the filaments will move — which is still a manifestation of the molecular “movement” — approximately 10 nanometers toward the M line.

This action, which is defined by this interaction and the cross-bridge movement toward the M line, will be referred to as the “power stroke”, as it is the step at which force is produced. The forces necessary for producing this interaction and the cross-bridge bend are generated by other proteins affecting the weak interactions in the bridges between actin and myosin. As the actin filament will be pulled toward the M line, the sarcomere will shorten and the myofibril will contract; this will now be a manifestation of the synergetic molecular “movement” associated to the molecular “movements” of the molecules constituent of the thin and thick filaments.

When myosin head rises and extends, it contains chemical energy that was produced during the hydrolysis of ATP molecules into ADP molecules and inorganic phosphate molecules, and its constituent myosin molecules are in a high-energy configuration. This chemical energy will be expended as the myosin head will move through the power stroke; at the end of the power stroke, the constituent myosin molecules of the myosin head will be in a low-energy configuration. During the occurrence of the “power stroke”, ADP molecules as well as inorganic phosphate molecules will be released from the myosin heads where they were stored; however, the cross-bridges formed will still be in place, and actin and myosin molecules will be bound together. The myosin head will remain attached to the actin molecules through the myosin-binding sites until a new ATP molecule binds to the myosin head through the ATPase-binding site of myosin molecules.

It is so that, once new ATP molecules produced from the cellular respiration will attach to the ATPase-binding site of myosin molecules, the ensuing chemical reactions will break the established cross-bridges — which are the attachment of myosin molecules with actin molecules. The actin and myosin filaments will return to their original conformations and allowing as such this whole “specific process” of contraction that led to the occurrence of the “power stroke”, from the hydrolysis of ATP molecules to the completion of the “power stroke” and breaking of the established cross-bridges, to start again.

The movement of the myosin head, back to its original position, is designated as the recovery stroke. Resting muscles store energy from ATP in the myosin heads while they wait for another contraction.

This “specific process” of contraction will stop when calcium ions (Ca^{2+}) will be pumped back into the cistern of the sarcoplasmic reticulum. In skeletal muscle type, this will occur when signaling from the motor neuron ends; which will repolarize the sarcolemma and T-tubules, close the voltage-gated calcium channels in the sarcoplasmic reticulum, return the actin and myosin filaments to their original conformation, and cause the tropomyosin regulatory molecules in the tropomyosin filament to reshift (or recover) or slide ON the binding sites on the actin filaments. This “specific process” of contraction also can stop contracting when the myofibril runs out of ATP molecules and becomes fatigued.

Note that each thick filament contains 200-500 molecules of myosin, each myofibril has several thousand sarcomeres and each muscle fiber has several hundred myofibrils. The resulting overall synergetic “movement” of the synergetic molecular “movement” associated to the molecular “movements” of the molecules constituent of the thin and thick filaments, propagated to the myofibrils constituents of muscle fibres, is what will allow the organs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to function in relation to each other, upon reception of instructions from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” that will wear this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

MUSCLES DISTRIBUTION AND THEIR ACTIONS

Muscles will be connected with the bones, cartilages, ligaments, and skin, either directly, or through the intervention of fibrous structures designated as tendons or aponeuroses.

When muscles will be connected to bones, they will extend from one bone to another and cross at least one joint. At each end, the muscle will be connected to the bone by a tendon. Some broad, sheetlike tendons will be designated as aponeuroses. A retinaculum (meaning bracelet) is a band of connective tissue that will hold down the tendons at each wrist and ankle. Some muscles will not be attached to bone at both ends. For example, some facial muscles will be attached to the skin, which will move as the muscles will contract.

The two points of attachment of each muscle will be designated as its origin and insertion. The origin, also designated as the head, is the most stationary end of the muscle. The insertion is the end of the muscle attached to the bone undergoing the greatest movement. Origins are proximal or medial to the insertion of a given muscle. The part of the muscle between the origin and the insertion will be designated as the belly. Some muscles will have multiple origins; for example, the biceps muscle of the arm will have two, and the triceps muscle of the arm will have three.

Muscles will be typically grouped so that the action of one muscle or group of muscles will be opposed by that of another muscle or group of muscles. For example, the biceps muscle of the arm will flex the elbow, and the triceps arm muscle will extend the elbow. A muscle that accomplishes a certain movement, such as flexion, will be designated as the agonist. A muscle that will act in opposition to an agonist will be designated as an antagonist. For example, when flexing the elbow, the biceps muscle of the arm will be the agonist, whereas the triceps muscle of the arm, which will relax and stretch to allow the elbow to bend, will be the antagonist. When extending the elbow, the roles of the muscles will be reversed; the triceps muscle of the arm will be the agonist, and the biceps muscle of the arm will be the antagonist.

Where a muscle will be attached to bone or cartilage, the fibers will end in blunt extremities upon the periosteum or perichondrium, and will not come into direct relation with the osseous or cartilaginous tissue. Where muscles will be connected with its skin, they will be laid as a flattened layer beneath it, and will be connected with its areolar tissue by larger or smaller bundles of fibers, as in the muscles of the face.

The muscles vary extremely in their form. In the limbs, they will be of considerable length, especially the more superficial ones; they will surround the bones, and constitute an important protection to the various joints. In the trunk, they will be broad, flattened, and expanded, and assist in forming the walls of the trunk cavities.

There will be considerable variation in the arrangement of the fibers of certain muscles with reference to the tendons to which they are attached. In some muscles the fibers will be parallel and run directly from their origin to their insertion; these will be quadrilateral muscles, such as the thyrohyoid muscle. A modification of these will be found in the fusiform muscles, in which the fibers will not be quite parallel, but slightly curved, so that the muscle will taper at either end; in their actions, however, they resemble the quadrilateral muscles. Secondly, in other muscles the fibers will be convergent; arising by a broad origin, they will converge to a narrow or pointed insertion. This arrangement of fibers will be found in the triangular muscles — e. g., the chin muscle. In some muscles, which otherwise would belong to the quadrilateral or triangular type, the origin and insertion will not be in the same plane, but the plane of the line of origin will intersect that of the line of insertion; such will be the case in the pectineal muscle. Thirdly, in some muscles (e. g., the peroneal muscle) the fibers will be oblique and converge, like the plumes of a quill pen, to one side of a tendon which will run the entire length of the muscle; such muscles will be termed unipennate. A modification of this condition will be found where oblique fibers will converge to both sides of a central tendon; these will be designated as bipennate, and an example will be afforded in the rectilinear femoral muscle. Finally, there will be muscles in which the fibers will be arranged in curved bundles in one or more planes, as in the Sphincters.

The arrangement of the fibers is of considerable importance in respect to the relative strength and range of movement of the muscle. Those muscles where the fibers are long and few in number, will have great range, but diminished strength; where, on the other hand, the fibers are short and more numerous, there will be great power, but lessened range.

The names applied to the various muscles have been derived: (1) from their situation, as the muscle of tibia, the radial muscle, the ulnar muscle, the peroneal muscle; (2) from their direction, as the rectilinear abdominal muscle, the oblique muscle of the head, the transverse abdominal muscle; (3) from their uses, as flexors muscles, the extensors muscles, the ab-ductors⁷⁷⁰ muscles, etc.; (4) from their shape, as the deltoid muscle, the rhomboid muscle; (5) from the number of their divisions, as the biceps and triceps muscles; (6) from their points of attachment, as the sternocleidomastoid muscle, the sternohyoid muscle, the sternothyreoid muscle.

All the numerous concepts associated with the mechanics of muscles, the “SCIENCE” behind their functioning, have been designed and established to the least details by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the muscles are manifestations of metaphors of those 64 equilibrium regions, which characterize “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Space” of a first “Formative Divine Particle” with respect to the “Generative Divine Particle” and through which the 64 equilibrium regions will pass.

In this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, those manifestations of metaphors of those 64 equilibrium regions have been expressed to the tenfold, resulting in a total amount of 640 muscles.

⁷⁷⁰ An ab-ductor muscle is any muscle used to pull an organ away from the midline of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. For example, the ab-ductor muscles of the legs will spread the legs away from the midline and away from one another.

The word “abductor” comes from the Latin prefix “ab-” meaning “away from” + “ducere” meaning “to draw or lead” = “to draw away from”.

The prefix “ab-” is opposed to the prefix “ad-”. Therefore, the opposite of “abductor” is “adductor”. An ab-ductor muscle opposes an adductor muscle; it is any of the muscles that draw an organ toward the midline of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

As we have indicated at the beginning of these briefs descriptions, all the details that follow and which describe the muscles and their actions, are intended to lead you to grasp and get a good impression about:

- The massive amount of considerations, reflections, and intellectual work that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has unfolded in the design of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and;
- The work of “divine surgery” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has performed in producing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” into existence.

THE CONNECTIVE TISSUES: TENDONS, APONEUROSES, AND FASCIAE

A connective tissue is the tissue that will connect, separate and support all other types of tissues in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Like all tissue types, a connective tissue consists of cells surrounded by the extracellular matrix. However connective tissue will differ from other types of tissues in that its cells will be loosely, rather than tightly, packed within the extracellular matrix.

Based on the cells present and the extracellular matrix structure, and in relation to connecting, separating and supporting muscles, the connective tissues can be classified into tendons, aponeuroses, and fasciae.

TENDONS — tendons are white, glistening, fibrous cords, varying in length and thickness, sometimes round, sometimes flattened, and devoid of elasticity. They consist almost entirely of white fibrous tissue, the fibrils of which have an undulating course parallel with each other and are firmly united together. They will be very sparingly supplied with bloodvessels, the smaller tendons presenting in their interior no trace of them. Nerves supplying tendons have special modifications of their terminal fibers, designated as the organs of Golgi.

APONEUROSES — aponeuroses are flattened or ribbon-shaped tendons, of a pearly white color, iridescent, glistening, and similar in structure to the tendons. They will be only sparingly supplied with bloodvessels.

The tendons and aponeuroses will be connected, on the one hand, with the muscles, and, on the other hand, with the movable structures, as the bones, cartilages ligaments, and fibrous membranes (for instance, the sclera). Where the muscular fibers will be in a direct line with those of the tendon or aponeurosis, the two are directly continuous. But where the muscular fibers will join the tendon or aponeurosis at an oblique angle, they will end in rounded extremities which will be received into corresponding depressions on the surface of the latter, the connective tissue between the muscular fibers being continuous with that of the tendon. The latter mode of attachment will occur in all the penniform and bipenniform muscles, and in those muscles the tendons of which commence in a membranous form, as the gastrocnemius and the soleus.

FASCIAE — fasciae are fibroareolar or aponeurotic laminae, of variable thickness and strength, which will found in all regions of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, investing the softer and more delicate organs. During the process of development many of the cells of the mesoderm will be differentiated into bones, muscles, vessels, etc.; the cells of the mesoderm which will not so be utilized, will form an investment for these structures and will be differentiated into the true skin and the fasciae of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. They have been subdivided, from the situations in which they occur, into superficial and deep.

The superficial fascia will be found immediately beneath the integument over almost the entire surface of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It will connect the skin with the deep fascia, and it consists of fibroareolar tissue, containing in its meshes pellicles of fat in varying quantity. Fibro-areolar tissue is composed of white fibers and yellow elastic fibers intercrossing in all directions, and united together by a homogeneous cement or ground substance, the matrix.

The cells of areolar tissue are of four principal kinds:

1. Flattened lamellar cells, which may be either branched or unbranched. The branched lamellar cells are composed of clear cytoplasm, and contain oval nuclei; the processes of these cells may unite so as to form an open network, as in the cornea. The unbranched cells are joined edge to edge like the cells of an epithelium; the “tendon cells”, presently to be described, are examples of this variety.
2. Clasmotocytes, large irregular cells characterized by the presence of granules or vacuoles in their protoplasm, and containing oval nuclei.
3. Granule cells (Mastzellen), which are ovoid or spheroidal in shape. They are formed of soft protoplasm, containing granules which are basophil in character.
4. Plasma cells of Waldeyer, usually spheroidal and distinguished by containing vacuolated protoplasm. The vacuoles are filled with fluid, and the protoplasm between the spaces is clear, with occasionally a few scattered basophil granules.

In addition to these four typical forms of connective-tissue corpuscles, areolar tissue may be seen to possess wandering cells, that is to say, leucocytes which have emigrated from the neighboring vessels; in some instances, as in the choroid coat of the eye cells filled with granules of pigment (pigment cells) will be found.

The cells lie in spaces in the ground substance between the bundles of fibers, and these spaces may be brought into view by treating the tissue with nitrate of silver and exposing it to the light. This will color the ground substance and leave the cell-spaces unstained.

Fat will be entirely absent in the subcutaneous tissue of the eyelids, of the penis and scrotum, and of the labia minora. It will vary in thickness in different parts of the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment"; in the groin it is so thick that it may be subdivided into several laminae. Beneath the fatty layer there will be another layer of superficial fascia, comparatively devoid of adipose tissue, in which the trunks of the subcutaneous vessels and nerves will be found, as the superficial epigastric vessels in the abdominal region, the superficial veins in the forearm, the saphenous veins in the leg and thigh, and the superficial lymph glands. Certain cutaneous muscles also will be situated in the superficial fascia, as the platysma in the neck, and the orbicular ocular muscle around the eyelids. This fascia will be most distinct at the lower part of the abdomen, perineum, and extremities; it will be very thin in those regions where muscular fibers will be inserted into the integument, as on the side of the neck, the face, and around the margin of the anus. It will be very dense in the scalp, in the palms of the hands, and soles of the feet, forming a fibro-fatty layer, which will bind the integument firmly to the underlying structures.

The superficial fascia will connect the skin to the subjacent parts; it will facilitate the movement of the skin, serve as a soft nidus for the passage of vessels and nerves to the integument, and retain the warmth of the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment", since the fat contained in its areolae will not be a good conductor of heat.

The deep fascia is a dense, inelastic, fibrous membrane, which will form sheaths for the muscles, and in some cases affording them broad surfaces for attachment. It consists of shining tendinous fibers, placed parallel with one another, and connected together by other fibers disposed in a rectilinear manner. It forms a strong investment which not only will bind down collectively the muscles in each region, but will give a separate sheath to each, as well as to the vessels and nerves. The fasciae will be thick in unprotected situations, as on the lateral side of a limb, and thinner on the medial side. The deep fasciae will assist the muscles in their actions, by the degree of tension and pressure they will make upon their surfaces; the degree of tension and pressure will be regulated by the associated muscles, as, for instance, by the wide fasciae tensor and maximal gluteal muscle in the thigh, by the biceps in the upper and lower extremities, and long palmar muscle in the hand. In the limbs, the fasciae not only will invest the entire limb, but it will give off septa which will separate the various muscles, and will be attached to the periosteum: these prolongations of fasciae will be designated as intermuscular septa.

The fasciae and muscles may be arranged, according to the general division of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, into those of the head and neck; of the trunk; of the upper extremity; and of the lower extremity.

MUSCLES ARRANGEMENTS AND THEIR ACTIONS

THE FASCIAE AND MUSCLES OF THE HEAD

The organ designated as the head is composed of multiple muscles that control the fine movements that produce facial expressions. These muscles originate on the bone or fascia of the face and attach directly onto the skin, allowing it to be animated.

THE FASCIAE AND MUSCLES OF THE SCALP — the superficial fascia in the cranial region is a firm, dense, fibro-fatty layer, intimately adherent to the integument, and to the epicranium and its tendinous aponeurosis; it is continuous, behind, with the superficial fascia at the back of the neck; and, laterally, is continued over the temporal fascia. It contains between its layers the superficial vessels and nerves and much granular fat.

The scalp is composed of soft tissue layers that cover the cranium. It is an anatomic region bordered anteriorly by the human face, and laterally and posteriorly by the neck. It extends from the superior nuchal lines and occipital turbulences to the supraorbital foramen. Aesthetically, it will serve as an area where hair can grow and physically, as a barrier that defends the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from foreign irritation. There are five layers to the scalp: the tegument (or skin), the connective tissue layer, the galea aponeurotica, the loose areolar connective tissue, and the pericranium.

The first layer is the tegument, which is thick and contains hair follicles and sebaceous glands. The hair follicles can extend into the dense connective tissue layer, where the nerves, lymphatics, and the vascular supply of the scalp reside. The galea aponeurotica, also called the epicranial aponeurosis, is a strong and immobile connective tissue layer continuous with the occipitofrontalis muscle. It is firmly attached to the subcutaneous dense connective tissue layer and serves to prevent stretching of the scalp, especially during surgery, which beneficially prevents complications. The loose connective tissue is important to the mobility of the scalp. It also serves as a flexible plane that separates the top three layers from the pericranium. The pericranium is the deepest layer of the scalp that is composed of dense irregular connective tissue. It tightly adheres to the calvarial bone of the skull. It contains the vascular supply that is vital to supporting the underlying calvarium.

The vascular supply to the scalp comes from the common carotid artery, posterior intercostal arteries, and the terminal branches of the subclavian artery. These arteries connect through an impressive network of anastomoses, with anastomoses in the temporal region being the most numerous.

The common carotid artery bifurcates into the internal and external carotid arteries at the carotid sinus. Both give off branches that supply different areas of the scalp. The external carotid branches off to form the superficial temporal, posterior auricular, occipital, and the angular artery.

The superficial temporal artery, the terminal branch of the external carotid artery, passes over the posterior aspect of the zygomatic and divides into the frontal and parietal branches. The frontal is a terminal branch that runs a tortuous course in an anterosuperior direction across the temple. It supplies the anterior temple, superior to the eyebrows, while the parietal branch supplies the parietal region of the scalp. The posterior auricular artery originates superior to the stylohyoid and digastric muscles and travels to the deep tissues that intersect between the mastoid process and the cartilage of the ear. It supplies scalp posterior and superior to the auricle. The posterior auricular artery proximally gives off the occipital artery. The occipital artery ascends superiorly to penetrate the fascia between the trapezius and sternocleidomastoid. From there it tortuously ascends, and supplies the superficial fascia of the posterior scalp superior to the nuchal line, while also anastomosing with the superficial, posterior auricular arteries and the contralateral occipital artery. The posterior scalp inferior to the nuchal line is supplied by an association of vessels that also supply the trapezius and splenius capitis muscles. These vessels derive from the transverse cervical and posterior intercostal arteries.

The internal carotid artery gives rise to the ophthalmic artery that branches into the supratrochlear and supraorbital arteries that supply the anterior portion of the scalp. Both arteries arise from the skull through the supraorbital foramen and anastomose with their contralateral arteries and the superficial temporal artery to dominate the supply to the anterior scalp.

The scalp drains into superficial and deep venous systems. The superficial veins follow their respective arteries. The supraorbital and supratrochlear veins drain the superficial scalp anteriorly. While the superficial temporal, occipital, posterior auricular drain the superficial scalp posteriorly. Like the artery, the superficial temporal vein has parietal and frontal branches. The frontal vein communicates with the dural sinuses via a connection with the parietal emissary vein. This vein, found in the loose areolar connective tissue layer, runs superiorly along the lateral side of the head where it penetrates the cranium and communicates with the superior sagittal sinus.

The pterygoid venous plexus is responsible for draining the deep scalp. It is between the temporalis and lateral pterygoid muscles. The plexus is comprised of veins that are named after tributaries of the maxillary artery. These veins include the middle meningeal, sphenopalatine, buccinator, pterygoid, deep temporal, masseteric, infraorbital, and alveolar veins. The pterygoid plexus also has a communicating vein that travels through the inferior orbital fissure to connect the cavernous sinus to the ophthalmic vein. The plexus eventually drains in the maxillary vein.

The lymphatic vessels of the scalp are located in the subcutaneous connective tissue layer and follow the venous drainage. In general, the anterior portions of the scalp drain through the parotid nodes, which continue to drain through the deep cervical and submandibular lymph nodes. The scalp posterior to the auricle drains to the occipital and posterior auricular (mastoid) lymph nodes. The mastoid lymph nodes specifically drain the area of the scalp located directly posterior to the ear and drain into the occipital lymph nodes. The occipital lymph node drainage covers the rest of the posterior scalp.

THE EPICRANIUS (OR OCCIPITOFONTAL MUSCLE) is a broad, musculofibrous layer, which will cover the whole of one side of the vertex of the skull, from the occipital bone to the eyebrow. It consists of two parts, the occipital muscle and the frontal muscle, connected by an intervening tendinous aponeurosis, the galea aponeurotica.

1. The occipital muscle, thin and quadrilateral in form, arises by tendinous fibers from the lateral two-thirds of the superior nuchal line of the occipital bone, and from the mastoid part of the temporal. It ends in the galea aponeurotica.
2. The frontal muscle is thin, of a quadrilateral form, and intimately adherent to the superficial fascia. It is broader than the occipital muscle and its fibers are longer and paler in color. It has no bony attachments. Its medial fibers are continuous with those of the Procerus; its immediate fibers blend with the corrugator and orbicular ocular muscle; and its lateral fibers are also blended with the latter muscle over the zygomatic process of the frontal bone. From these attachments the fibers are directed upward, and join the galea aponeurotica below the coronal suture. The medial margins of the frontal muscle are joined together for some distance above the root of the nose; but between the occipital muscles there is a considerable, though variable, interval, occupied by the galea aponeurotica.

THE GALEA APONEUROTICA (EPICRANIAL APONEUROSIS) will cover the upper part of the cranium; behind, it is attached, in the interval between its union with the occipitales, to the external occipital protuberance and highest nuchal lines of the occipital bone; in front, it forms a short and narrow prolongation between its union with the frontal muscle. On either side it gives origin to the auriculares anterior and superior; in this situation it loses its aponeurotic character, and is continued over the temporal fascia to the zygomatic arch as a layer of laminated areolar tissue. It is closely connected to the integument by the firm, dense, fibro-fatty layer which forms the superficial fascia of the scalp: it is attached to the pericranium by loose cellular tissue, which allows the aponeurosis, carrying with it the integument to move through a considerable distance.

ACTIONS — the frontals muscles will raise the eyebrows and the skin over the root of the nose, and at the same time draw the scalp forward, throwing the integument of the forehead into transverse wrinkles. The occipitals muscles will draw the scalp backward. By bringing alternately into action the frontales and occipitales the entire scalp may be moved forward and backward. In the ordinary action of the muscles, the eyebrows will be elevated, and at the same time the aponeurosis will be fixed by the occipitales, thus giving to the face the expression of surprise; if the action be exaggerated, the eyebrows will still further be raised, and the skin of the forehead thrown into transverse wrinkles, as in the expression of fright or horror.

THE MUSCLES OF THE EYELID

The muscles of the eyelid include the levator palpebrae superioris, the orbicular ocular muscle, and the corrugator.

THE UPPER EYELID LEVATOR MUSCLE is a triangular muscle that extends along the roof of the orbit, from the apex of orbit to the superior eyelid. It originates with a short and narrow tendon from the inferior aspect of the lesser wing of sphenoid bone, superior and anterior to the common tendinous ring. The muscle belly gradually widens as it courses anteriorly toward the eyelid. The muscle fibers penetrate the upper eyelid, inserting to its parts via two aponeurotic fascicles:

- Deep fibers attach to the anterior surface of the superior tarsus;

- Superficial fibers radiate through the eyelid and orbicular ocular muscle to finally attach to the skin of the superior eyelid.

The most lateral fibers of the muscle's aponeurosis attach to the orbital tubercle of zygomatic bone, whereas the most medial fibers attach to the medial palpebral ligament.

ACTIONS — the palpebral portion of the orbicular ocular muscle — also designated as the sphincter muscle of the eyelids, will act to close the lids gently, as in sleep or in blinking. When the entire muscle will be brought into action, the skin of the forehead, temple, and cheek will draw toward the medial angle of the orbit, and the eyelids will be firmly closed, as in photophobia. The skin thus drawn upon will be thrown into folds, especially radiating from the lateral angle of the eyelids. The Levator palpebrae superioris is the direct antagonist of this muscle; it will raise the upper eyelid and exposes the front of the bulb of the eye. Each time the eyelids will be closed through the action of the orbicularis, the medial palpebral ligament will be tightened, the wall of the lacrimal sac will thus be drawn lateralward and forward, so that a vacuum will made in it and the tears will be sucked along the lacrimal canals into it. The lacrimal part of the orbicular ocular muscle will draw the eyelids and the ends of the lacrimal canals medialward and compress them against the surface of the globe of the eye, thus placing them in the most favorable situation for receiving the tears; it will also compress the lacrimal sac. The corrugator will draw the eyebrow downward and medialward, producing the vertical wrinkles of the forehead. It is the “frowning” muscle, and may be regarded as the principal muscle in the expression of the emotion associated with “PAIN”.

THE ORBICULAR OCULAR MUSCLE arises from the nasal part of the frontal bone, from the frontal process of the maxilla in front of the lacrimal groove, and from the anterior surface and borders of a short fibrous band, the medial palpebral ligament. From this origin, the fibers are directed lateralward, forming a broad and thin layer, which occupies the eyelids or palpebrae, surrounds the circumference of the orbit, and spreads over the temple, and downward on the cheek. The palpebral portion of the muscle is thin and pale; it arises from the bifurcation of the medial palpebral ligament, forms a series of concentric curves, and is inserted into the lateral palpebral raphé. The orbital portion is thicker and of a reddish color; its fibers form a complete ellipse without interruption at the lateral palpebral commissure; the upper fibers of this portion blend with the frontal muscle and corrugator.

THE CORRUGATOR is a small, narrow, pyramidal muscle, placed at the medial end of the eyebrow, beneath the frontal muscle and orbicular ocular muscle. It arises from the medial end of the superciliary arch; and its fibers pass upward and lateralward, between the palpebral and orbital portions of the orbicular ocular muscle, and they are inserted into the deep surface of the skin, above the middle of the orbital arch.

THE MUSCLES OF THE NOSE

The muscles of the nose include: the procerus, the depressor septi, the nasal muscle, the dilatator naris posterior, and the dilatator naris anterior.

THE PROCERUS is a small pyramidal slip arising by tendinous fibers from the fascia covering the lower part of the nasal bone and upper part of the lateral nasal cartilage; it is inserted into the skin over the lower part of the forehead between the two eyebrows, its fibers decussating with those of the frontal muscle.

THE NASAL MUSCLE is a sphincter-like muscle of the nose whose function is to compress the nasal cartilages. It consists of two parts, transverse and alar. The transverse part arises from the maxilla, above and lateral to the incisive fossa; its fibers proceed upward and medialward, expanding into a thin aponeurosis which is continuous on the bridge of the nose with that of the muscle of the opposite side, and with the aponeurosis of the procerus. The alar part is attached by one end to the greater alar cartilage, and by the other to the integument at the point of the nose.

THE DEPRESSOR SEPTI arises from the incisive fossa of the maxilla; its fibers ascend to be inserted into the septum and back part of the ala of the nose. It lies between the mucous membrane and muscular structure of the lip.

THE DILATATOR NARIS POSTERIOR is placed partly beneath the upper quadrilateral labial muscle. It arises from the margin of the nasal notch of the maxilla, and from the lesser alar cartilages, and is inserted into the skin near the margin of the nostril.

THE DILATATOR NARIS ANTERIOR is a delicate fasciculus, passing from the greater alar cartilage to the integument near the margin of the nostril; it is situated in front of the preceding.

ACTIONS — the procerus will draw down the medial angle of the eyebrows and produce transverse wrinkles over the bridge of the nose. The two dilatores will enlarge the aperture of the nares. Their action in ordinary breathing will be to resist the tendency of the nostrils to close from atmospheric pressure, but in difficult breathing, as well as in the expression of some emotions, such as anger, they will contract strongly. The depressor septi will be a direct antagonist of the other muscles of the nose, drawing the ala of the nose downward, and thereby constricting the aperture of the nares. The nasal muscle will depress the cartilaginous part of the nose and draw the ala toward the septum.

THE MUSCLES OF THE MOUTH

The muscles of the mouth include the upper quadrilateral labial muscle, the lower quadrilateral labial muscle, the caninus, the triangular muscle, the zygomatic muscle, the buccinator, the chin muscle, the orbicular oral muscle, and the risorius muscle.

THE UPPER QUADRILATERAL LABIAL MUSCLE is a broad sheet, the origin of which extends from the side of the nose to the zygomatic bone. Its medial fibers form the angular head, which arises by a pointed extremity from the upper part of the frontal process of the maxilla and passing obliquely downward and lateralward divides into two slips. One of these is inserted into the greater alar cartilage and skin of the nose; the other is prolonged into the lateral part of the upper lip, blending with the infraorbital head and with the orbicular oral muscle. The intermediate portion or infraorbital head arises from the lower margin of the orbit immediately above the infraorbital foramen, some of its fibers being attached to the maxilla, others to the zygomatic bone. Its fibers converge, to be inserted into the muscular substance of the upper lip between the angular head and the caninus. The lateral fibers, forming the zygomatic head, arise from the malar surface of the zygomatic bone immediately behind the zygomaticomaxillary suture and pass downward and medialward to the upper lip.

THE CANINUS arises from the canine fossa, immediately below the infraorbital foramen; its fibers are inserted into the angle of the mouth, intermingling with those of the zygomatic muscle, triangular muscle, and orbicular oral muscle.

THE ZYGOMATIC MUSCLE arises from the zygomatic bone, in front of the zygomaticotemporal suture, and descending obliquely with a medial inclination, is inserted into the angle of the mouth, where it blends with the fibers of the caninus, orbicular oral muscle, and triangular muscle.

ACTIONS — the upper quadrilateral labial muscle will be the proper elevator of the upper lip, carrying it at the same time a little forward. Its angular head will act as a dilator of the naris; the infraorbital and zygomatic heads will assist in forming the nasolabial furrow, which will pass from the side of the nose to the upper lip and give to the face an expression of associated with the emotion of sadness. When the whole muscle will be in action it will give to the countenance an expression of contempt and disdain. The upper quadrilateral labial muscle will raise the angle of the mouth and assist the caninus in producing the nasolabial furrow. The zygomatic muscle will draw the angle of the mouth backward and upward, as in laughing.

THE CHIN MUSCLE (LEVATOR MENTI) is a small conical fasciculus, situated at the side of the frenulum of the lower lip. It arises from the incisive fossa of the mandible, and descends to be inserted into the integument of the chin. The chin muscle will raise and protrude the lower lip, and at the same time wrinkle the skin of the chin, expressing doubt or disdain.

THE LOWER QUADRILATERAL LABIAL MUSCLE will draw the lower lip directly downward and a little lateralward, as in the expression of irony. The triangular muscle will depress the angle of the mouth, being the antagonist of the caninus and zygomatic muscle; acting with the caninus, it will draw the angle of the mouth medialward. The platysma which will retract and depress the angle of the mouth belongs with this group.

ACTIONS — the orbicular oral muscle in its ordinary action will perform the direct closure of the lips; by its deep fibers, assisted by the oblique ones, it will closely apply the lips to the alveolar arch. The superficial part, consisting principally of the decussating fibers, will bring the lips together and also protrude them forward. The buccinators will compress the cheeks, so that, during the process of mastication, the food is kept under the immediate pressure of the teeth. When the cheeks have been previously distended with air, the buccinator muscles will expel it from between the lips, as in blowing a trumpet; hence the name (buccina, a trumpet). The risorius muscle will retract the angle of the mouth, and produce an unpleasant grinning expression.

THE MUSCLES OF MASTICATION — the main muscles of mastication include the masseter, the pterygoideus externus, the chin muscle, and the pterygoideus internus.

THE PAROTIDOMASSETERIC FASCIA — covering the masseter, and firmly connected with it, is a strong layer of fascia derived from the deep cervical fascia. Above, this fascia is attached to the lower border of the zygomatic arch, and behind, it invests the parotid gland.

THE MASSETER is a thick, quadrilateral muscle, consisting of two portions, superficial and deep. The superficial portion, the larger, arises by a thick, tendinous aponeurosis from the zygomatic process of the maxilla, and from the anterior two-thirds of the lower border of the zygomatic arch; its fibers pass downward and backward, to be inserted into the angle and lower half of the lateral surface of the ramus of the mandible. The deep portion is much smaller, and more muscular in texture; it arises from the posterior third of the lower border and from the whole of the medial surface of the zygomatic arch; its fibers pass downward and forward, to be inserted into the upper half of the ramus and the lateral surface of the coronoid process of the mandible. The deep portion of the muscle is partly concealed, in front, by the superficial portion; behind, it is covered by the parotid gland. The fibers of the two portions are continuous at their insertion.

THE TEMPORAL FASCIA — the temporal fascia covers the chin muscle muscle. It is a strong, fibrous investment, covered, laterally, by the auricularis anterior and superior, by the galea aponeurotica, and by part of the orbicular ocular muscle. The superficial temporal vessels and the auriculotemporal nerve cross it from below upward. Above, it is a single layer, attached to the entire extent of the superior temporal line; but below, where it is fixed to the zygomatic arch, it consists of two layers, one of which is inserted into the lateral, and the other into the medial border of the arch. A small quantity of fat, the orbital branch of the superficial temporal artery, and a filament from the zygomatic branch of the maxillary nerve, are contained between these two layers. It affords attachment by its deep surface to the superficial fibers of the chin muscle.

THE TEMPORAL MUSCLE is a broad, radiating muscle, situated at the side of the head. It arises from the whole of the temporal fossa (except that portion of it which is formed by the zygomatic bone) and from the deep surface of the temporal fascia. Its fibers converge as they descend, and end in a tendon, which passes deep to the zygomatic arch and is inserted into the medial surface, apex, and anterior border of the coronoid process, and the anterior border of the ramus of the mandible nearly as far forward as the last molar tooth.

THE EXTERNAL PTERYGOID MUSCLE is a short, thick muscle, conical in form, which extends almost horizontally between the infratemporal fossa and the condyle of the mandible. It arises by two heads; an upper from the lower part of the lateral surface of the great wing of the sphenoid and from the infratemporal crest; a lower from the lateral surface of the lateral pterygoid plate. Its fibers pass horizontally backward and lateralward, to be inserted into a depression in front of the neck of the condyle of the mandible, and into the front margin of the articular disk of the temporomandibular articulation.

THE INTERNAL PTERYGOID MUSCLE is a thick, quadrilateral muscle. It arises from the medial surface of the lateral pterygoid plate and the grooved surface of the pyramidal process of the palatine bone; it has a second slip of origin from the lateral surfaces of the pyramidal process of the palatine and tuberosity of the maxilla. Its fibers pass downward, lateralward, and backward, and are inserted, by a strong tendinous lamina, into the lower and back part of the medial surface of the ramus and angle of the mandible, as high as the mandibular foramen.

ACTIONS — the chin muscle, masseter, and pterygoideus internus will raise the mandible against the maxillae with great force. The pterygoideus externus will assist in opening the mouth, but its main action is to draw forward the condyle and articular disk so that the mandible is protruded and the inferior incisors projected in front of the upper; in this action it will be assisted by the pterygoideus internus. The mandible is retracted by the posterior fibers of the chin muscle. If the pterygoidei internus and externus of one side act, the corresponding side of the mandible will be drawn forward while the opposite condyle will remain comparatively fixed, and side-to-side movements such as occur during the trituration of food, will take place.

THE FASCIAE AND MUSCLES OF THE ANTEROLATERAL REGION OF THE NECK

The antero-lateral muscles of the neck may be arranged into the following groups: the superficial cervical, the lateral cervical, the supra- and Infrahyoid, the anterior vertebral, and the lateral vertebral.

THE SUPERFICIAL CERVICAL MUSCLE PLATYSMA — in the superficial cervical group of muscles, the superficial fascia of the neck is a thin lamina investing the platysma.

The platysma is a broad sheet arising from the fascia covering the upper parts of the major pectoral muscle and deltoideus; its fibers cross the clavicle, and proceed obliquely upward and medialward along the side of the neck. The anterior fibers interlace, below and behind the symphysis menti, with the fibers of the muscle of the opposite side; the posterior fibers cross the mandible, some being inserted into the bone below the oblique line, others into the skin and subcutaneous tissue of the lower part of the face, many of these fibers blending with the muscles about the angle and lower part of the mouth.

ACTIONS — when the entire platysma will be in action, it will produce a slight wrinkling of the surface of the skin of the neck in an oblique direction. Its anterior portion, the thickest part of the muscle, will depress the lower jaw; it will also serve to draw down the lower lip and angle of the mouth in the expression of melancholy.

THE LATERAL CERVICAL FASCIAE AND MUSCLES — the main fascia of the lateral cervical is designated as the fascia colli (deep cervical fascia). It is located under cover of the platysma, and invests the neck. It also forms sheaths for the carotid vessels, and for the structures situated in front of the vertebral column.

The investing portion of the fascia is attached behind to the ligamentum nuchae and to the spinous process of the seventh cervical vertebra. It forms a thin investment to the trapeze muscle, and at the anterior border of this muscle is continued forward as a rather loose areolar layer, covering the posterior triangle of the neck, to the posterior border of the sternocleidomastoid muscle, where it begins to assume the appearance of a fascial membrane. Along the hinder edge of the sternocleidomastoid muscle it divides to enclose the muscle, and at the anterior margin again forms a single lamella, which covers the anterior triangle of the neck, and reaches forward to the middle line, where it is continuous with the corresponding part from the opposite side of the neck. In the middle line of the neck it is attached to the symphysis menti and the body of the hyoid bone.

Above, the fascia is attached to the superior nuchal line of the occipital, to the mastoid process of the temporal, and to the whole length of the inferior border of the body of the mandible. Opposite the angle of the mandible, the fascia is very strong, and binds the anterior edge of the sternocleidomastoid muscle firmly to that bone. Between the mandible and the mastoid process it ensheathes the parotid gland — which is the layer that covers the gland extends upward under the name of the parotideomasseteric fascia and is fixed to the zygomatic arch.

Below, the fascia is attached to the acromion, the clavicle, and the manubrium sterni. Some little distance above the last it splits into two layers, superficial and deep. The former is attached to the anterior border of the manubrium, the latter to its posterior border and to the interclavicular ligament. Between these two layers is a slit-like interval, the suprasternal space; it contains a small quantity of areolar tissue, the lower portions of the anterior jugular veins and their transverse connecting branch, the sternal heads of the sternocleidomastoid muscles, and sometimes a lymph gland.

The lateral cervical muscles include the trapeze muscle and sternocleidomastoid muscles.

THE TRAPEZE MUSCLE is also designated as the triangle of the Neck. This muscle divides the quadrilateral area of the side of the neck into two triangles, an anterior and a posterior. The boundaries of the anterior triangle are, in front, the median line of the neck; above, the lower border of the body of the mandible, and an imaginary line drawn from the angle of the mandible to the sternocleidomastoid muscle; behind, the anterior border of the sternocleidomastoid muscle. The apex of the triangle is at the upper border of the sternum. The boundaries of the posterior triangle are, in front, the posterior border of the sternocleidomastoid muscle; below, the middle third of the clavicle; behind, the anterior margin of the trapeze muscle. The apex corresponds with the meeting of the sternocleidomastoid muscle and Trapeze muscle on the occipital bone.

ACTIONS — when only one sternocleidomastoid muscle will act, it will draw the head toward the shoulder of the same side, assisted by the splenial muscle and the oblique inferior muscle of the head of the opposite side. At the same time it will rotate the head so as to carry the face toward the opposite side. Acting together from their sternoclavicular attachments the muscles will flex the cervical part of the vertebral column. If the head be fixed, the two muscles will assist in elevating the thorax in forced inspiration.

THE TONGUE AND SWALLOWING MUSCLES

The tongue is very important in mastication and speech. It moves food around in the mouth and, with the buccinator muscle, holds the food in place while the teeth grind the food. The tongue will push food up to the palate and back toward the pharynx to initiate swallowing. The tongue consists of a mass of intrinsic muscles, which are located entirely within the tongue and change its shape. The extrinsic muscles are located outside the tongue but are attached to and move the tongue.

Swallowing involves a number of structures and their associated muscles, including the hyoid muscles, soft palate, pharynx (throat), and larynx (voicebox). The hyoid muscles are divided into a suprahyoid group (superior to the hyoid bone) and an infrahyoid group (inferior to the hyoid bone). When the suprahyoid muscles hold the hyoid bone in place from above, the infrahyoid muscles can elevate the larynx.

The muscles of the soft palate will close the posterior opening to the nasal cavity during swallowing, preventing food and liquid from entering the nasal cavity. When swallowing, muscles will elevate the pharynx and larynx and then constrict the pharynx. Specifically, the pharyngeal elevators will elevate the pharynx, and the pharyngeal constrictors will constrict the pharynx from superior to inferior, forcing the food into the esophagus. Pharyngeal muscles will also open the auditory tube, which connects the middle ear to the pharynx. Opening the auditory tube will equalize the pressure between the middle ear and the atmosphere.

THE SUPRAHYOID MUSCLES — the supra- and infrahyoid muscles include the digastric, the mylohyoid, the stylohyoid, and the geniohyoid groups of muscles.

THE DIGASTRIC MUSCLE consists of two fleshy bellies united by an intermediate rounded tendon. It is located below the body of the mandible, and extends, in a curved form, from the mastoid process to the symphysis menti. The posterior belly, longer than the anterior, arises from the mastoid notch of the temporal bone and passes downward and forward. The anterior belly arises from a depression on the inner side of the lower border of the mandible, close to the symphysis, and passes downward and backward. The two bellies end in an intermediate tendon which perforates the stylohyoids muscle, and is held in connection with the side of the body of the hyoid bone and the greater cornu of the hyoid bone by a fibrous loop, which is lined by a mucous sheath. A broad aponeurotic layer is given off from the tendon of the digastricus on either side, to be attached to the body of the hyoid bone and greater cornu of the hyoid bone; this will be termed the suprahyoid aponeurosis.

THE STYLOHYOID MUSCLE is a slender muscle, which is located in front of, and above the posterior belly of the digastric muscle. It arises from the back and lateral surface of the styloid process, near the base; and, passing downward and forward, is inserted into the body of the hyoid bone, at its junction with the greater cornu, and just above the omohyoid muscle. It is perforated, near its insertion, by the tendon of the digastric muscle.

THE MYLOHYOID MUSCLE, flat and triangular, is situated immediately above the anterior belly of the digastric muscle, and forms, with its fellow of the opposite side, a muscular floor for the cavity of the mouth. It arises from the whole length of the mylohyoid line of the mandible, extending from the symphysis in front to the last molar tooth behind. The posterior fibers pass medialward and slightly downward, to be inserted into the body of the hyoid bone. The middle and anterior fibers are inserted into a median fibrous raphé extending from the symphysis menti to the hyoid bone, where they joint at an angle with the fibers of the opposite muscle. This median raphé is sometimes wanting; the fibers of the two muscles are then continuous.

THE GENIOHYOID MUSCLE is a narrow muscle situated above the medial border of the mylohyoid muscle. It arises from the inferior mental spine on the back of the symphysis menti, and runs backward and slightly downward, to be inserted into the anterior surface of the body of the hyoid bone; it is in contact with its fellow of the opposite side.

Mylohyoid

ACTIONS — these suprahyoid muscles, which include the digastric, the stylohyoid, the mylohyoid, and the geniohyoid muscles will perform two very important actions. During the act of deglutition, they will raise the hyoid bone, and with it the base of the tongue; when the hyoid bone is fixed by its depressors and those of the larynx, they will depress the mandible.

During the first act of deglutition, when the mass of food will be driven from the mouth into the pharynx, the hyoid bone and with it the tongue will be carried upward and forward by the anterior bellies of the digastric, the mylohyoid, and geniohyoid muscles.

Digastric

In the second act, when the mass will be passing through the pharynx, the direct elevation of the hyoid bone will take place by the combined action of all the muscles; and after the food has passed, the hyoid bone will be carried upward and backward by the posterior bellies of the digastric and the stylohyoid muscles, which will assist in preventing the return of the food into the mouth.

THE INFRAHYOID MUSCLES — the infrahyoid muscles include the sternohyoid, thyrohyoid, the sternothyroid, the omohyoid.

THE STERNOHYOID MUSCLE is a thin, narrow muscle, which arises from the posterior surface of the medial end of the clavicle, the posterior sternoclavicular ligament, and the upper and posterior part of the manubrium sterni. Passing upward and medialward, it is inserted, by short, tendinous fibers, into the lower border of the body of the hyoid bone. Below, this muscle is separated from its fellow by a considerable interval; but the two muscles come into contact with one another in the middle of their course, and from this upward, lie side by side.

THE THYROHYOID MUSCLE is a small, quadrilateral muscle appearing like an upward continuation of the sternothyroid muscle. It arises from the oblique line on the lamina of the thyroid cartilage, and is inserted into the lower border of the greater cornu of the hyoid bone.

THE OMOHYOID MUSCLE consists of two fleshy bellies united by a central tendon. It arises from the upper border of the scapula, and occasionally from the superior transverse ligament which crosses the scapular notch, its extent of attachment to the scapula varying from a few millimetres to 2.5 cm. From this origin, the inferior belly forms a flat, narrow fasciculus, which inclines forward and slightly upward across the lower part of the neck, being bound down to the clavicle by a fibrous expansion; it then passes behind the sternocleidomastoid muscle, becomes tendinous and changes its direction, forming an obtuse angle. It ends in the superior belly, which passes almost vertically upward, close to the lateral border of the sternohyoid muscle, to be inserted into the lower border of the body of the hyoid bone, lateral to the insertion of the sternohyoid muscle. The central tendon of this muscle varies much in length and form, and is held in position by a process of the deep cervical fascia, which sheaths it, and is prolonged down to be attached to the clavicle and first rib; it is by this means that the angular form of the muscle is maintained.

ACTIONS — these infrahyoid muscles will depress the larynx and hyoid bone, after they have been drawn up with the pharynx in the act of deglutition. The omohyoidei not only will depress the hyoid bone, but will carry it backward and to one or the other side. They are concerned especially in prolonged inspiratory efforts; for by rendering the lower part of the cervical fascia tense they lessen the inward suction of the soft parts, which would otherwise compress the great vessels and the apices of the lungs. The thyreohyoid muscle may act as an elevator of the thyroid cartilage, when the hyoid bone ascends, drawing the thyroid cartilage up behind the hyoid bone. The sternothyroid muscle will act as a depressor of the thyroid cartilage.

THE ANTERIOR VERTEBRAL MUSCLES

The anterior vertebral muscles include the long muscle of the neck, the rectilinear anterior muscle of the head, the longus capitis, and the rectilinear lateral muscle of the head.

THE LONG MUSCLE OF THE NECK is situated on the anterior surface of the vertebral column, between the atlas and the third thoracic vertebra. It is broad in the middle, narrow and pointed at either end, and consists of three portions, a superior oblique, an inferior oblique, and a vertical.

THE LONG MUSCLE OF THE HEAD (rectus capitis anticus major), broad and thick above, narrow below, arises by four tendinous slips, from the anterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth cervical vertebrae, and ascends, converging toward its fellow of the opposite side, to be inserted into the inferior surface of the basilar part of the occipital bone.

THE RECTILINEAR ANTERIOR MUSCLE OF THE HEAD (rectus capitis anticus minor) is a short, flat muscle, situated immediately behind the upper part of the longus capitis. It arises from the anterior surface of the lateral mass of the atlas, and from the root of its transverse process, and passing obliquely upward and medialward, is inserted into the inferior surface of the basilar part of the occipital bone immediately in front of the foramen magnum.

THE RECTILINEAR LATERAL MUSCLE OF THE HEAD, a short, flat muscle, arises from the upper surface of the transverse process of the atlas, and is inserted into the under surface of the jugular process of the occipital bone.

ACTIONS — the long muscle of the head and rectilinear anterior muscle of the head are the direct antagonists of the muscles at the back of the neck, serving to restore the head to its natural position after it has been drawn backward. These muscles also will flex the head, and from their obliquity, rotate it, so as to turn the face to one or the other side. The rectilinear lateral muscle, acting on one side, will bend the head laterally. The long muscle of the neck will flex and slightly rotate the cervical portion of the vertebral column.

THE LATERAL VERTEBRAL MUSCLES

The lateral vertebral muscles include the anterior scalene muscle, the medial scalene muscle, and the posterior scalene muscle.

THE ANTERIOR SCALENE MUSCLE is located deeply at the side of the neck, behind the sternocleidomastoid muscle. It arises from the anterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the third, fourth, fifth, and sixth cervical vertebrae, and descending, almost vertically, is inserted by a narrow, flat tendon into the scalene tubercle on the inner border of the first rib, and into the ridge on the upper surface of the rib in front of the subclavian groove.

THE MEDIAL SCALENE MUSCLE, the largest and longest of the three scalene muscles, arises from the posterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the lower six cervical vertebrae, and descending along the side of the vertebral column, is inserted by a broad attachment into the upper surface of the first rib, between the tubercle and the subclavian groove.

THE POSTERIOR SCALENE MUSCLE, the smallest and most deeply seated of the three scalene muscles, arises, by two or three separate tendons, from the posterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the lower two or three cervical vertebrae, and is inserted by a thin tendon into the outer surface of the second rib, behind the attachment of the serratus anterior.

ACTIONS — When the scalene muscle will act from above, these lateral vertebral muscles will elevate the first and second ribs, and are, therefore, inspiratory muscles. Acting from below, they will bend the vertebral column to one or other side; if the muscles of both sides act, the vertebral column will be slightly flexed.

THE FASCIAE AND MUSCLES OF THE TRUNK.

The muscles of the trunk may be arranged in six groups: deep muscles of the back, suboccipital muscles, muscles of the thorax, muscles of the abdomen, muscles of the pelvis, and muscles of the perineum.

THE GROUP OF DEEP MUSCLES OF THE BACK — the fascia in this group of muscles is the lumbodorsal fascia (lumbar aponeurosis and vertebral fascia). It is a deep investing membrane which covers the deep muscles of the back of the trunk. Above, it passes in front of the serratus posterior superior and is continuous with a similar investing layer on the back of the neck: the nuchal fascia.

In the thoracic region the lumbodorsal fascia is a thin fibrous lamina which serves to bind down the extensor muscles of the vertebral column and to separate them from the muscles connecting the vertebral column to the upper extremity. It contains both longitudinal and transverse fibers, and is attached, medially, to the spinous processes of the thoracic vertebrae; laterally to the angles of the ribs.

In the lumbar region the fascia (lumbar aponeurosis) is in two layers, anterior and posterior. The posterior layer is attached to the spinous processes of the lumbar and sacral vertebrae and to the supraspinal ligament; the anterior layer is attached, medially, to the tips of the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae and to the intertransverse ligaments, below, to the iliolumbar ligament, and above, to the lumbocostal ligament. The two layers unite at the lateral margin of the Sacrospinalis, to form the tendon of origin of the abdominal transverse. The aponeurosis of origin of the serratus posterior inferior and the important muscle of the back are intimately blended with the lumbodorsal fascia.

The deep or intrinsic muscles of the back consist of a complex group of muscles extending from the pelvis to the skull. They are: splenial muscle of the head, splenial cervical muscle, sacrospinal muscle, semispinal muscle, multifidus, rotators muscles, interspinal muscles, and intertransversal muscles.

THE SPLENIAL MUSCLE OF THE HEAD arises from the lower half of the ligamentum nuchae, from the spinous process of the seventh cervical vertebra, and from the spinous processes of the upper three or four thoracic vertebrae. The fibers of the muscle are directed upward and lateralward and are inserted, under cover of the sternocleidomastoid muscles, into the mastoid process of the temporal bone, and into the rough surface on the occipital bone just below the lateral third of the superior nuchal line.

THE SPLENIAL CERVICAL MUSCLE arises by a narrow tendinous band from the spinous processes of the third to the sixth thoracic vertebrae; it is inserted, by tendinous fasciculi, into the posterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the upper two or three cervical vertebrae.

ACTIONS — The splenii of the two sides, acting together, will draw the head directly backward, assisting the trapeze muscle and semispinal muscle of the head; acting separately, they will draw the head to one side, and slightly rotate it, turning the face to the same side. They will also assist in supporting the head in the erect position.

THE SACROSPINAL MUSCLE AND ITS PROLONGATIONS, in the thoracic and cervical regions, are located in the groove on the side of the vertebral column. They are covered in the lumbar and thoracic regions by the lumbodorsal fascia and in the cervical region by the nuchal fascia. This large muscular and tendinous mass varies in size and structure at different parts of the vertebral column. In the sacral region it is narrow and pointed, and at its origin chiefly tendinous in structure. In the lumbar region it is larger, and forms a thick fleshy mass which, on being followed upward, is subdivided into three columns; these gradually diminish in size as they ascend to be inserted into the vertebrae and ribs.

THE SEMISPINAL MUSCLE OF THE BACK consists of thin, narrow, fleshy fasciculi, interposed between tendons of considerable length. It arises by a series of small tendons from the transverse processes of the sixth to the tenth thoracic vertebrae, and is inserted, by tendons, into the spinous processes of the upper four thoracic and lower two cervical vertebrae.

THE SEMISPINAL CERVICAL MUSCLE, thicker than the preceding, arises by a series of tendinous and fleshy fibers from the transverse processes of the upper five or six thoracic vertebrae, and is inserted into the cervical spinous processes, from the axis to the fifth inclusive. The fasciculus connected with the axis is the largest, and is chiefly muscular in structure.

THE SEMISPINAL MUSCLE OF THE HEAD is situated at the upper and back part of the neck, beneath the plexus, and medial to the longest cervical muscle and the muscle of the head. It arises by a series of tendons from the tips of the transverse processes of the upper six or seven thoracic and the seventh cervical vertebrae, and from the articular processes of the three cervical above this. The tendons, uniting, form a broad muscle, which passes upward, and is inserted between the superior and inferior nuchal lines of the occipital bone. The medial part, usually more or less distinct from the remainder of the muscle, is frequently termed the spinal muscle of the head; it is also named the biventer cervicis since it is traversed by an imperfect tendinous inscription.

THE MULTIFIDUS consists of a number of fleshy and tendinous fasciculi, which fill up the groove on either side of the spinous processes of the vertebrae, from the sacrum to the axis. In the sacral region, these fasciculi arise from the back of the sacrum, as low as the fourth sacral foramen, from the aponeurosis of origin of the Sacrospinalis, from the medial surface of the posterior superior iliac spine, and from the posterior sacroiliac ligaments; in the lumbar region, from all the mamillary processes; in the thoracic region, from all the transverse processes; and in the cervical region, from the articular processes of the lower four vertebrae. Each fasciculus passing obliquely upward and medialward is inserted into the whole length of the spinous process of one of the vertebrae above. These fasciculi vary in length: the most superficial, the longest, pass from one vertebra to the third or fourth above; those next in order run from one vertebra to the second or third above; while the deepest connect two contiguous vertebrae.

THE ROTATORS MUSCLES are located beneath the multifidus and are found only in the thoracic region; they are eleven in number on either side. Each muscle is small and somewhat quadrilateral in form; it arises from the upper and back part of the transverse process, and is inserted into the lower border and lateral surface of the lamina of the vertebra above, the fibers extending as far as the root of the spinous process. The first is found between the first and second thoracic vertebrae; the last, between the eleventh and twelfth. Sometimes the number of these muscles is diminished by the absence of one or more from the upper or lower end.

THE INTERSPINALS MUSCLES are short muscular fasciculi, placed in pairs between the spinous processes of the contiguous vertebrae, one on either side of the interspinal ligament. In the cervical region they are most distinct, and consist of six pairs, the first being situated between the axis and third vertebra, and the last between the seventh cervical and the first thoracic. They are small narrow bundles, attached, above and below, to the apices of the spinous processes. In the thoracic region, they are found between the first and second vertebrae, and sometimes between the second and third, and between the eleventh and twelfth. In the lumbar region there are four pairs in the intervals between the five lumbar vertebrae. There is also occasionally one between the last thoracic and first lumbar, and one between the fifth lumbar and the sacrum.

THE EXTENSOR COCCYGIS is a slender muscular fasciculus. It extends over the lower part of the posterior surface of the sacrum and coccyx. It arises by tendinous fibers from the last segment of the sacrum, or first piece of the coccyx, and passes downward to be inserted into the lower part of the coccyx.

THE INTERTRANSVERSAL MUSCLES are small muscles placed between the transverse processes of the vertebrae. In the cervical region they are best developed, consisting of rounded muscular and tendinous fasciculi, and are placed in pairs, passing between the anterior and the posterior tubercles respectively of the transverse processes of two contiguous vertebrae, and separated from one another by an anterior primary division of the cervical nerve, which lies in the groove between them. The muscles connecting the anterior tubercles are termed the intertransversal muscles anteriores; those between the posterior tubercles, the posterior intertransversal muscles; both sets are supplied by the anterior divisions of the spinal nerves. There are seven pairs of these muscles, the first pair being between the atlas and axis, and the last pair between the seventh cervical and first thoracic vertebrae. In the thoracic region they are present between the transverse processes of the lower three thoracic vertebrae, and between the transverse processes of the last thoracic and the first lumbar. In the lumbar region they are arranged in pairs, on either side of the vertebral column, one set occupying the entire interspace between the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae, the lateral intertransversal muscles; the other set, intertransversal muscles mediales, passing from the accessory process of one vertebra to the mammillary of the vertebra below. The lateral intertransversal muscles are supplied by the anterior divisions and the medial intertransversal muscles by the posterior divisions of the spinal nerves.

As we have indicated, these muscles are manifestations of metaphors of those 64 equilibrium regions, which characterize “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Space” of a first “Formative Divine Particle” with respect to the “Generative Divine Particle” and through which the 64 equilibrium regions will pass.

THE SUBOCCIPITAL GROUP OF MUSCLES

The suboccipital group comprises: the rectilinear posterior major muscle of the head, the rectilinear posterior minor muscle of the head, the inferior oblique muscle of the head, and the superior oblique muscle of the head.

THE RECTILINEAR POSTERIOR MAJOR MUSCLE OF THE HEAD arises by a pointed tendon from the spinous process of the axis, and, becoming broader as it ascends, it is inserted into the lateral part of the inferior nuchal line of the occipital bone and the surface of the bone immediately below the line. As the muscles of the two sides pass upward and lateralward, they leave between them a triangular space, in which the recti capitis posteriores minores are seen.

THE RECTILINEAR POSTERIOR MINOR MUSCLE OF THE HEAD arises by a narrow pointed tendon from the tubercle on the posterior arch of the atlas, and, widening as it ascends, is inserted into the medial part of the inferior nuchal line of the occipital bone and the surface between it and the foramen magnum.

THE INFERIOR OBLIQUE MUSCLE OF THE HEAD, the larger of the two oblique muscles, arises from the apex of the spinous process of the axis, and passes lateralward and slightly upward, to be inserted into the lower and back part of the transverse process of the atlas.

THE SUPERIOR OBLIQUE MUSCLE OF THE HEAD, narrow below, wide and expanded above, arises by tendinous fibers from the upper surface of the transverse process of the atlas, joining with the insertion of the preceding. It passes upward and medialward, and is inserted into the occipital bone, between the superior and inferior nuchal lines, lateral to the semispinal muscle of the head.

THE SUBOCCIPITAL TRIANGLE is located between the obliqui and the rectilinear posterior major muscle of the head. It is bounded, above and medially, by the rectilinear posterior major muscle of the head; above and laterally, by the superior oblique muscle of the head; below and laterally, by the inferior oblique muscle of the head. It is covered by a layer of dense fibro-fatty tissue, situated beneath the semispinal muscle of the head. The floor is formed by the posterior occipito-atlantal membrane, and the posterior arch of the atlas. In the deep groove on the upper surface of the posterior arch of the atlas are the vertebral artery and the first cervical or suboccipital nerve.

ACTIONS — The sacrospinal muscle and its upward continuations and the spinales will serve to maintain the vertebral column in the erect posture; they will also serve to bend the trunk backward when it will be required to counterbalance the influence of any weight at the front of the body — as, for instance, when a heavy weight will be suspended from the neck, or when there will be any great abdominal distension, as in pregnancy in the case of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective, or in dropsy; the peculiar gait under such circumstances will depend upon the vertebral column being drawn backward, by the counterbalancing action of the sacrospinal muscles.

The muscles which form the continuation of the sacrospinales on to the head and neck will steady those parts and fix them in the upright position. If the Iliocostalis lumborum and the longest muscle of the back of one side act, they will serve to draw down the chest and vertebral column to the corresponding side. The iliocostales cervicis, taking their fixed points from the cervical vertebrae, will elevate those ribs to which they are attached; taking their fixed points from the ribs, both muscles will help to extend the neck; while one muscle bends the neck to its own side. When both longest cervical muscles will act from below, they will bend the neck backward. When both longest muscles of the head will act from below, they will bend the head backward; while, if only one muscle acts, the face will be turned to the side on which the muscle is acting, and then the head will be bent to the shoulder.

The two rectilinear muscles will draw the head backward. The rectilinear posterior major muscle of the head, owing to its obliquity, will rotate the skull, with the atlas, around the odontoid process, turning the face to the same side. The multifidus will act successively upon the different parts of the column; thus, the sacrum will furnish a fixed point from which the fasciculi of this muscle will act upon the lumbar region; which in turn will become the fixed point for the fasciculi moving the thoracic region, and so on throughout the entire length of the column. The multifidus also will serve to rotate the column, so that the front of the trunk will be turned to the side opposite to that from which the muscle will act, this muscle being assisted in its action by the external oblique abdominal muscle.

The superior oblique muscle of the head will draw the head backward and to its own side. The inferior oblique muscle will rotate the atlas, and with it the skull, around the odontoid process, turning the face to the same side. When the semispinal muscles of the two sides will act together, they will help to extend the vertebral column; when the muscles of only one side will act, they will rotate the thoracic and cervical parts of the column, turning the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment" to the opposite side. The semispinal muscles of the head will draw the head directly backward; if one muscle acts, it will draw the head to one side, and rotates it so that the face will be turned to the opposite side. The interspinal muscles by approximating the spinous processes will help to extend the column. The intertransversal muscles will approximate the transverse processes, and help to bend the column to one side. The rotators muscles will assist the multifidus to rotate the vertebral column, so that the front of the trunk is turned to the side opposite to that from which the muscles act.

THE GROUP OF MUSCLES OF THE THORAX

The muscles belonging to this group are the external intercostals, the internal intercostals, the subcostales, the thoracic transverse muscles, the levatores costarum, the serratus posterior superior, the serratus posterior inferior, and the diaphragm.

In each intercostal space thin but firm layers of fascia cover the outer surface of the external intercostale and the inner surface of the internal intercostale; and a third, more delicate layer, is interposed between the two planes of muscular fibers.

THE INTERCOSTALS MUSCLES are two thin planes of muscular and tendinous fibers occupying each of the intercostal spaces. They are named external and internal from their surface relations — the external being superficial to the internal.

The external intercostals are eleven in number on either side. They extend from the tubercles of the ribs behind, to the cartilages of the ribs in front, where they end in thin membranes, the anterior intercostal membranes, which are continued forward to the sternum. Each arises from the lower border of a rib, and is inserted into the upper border of the rib below. In the two lower spaces they extend to the ends of the cartilages, and in the upper two or three spaces they do not quite reach the ends of the ribs. They are thicker than the internal intercostals, and their fibers are directed obliquely downward and lateralward on the back of the thorax, and downward, forward, and medialward on the front.

The internal intercostals are also eleven in number on either side. They commence anteriorly at the sternum, in the interspaces between the cartilages of the true ribs, and at the anterior extremities of the cartilages of the false ribs, and extend backward as far as the angles of the ribs, whence they are continued to the vertebral column by thin aponeuroses, the posterior intercostal membranes. Each arises from the ridge on the inner surface of a rib, as well as from the corresponding costal cartilage, and is inserted into the upper border of the rib below. Their fibers are also directed obliquely, but pass in a direction opposite to those of the external intercostals.

The subcostales consist of muscular and aponeurotic fasciculi, which are well-developed only in the lower part of the thorax; each arises from the inner surface of one rib near its angle, and is inserted into the inner surface of the second or third rib below. Their fibers run in the same direction as those of the internal intercostals.

THE THORACIC TRANSVERSE MUSCLE is a thin plane of muscular and tendinous fibers, situated upon the inner surface of the front wall of the chest. It arises on either side from the lower third of the posterior surface of the body of the sternum, from the posterior surface of the xiphoid process, and from the sternal ends of the costal cartilages of the lower three or four true ribs. Its fibers diverge upward and lateralward, to be inserted by slips into the lower borders and inner surfaces of the costal cartilages of the second, third, fourth, fifth, and sixth ribs. The lowest fibers of this muscle are horizontal in their direction, and are continuous with those of the abdominal transverse; the intermediate fibers are oblique, while the highest are almost vertical. This muscle varies in its attachments, not only in different subjects, but on opposite sides of the same subject.

THE LEVATOR COSTAL MUSCLES, twelve in number on either side, are small tendinous and fleshy bundles, which arise from the ends of the transverse processes of the seventh cervical and upper eleven thoracic vertebrae; they pass obliquely downward and lateralward, like the fibers of the external intercostal muscles, and each is inserted into the outer surface of the rib immediately below the vertebra from which it takes origin, between the tubercle and the angle. Each of the four lower muscles divides into two fasciculi, one of which is inserted as above described; the other passes down to the second rib below its origin.

THE SERRATUS POSTERIOR SUPERIOR is a thin, quadrilateral muscle, situated at the upper and back part of the thorax. It arises by a thin and broad aponeurosis from the lower part of the ligamentum nuchae, from the spinous processes of the seventh cervical and upper two or three thoracic vertebrae and from the supraspinal ligament. Inclining downward and lateralward it becomes muscular, and is inserted, by four fleshy digitations, into the upper borders of the second, third, fourth, and fifth ribs, a little beyond their angles.

THE DIAPHRAGM is a dome-shaped musculofibrous septum which separates the thoracic from the abdominal cavity, its convex upper surface forming the floor of the former, and its concave under surface the roof of the latter. Its peripheral part consists of muscular fibers which take origin from the circumference of the thoracic outlet and converge to be inserted into a central tendon.

The muscular fibers may be grouped according to their origins into three parts: sternal, costal, and lumbar. The sternal part arises by two fleshy slips from the back of the xiphoid process; the costal part from the inner surfaces of the cartilages and adjacent portions of the lower six ribs on either side, interdigitating with the transverse abdominal muscle; and the lumbar part from aponeurotic arches, named the lumbocostal arches, and from the lumbar vertebrae by two pillars or crura. There are two lumbocostal arches, a medial and a lateral, on either side.

THE MEDIAL LUMBOCOSTAL ARCH is a tendinous arch in the fascia covering the upper part of the psoas major; medially, it is continuous with the lateral tendinous margin of the corresponding crus, and is attached to the side of the body of the first or second lumbar vertebra; laterally, it is fixed to the front of the transverse process of the first and, sometimes also, to that of the second lumbar vertebra.

THE LATERAL LUMBOCOSTAL ARCH arches across the upper part of the lumbar quadrilateral muscle, and is attached, medially, to the front of the transverse process of the first lumbar vertebra, and, laterally, to the tip and lower margin of the twelfth rib.

THE CRURA are tendinous in structure at their origins. They blend with the anterior longitudinal ligament of the vertebral column. The right crus, which is larger and longer than the left, arises from the anterior surfaces of the bodies and intervertebral fibrocartilages of the upper three lumbar vertebrae, while the left crus arises from the corresponding parts of the upper two only. The medial tendinous margins of the crura pass forward and medialward, and meet in the middle line to form an arch across the front of the aorta; this arch is often poorly defined.

Abdominal view showing the lumbar, costal, and sternal portions of the muscular diaphragm

The diaphragm is the principal muscle of inspiration, and presents the form of a dome concave toward the abdomen. The central part of the dome is tendinous, and the pericardium is attached to its upper surface; the circumference is muscular. During inspiration the lowest ribs will be fixed, and from these and the crura the muscular fibers will contract and draw downward and forward the central tendon with the attached pericardium. In this movement the curvature of the diaphragm will be scarcely altered, the dome moving downward nearly parallel to its original position and pushing before it the abdominal viscera. The descent of the abdominal viscera will be permitted by the elasticity of the abdominal wall, but the limit of this will be soon reached. The central tendon applied to the abdominal viscera then will become a fixed point for the action of the diaphragm, the effect of which will be to elevate the lower ribs and through them to push forward the body of the sternum and the upper ribs. The right cupola of the diaphragm, lying on the liver, has a greater resistance to overcome than the left, which lies over the stomach, but to compensate for this the right crus and the fibers of the right side will be stronger than those of the left.

THE CENTRAL TENDON OF THE DIAPHRAGM is a thin but strong aponeurosis situated near the center of the vault formed by the muscle, but somewhat closer to the front than to the back of the thorax, so that the posterior muscular fibers are the longer. It is situated immediately below the pericardium, with which it is partially blended. It is shaped somewhat like a trefoil leaf, consisting of three divisions or leaflets separated from one another by slight indentations. The right leaflet is the largest, the middle, directed toward the xiphoid process, the next in size, and the left the smallest. In structure the tendon is composed of several planes of fibers, which intersect one another at various angles and unite into rectilinear or curved bundles — an arrangement which gives it additional strength.

The diaphragm is pierced by a series of apertures to permit of the passage of structures between the thorax and abdomen. It has three large openings — the aortic hiatus, the esophageal hiatus, and the vena caval foramen — and a series of smaller ones.

The aortic hiatus is the lowest and most posterior of the large apertures; it is located at the level of the twelfth thoracic vertebra. Strictly speaking, it is not an aperture in the diaphragm but an osseaponeurotic opening between it and the vertebral column, and therefore behind the diaphragm; occasionally some tendinous fibers prolonged across the bodies of the vertebrae from the medial parts of the lower ends of the crura pass behind the aorta, and thus convert the hiatus into a fibrous ring. The hiatus is situated slightly to the left of the middle line, and is bounded in front by the crura, and behind by the body of the first lumbar vertebra. Through it pass the aorta, the azygos vein, and the thoracic duct; occasionally the azygos vein is transmitted through the right crus.

The esophageal hiatus is situated in the muscular part of the diaphragm at the level of the tenth thoracic vertebra, and is elliptical in shape. It is placed above, in front, and a little to the left of the aortic hiatus, and transmits the esophagus, the vagus nerves, and some small esophageal arteries.

The vena caval foramen is the highest of the three, and is situated about the level of the fibrocartilage between the eighth and ninth thoracic vertebrae. It is quadrilateral in form, and is placed at the junction of the right and middle leaflets of the central tendon, so that its margins are tendinous. It transmits the inferior vena cava, the wall of which is adherent to the margins of the opening, and some branches of the right phrenic nerve.

Of the lesser apertures, two in the right crus transmit the greater and lesser right splanchnic nerves; three in the left crus give passage to the greater and lesser left splanchnic nerves and the hemiazygos vein. The gangliated trunks of the sympathetic usually enter the abdominal cavity behind the diaphragm, under the medial lumbocostal arches.

On either side two small intervals exist at which the muscular fibers of the diaphragm are deficient and are replaced by areolar tissue. One between the sternal and costal parts transmits the superior epigastric branch of the internal mammary artery and some lymphatics from the abdominal wall and convex surface of the liver. The other, between the fibers springing from the medial and lateral lumbocostal arches, is less constant; when this interval exists, the upper and back part of the kidney is separated from the pleura by areolar tissue only.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE ABDOMEN

The muscles of the abdomen may be divided into two groups: the anterolateral muscles and the posterior muscles.

THE ANTERO-LATERAL MUSCLES OF THE ABDOMEN — the muscles of this group are: the external oblique, the internal oblique, the pyramidal muscle, the transverse, and the rectilinear muscle.

The superficial fascia of the abdomen consists, over the greater part of the abdominal wall, of a single layer containing a variable amount of fat; but near the groin it is easily divisible into two layers, between which are found the superficial vessels and nerves and the superficial inguinal lymph glands.

The superficial layer is thick, areolar in texture, and contains in its meshes a varying quantity of adipose tissue. Below, it passes over the inguinal ligament, and is continuous with the superficial fascia of the thigh. The deep layer is thinner and more membranous in character than the superficial, and contains a considerable quantity of yellow elastic fibers. It is loosely connected by areolar tissue to the aponeurosis of the obliquus externus abdominis, but in the middle line it is more intimately adherent to the white line and to the symphysis pubis, and is prolonged on to the dorsum of the penis, forming the fundiform ligament; above, it is continuous with the superficial fascia over the rest of the trunk; below and laterally, it blends with the wide fascia of the thigh a little below the inguinal ligament; medially and below, it is continued over the penis and spermatic cord to the scrotum, where it helps to form the dartos.

THE EXTERNAL OR DESCENDING OBLIQUE MUSCLE, situated on the lateral and anterior parts of the abdomen, is the largest and the most superficial of the three flat muscles in this region. It is broad, thin, and irregularly quadrilateral, its muscular portion occupying the side, its aponeurosis occupying the anterior wall of the abdomen. It arises, by eight fleshy digitations, from the external surfaces and inferior borders of the lower eight ribs; these digitations are arranged in an oblique line which runs downward and backward, the upper ones being attached close to the cartilages of the corresponding ribs, the lowest to the apex of the cartilage of the last rib, the intermediate ones to the ribs at some distance from their cartilages. The five superior serrations increase in size from above downward, and are received between corresponding processes of the serratus anterior; the three lower ones diminish in size from above downward and receive between them corresponding processes from the important muscle of the back. From these attachments the fleshy fibers proceed in various directions. Those from the lowest ribs pass nearly vertically downward, and are inserted into the anterior half of the outer lip of the iliac crest; the middle and upper fibers, directed downward and forward, end in an aponeurosis, opposite a line drawn from the prominence of the ninth costal cartilage to the anterior superior iliac spine.

The aponeurosis of the external or descending oblique muscle is a thin but strong membranous structure, the fibers of which are directed downward and medialward. It is joined with that of the opposite muscle along the middle line, and covers the whole of the front of the abdomen; above, it is covered by and gives origin to the lower fibers of the major pectoral muscle; below, its fibers are closely aggregated together, and extend obliquely across from the anterior superior iliac spine to the public tubercle and the pectineal line. In the middle line, it interlaces with the aponeurosis of the opposite muscle, forming the white line, which extends from the xiphoid process to the symphysis pubis.

THE RECTILINEAR ABDOMINAL MUSCLE is a long flat muscle, which extends along the whole length of the front of the abdomen, and is separated from its fellow of the opposite side by the white line. It is much broader, but thinner, above than below, and arises by two tendons; the lateral or larger is attached to the crest of the pubis, the medial interlaces with its fellow of the opposite side, and is connected with the ligaments covering the front of the symphysis pubis. The muscle is inserted by three portions of unequal size into the cartilages of the fifth, sixth, and seventh ribs. The upper portion, attached principally to the cartilage of the fifth rib, usually has some fibers of insertion into the anterior extremity of the rib itself. Some fibers are occasionally connected with the costoxiphoid ligaments, and the side of the xiphoid process.

The rectilinear muscle is crossed by fibrous bands, three in number, which are named the tendinous inscriptions; one is usually situated opposite the umbilical muscle, one at the extremity of the xiphoid process, and the third about midway between the xiphoid process and the umbilical muscle. These inscriptions pass transversely or obliquely across the muscle in a zigzag course; they rarely extend completely through its substance and may pass only halfway across it; they are intimately adherent in front to the sheath of the muscle.

THE PYRAMIDAL MUSCLE is a small triangular muscle, placed at the lower part of the abdomen, in front of the rectilinear muscle, and contained in the sheath of that muscle. It arises by tendinous fibers from the front of the pubis and the anterior pubic ligament; the fleshy portion of the muscle passes upward, diminishing in size as it ascends, and ends by a pointed extremity which is inserted into the white line, midway between the umbilical muscle and pubis.

ACTIONS — When the pelvis and thorax are fixed, the abdominal muscles will compress the abdominal viscera by constricting the cavity of the abdomen, in which action they are materially assisted by the descent of the diaphragm. By these means, assistance will be given in expelling the feces from the rectum, the urine from the bladder, the fetus from the uterus, and the contents of the stomach in vomiting.

If the pelvis and vertebral column be fixed, these muscles will compress the lower part of the thorax, materially assisting expiration. If the pelvis alone be fixed, the thorax will be bent directly forward, when the muscles of both sides will act; when the muscles of only one side will contract, the trunk will be bent toward that side and rotated toward the opposite side.

If the thorax be fixed, the muscles, acting together, will draw the pelvis upward, as in climbing; or, acting singly, they will draw the pelvis upward, and bend the vertebral column to one side or the other. The recti, acting from below, will depress the thorax, and consequently flex the vertebral column; when acting from above, they will flex the pelvis upon the vertebral column. The pyramidales are tensors of the white line.

THE INTERNAL OR DEEP ABDOMINAL RING is situated in the transversalis fascia, midway between the anterior superior iliac spine and the symphysis pubis, and about 1.25 cm above the inguinal ligament. It is of an oval form, the long axis of the oval being vertical; it varies in size in different subjects, and is much larger in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective than in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. It is bounded, above and laterally, by the arched lower margin of the transverse; below and medially, by the inferior epigastric vessels. It transmits the spermatic cord in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective and the round ligament of the uterus in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. From its circumference a thin funnel-shaped membrane, the infundibuliform fascia, is continued around the cord and testis, enclosing them in a distinct covering.

M THE INGUINAL CANAL contains the spermatic cord and the ilioinguinal nerve in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “MALE” adjective, and the round ligament of the uterus and the ilioinguinal nerve in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” having the “FEMALE” adjective. It is an oblique canal about 4 cm long, slanting downward and medialward, and placed parallel with and a little above the inguinal ligament; it extends from the abdominal inguinal ring to the subcutaneous inguinal ring. It is bounded, in front, by the integument and superficial fascia, by the aponeurosis of the external oblique throughout its whole length, and by the internal oblique in its lateral third; behind, by the reflected inguinal ligament, the inguinal aponeurotic falx, the transversalis fascia, the extraperitoneal connective tissue and the peritoneum; above, by the arched fibers of internal oblique and abdominal transverse; below, by the union of the transversalis fascia with the inguinal ligament, and at its medial end by the lacunar ligament.

D THE POSTERIOR MUSCLES OF THE ABDOMEN — the posterior muscles of the abdomen include the psoas major, the psoas minor, the iliacus, and the lumbar quadrilateral muscle.

The fascia covering the lumbar quadrilateral muscle is a thin layer attached, medially, to the bases of the transverse processes of the lumbar vertebrae; below, to the iliolumbar ligament; above, to the apex and lower border of the last rib. The upper margin of this fascia, which extends from the transverse process of the first lumbar vertebra to the apex and lower border of the last rib, constitutes the lateral lumbocostal arch. Laterally, it blends with the lumbodorsal fascia, the anterior layer of which intervenes between the lumbar quadrilateral muscle and the sacrospinal muscle.

The lumbar quadrilateral muscle is irregularly quadrilateral in shape, and broader below than above. It arises by aponeurotic fibers from the iliolumbar ligament and the adjacent portion of the iliac crest for about 5 cm, and is inserted into the lower border of the last rib for about half its length, and by four small tendons into the apices of the transverse processes of the upper four lumbar vertebrae.

ACTIONS — The lumbar quadrilateral muscle will draw down the last rib, and will act as a muscle of inspiration by helping to fix the origin of the diaphragm. If the thorax and vertebral column are fixed, it may act upon the pelvis, raising it toward its own side when only one muscle is put in action; and when both muscles will act together, either from below or above, they will flex the trunk.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE PELVIS

The muscles within the pelvis may be divided into two groups: the internal obturator muscle and the piriform muscle, which are muscles of the lower extremity, and the levator ani and the coccygeus, which together form the pelvic diaphragm and are associated with the pelvic viscera. These fasciae are closely related to one another and to the deep fascia of the perineum, and in addition have special connections with the fibrous coverings of the pelvic viscera.

The fascia of the pelvis may be resolved into: the fascial sheaths of the internal obturator muscle, piriform muscle, and pelvic diaphragm; and the fascia associated with the pelvic viscera.

The fascia of the internal obturator muscle covers the pelvic surface of, and is attached around the margin of the origin of, the muscle. Above, it is loosely connected to the back part of the arcuate line, and here it is continuous with the iliac fascia. In front of this, as it follows the line of origin of the internal obturator muscle, it gradually separates from the iliac fascia and the continuity between the two is retained only through the periosteum. It arches beneath the obturator vessels and nerve, completing the obturator canal, and at the front of the pelvis is attached to the back of the superior ramus of the pubis. Below, the obturator fascia is attached to the falciform process of the sacrotuberous ligament and to the pubic arch, where it becomes continuous with the superior fascia of the urogenital diaphragm. Behind, it is prolonged into the gluteal region.

The internal pudendal vessels and pudendal nerve cross the pelvic surface of the internal obturator and are enclosed in a special canal formed by the obturator fascia.

Corona section of female pelvis

The fascia of the piriform muscle is very thin and is attached to the front of the sacrum and the sides of the greater sciatic foramen; it is prolonged on the muscle into the gluteal region. At its sacral attachment around the margins of the anterior sacral foramina it comes into intimate association with and ensheathes the nerves emerging from these foramina. Hence the sacral nerves are frequently described as lying behind the fascia. The internal iliac vessels and their branches, on the other hand, lie in the subperitoneal tissue in front of the fascia, and the branches to the gluteal region emerge in special sheaths of this tissue, above and below the piriform muscle.

The diaphragmatic part of the pelvic fascia covers both surfaces of the levatores ani. The inferior layer is known as the anal fascia; it is attached above to the obturator fascia along the line of origin of the levator ani, while below it is continuous with the superior fascia of the urogenital diaphragm, and with the fascia on the sphincter ani internus.

The endopelvic part of the pelvic fascia is continued over the various pelvic viscera to form for them fibrous coverings which will be described later. It is attached to the diaphragmatic part of the pelvic fascia along the tendinous arch, and has been subdivided in accordance with the viscera to which it is related.

THE LEVATOR ANI is a broad, thin muscle, situated on the side of the pelvis. It is attached to the inner surface of the side of the lesser pelvis, and unites with its fellow of the opposite side to form the greater part of the floor of the pelvic cavity. It supports the viscera in this cavity, and surrounds the various structures which pass through it. It arises, in front, from the posterior surface of the superior ramus of the pubis lateral to the symphysis; behind, from the inner surface of the spine of the ischium; and between these two points, from the obturator fascia.

THE COCCYGEUS is situated behind the preceding. It is a triangular plane of muscular and tendinous fibers, arising by its apex from the spine of the ischium and sacrospinous ligament, and inserted by its base into the margin of the coccyx and into the side of the lowest piece of the sacrum. It assists the Levator ani and piriform muscle in closing in the back part of the outlet of the pelvis.

ACTIONS — The levatores ani will constrict the lower end of the rectum and vagina. They will elevate and invert the lower end of the rectum after it has been protruded and everted during the expulsion of the feces. They are also muscles of forced expiration. The coccygei will pull forward and support the coccyx, after it has been pressed backward during defecation or parturition. The levatores ani and coccygei together form a muscular diaphragm which supports the pelvic.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE PERINEUM — the perineum corresponds to the outlet of the pelvis. Its deep boundaries are: in front, the pubic arch and the arcuate ligament of the pubis; behind, the tip of the coccyx; and on either side, the inferior rami of the pubis and ischium, and the sacrotuberous ligament. The space is somewhat lozenge-shaped and is limited on the surface of the body by the scrotum in front, by the buttocks behind, and laterally by the medial side of the thigh. A line drawn transversely across in front of the ischial tuberosities divides the space into two portions. The posterior contains the termination of the anal canal; the anterior, which contains the external urogenital organs, is termed the urogenital region.

The muscles of the perineum may therefore be divided into two groups: those of the anal region and those of the urogenital region. The muscles of the anal region include the corrugator cutis ani, the sphincter ani externus and the sphincter ani internus. The muscles of the urogenital region include the transversus perinaei superficialis, the ischiocavernosus, the bulbocavernosus, the transversus perinaei profundus, and the sphincter urethrae membranaceae.

THE FASCIA AND MUSCLES OF THE UPPER EXTREMITY

The muscles of the upper extremity are divisible into groups, corresponding with the different regions of the limb. These are: the muscles connecting the upper extremity to the vertebral column; the muscles connecting the upper extremity to the anterior and lateral thoracic walls; the muscles of the shoulder; the muscles of the Arm; the muscles of the forearm; and, the muscles of the hand.

THE MUSCLES CONNECTING THE UPPER EXTREMITY TO THE VERTEBRAL COLUMN — in this group of muscle, the superficial fascia of the back forms a layer of considerable thickness and strength, and contains a quantity of granular fat. It is continuous with the general superficial fascia. The deep fascia is a dense fibrous layer, attached above to the superior nuchal line of the occipital bone; in the middle line it is attached to the ligamentum nuchae and supraspinal ligament, and to the spinous processes of all the vertebrae below the seventh cervical; laterally, in the neck it is continuous with the deep cervical fascia; over the shoulder it is attached to the spine of the scapula and to the acromion, and is continued downward over the deltoid muscle to the arm; on the thorax it is continuous with the deep fascia of the axilla and chest, and on the abdomen with that covering the abdominal muscles; below, it is attached to the crest of the ilium.

The muscles of this group include the trapeze muscle, the important muscle of the back, the levator scapulae, the major rhomboid muscle, and the minor rhomboid muscle.

THE TRAPEZE MUSCLE is a flat, triangular muscle, covering the upper and back part of the neck and shoulders. It arises from the external occipital protuberance and the medial third of the superior nuchal line of the occipital bone, from the ligamentum nuchae, the spinous process of the seventh cervical, and the spinous processes of all the thoracic vertebrae, and from the corresponding portion of the supraspinal ligament.

THE IMPORTANT BACK MUSCLE is a triangular, flat muscle, which covers the lumbar region and the lower half of the thoracic region, and is gradually contracted into a narrow fasciculus at its insertion into the humerus. It arises by tendinous fibers from the spinous processes of the lower six thoracic vertebrae and from the posterior layer of the lumbodorsal fascia, by which it is attached to the spines of the lumbar and sacral vertebrae, to the supraspinal ligament, and to the posterior part of the crest of the ilium. It also arises by muscular fibers from the external lip of the crest of the ilium lateral to the margin of the Sacrospinalis, and from the three or four lower ribs by fleshy digitations, which are interposed between similar processes of the external oblique abdominal muscle.

THE MAJOR RHOMBOID MUSCLE arises by tendinous fibers from the spinous processes of the second, third, fourth, and fifth thoracic vertebrae and the supraspinal ligament, and is inserted into a narrow tendinous arch, attached above to the lower part of the triangular surface at the root of the spine of the scapula; below to the inferior angle, the arch being connected to the vertebral border by a thin membrane.

THE MINOR RHOMBOID MUSCLE arises from the lower part of the ligamentum nuchae and from the spinous processes of the seventh cervical and first thoracic vertebrae. It is inserted into the base of the triangular smooth surface at the root of the spine of the scapula, and is separated from the major rhomboid muscle by a slight interval, but the adjacent margins of the two muscles are united.

THE LEVATOR SCAPULAE are situated at the back and side of the neck. It arises by tendinous slips from the transverse processes of the atlas and axis and from the posterior tubercles of the transverse processes of the third and fourth cervical vertebrae. It is inserted into the vertebral border of the scapula, between the medial angle and the triangular smooth surface at the root of the spine.

ACTIONS — The movements effected by this group of muscles connecting the upper extremity to the vertebral column are numerous, as may be conceived from their extensive attachments. When the whole trapeze muscle will be in action it will retract the scapula and will brace back the shoulder; if the head be fixed, the upper part of the muscle will elevate the point of the shoulder, as in supporting weights; when the lower fibers will contract they will assist in depressing the scapula. The middle and lower fibers of the muscle will rotate the scapula, causing elevation of the acromion. If the shoulders be fixed, the trapezii, acting together, will draw the head directly backward; or if only one acts, the head will be drawn to the corresponding side.

When the important muscle of the back will act upon the humerus, it will depress and draw it backward, and at the same time rotate it inward. It is the muscle which will be principally employed in giving a downward blow, as in felling a tree. If the arm be fixed, the muscle may act in various ways upon the trunk; thus, it may raise the lower ribs and assist in forcible inspiration; or, if both arms be fixed, the two muscles may assist the abdominal muscles and pectorales in suspending and drawing the trunk forward, as in climbing.

If the head be fixed, the levator scapulae will raise the medial angle of the scapula; if the shoulder be fixed, the muscle will incline the neck to the corresponding side and rotate it in the same direction. The rhomboidei will carry the inferior angle backward and upward, thus producing a slight rotation of the scapula upon the side of the chest, the major rhomboid muscle acting especially on the inferior angle of the scapula, through the tendinous arch by which it is inserted. The rhomboidei, acting together with the middle and inferior fibers of the trapeze muscle, will retract the scapula.

THE MUSCLES CONNECTING THE UPPER EXTREMITY TO THE ANTERIOR AND LATERAL THORACIC WALLS

The muscles of the anterior and lateral thoracic regions include the major pectoral muscle, the minor pectoral muscle, the subclavicle muscle, and the serratus anterior.

In this group of muscles connecting the upper extremity to the anterior and lateral thoracic walls, the superficial fascia of the anterior thoracic region will be continuous with that of the neck and upper extremity above, and of the abdomen below. It will enclose the mamma and give off numerous septa which will pass into the gland, supporting its various lobes. From the fascia over the front of the mamma, fibrous processes will pass forward to the integument and papilla.

The pectoral fascia is a thin lamina, covering the surface of the major pectoral muscle, and sending numerous prolongations between its fasciculi: it is attached, in the middle line, to the front of the sternum; above, to the clavicle; laterally and below, it is continuous with the fascia of the shoulder, axilla, and thorax. It is very thin over the upper part of the major pectoral muscle, but thicker in the interval between it and the important muscle of the back, where it closes in the axillary space and forms the axillary fascia; it divides at the lateral margin of the important muscle of the back into two layers, one of which passes in front of, and the other behind it; these proceed as far as the spinous processes of the thoracic vertebrae, to which they are attached.

The coracoclavicular fascia is a strong fascia situated under cover of the clavicular portion of the major pectoral muscle. It occupies the interval between the minor pectoral muscle and subclavicle muscle, and protects the axillary vessels and nerves. Traced upward, it splits to enclose the subclavicle muscle, and its two layers are attached to the clavicle, one in front of and the other behind the muscle; the latter layer fuses with the deep cervical fascia and with the sheath of the axillary vessels. Medially, it blends with the fascia covering the first two intercostal spaces, and is attached also to the first rib medial to the origin of the subclavicle muscle.

Laterally, it is very thick and dense, and is attached to the coracoid process. The portion extending from the first rib to the coracoid process is often whiter and denser than the rest, and is sometimes called the costocoracoid ligament. Below this it is thin, and at the upper border of the minor pectoral muscle it splits into two layers to invest the muscle; from the lower border of the minor pectoral muscle it is continued downward to join the axillary fascia, and lateralward to join the fascia over the short head of the biceps muscle of the arm. The coracoclavicular fascia is pierced by the cephalic vein, thoracoacromial artery and vein, and external anterior thoracic nerve.

THE MAJOR PECTORAL MUSCLE — the major pectoral muscle is a thick, fan-shaped muscle, situated at the upper and forepart of the chest. It arises from the anterior surface of the sternal half of the clavicle; from half the breadth of the anterior surface of the sternum, as low down as the attachment of the cartilage of the sixth or seventh rib; from the cartilages of all the true ribs, with the exception, frequently, of the first or seventh, or both, and from the aponeurosis of the external abdominal oblique. From this extensive origin, the fibers converge toward their insertion; those arising from the clavicle pass obliquely downward and lateralward, and are usually separated from the rest by a slight interval; those from the lower part of the sternum, and the cartilages of the lower true ribs, run upward and lateralward; while the middle fibers pass horizontally. They all end in a flat tendon, about 5 cm broad, which is inserted into the crest of the greater tubercle of the humerus.

THE MINOR PECTORAL MUSCLE — the minor pectoral muscle is a thin, triangular muscle, situated at the upper part of the thorax, beneath the major pectoral muscle. It arises from the upper margins and outer surfaces of the third, fourth, and fifth ribs, near their cartilage and from the aponeuroses covering the intercostal muscle; the fibers pass upward and lateralward and converge to form a flat tendon, which is inserted into the medial border and upper surface of the coracoid process of the scapula.

THE SUBCLAVICLE MUSCLE — the subclavicle muscle is a small triangular muscle, placed between the clavicle and the first rib. It arises by a short, thick tendon from the first rib and its cartilage at their junction, in front of the costoclavicular ligament; the fleshy fibers proceed obliquely upward and lateralward, to be inserted into the groove on the under surface of the clavicle between the costoclavicular and conoid ligaments.

THE SERRATUS ANTERIOR — Serratus anterior is a thin muscular sheet, situated between the ribs and the scapula at the upper and lateral part of the chest. It arises by fleshy digitations from the outer surfaces and superior borders of the upper eight or nine ribs, and from the aponeuroses covering the intervening Intercostales. Each digitation (except the first) arises from the corresponding rib; the first springs from the first and second ribs; and from the fascia covering the first intercostal space. From this extensive attachment the fibers pass backward, closely applied to the chest-wall, and reach the vertebral border of the scapula, and are inserted into its ventral surface in the following manner. The first digitation is inserted into a triangular area on the ventral surface of the medial angle. The next two digitations spread out to form a thin, triangular sheet, the base of which is directed backward and is inserted into nearly the whole length of the ventral surface of the vertebral border. The lower five or six digitations converge to form a fan-shaped mass, the apex of which is inserted, by muscular and tendinous fibers, into a triangular impression on the ventral surface of the inferior angle. The lower four slips interdigitate at their origins with the upper five slips of the external oblique abdominal muscle.

ACTIONS — All these muscles connecting the upper extremity to the anterior and lateral thoracic walls are designed to facilitate the movement of the arm.

If the arm has been raised by the deltoid muscle, the major pectoral muscle will, conjointly with the important back muscle and teres major, will depress it to the side of the chest. If acting alone, they will adduct and draw forward the arm, bringing it across the front of the chest, and at the same time rotate it inward. The minor pectoral muscle will depress the point of the shoulder, drawing the scapula downward and medialward toward the thorax, and throwing the inferior angle backward. The subclavicle muscle will depress the shoulder, carrying it downward and forward. When the arms are fixed, all three of these muscles will act upon the ribs; drawing them upward and expanding the chest, and thus becoming very important agents in forced inspiration.

The serratus anterior, as a whole, will carry the scapula forward, and at the same time it will raise the vertebral border of the bone. It is therefore concerned in the action of pushing. Its lower and stronger fibers will move forward the lower angle and assist the trapeze muscle in rotating the bone at the sternoclavicular joint, and thus assist this muscle in raising the acromion and supporting weights upon the shoulder. It will also be an assistant to the deltoid muscle in raising the arm, inasmuch as during the action of this latter muscle it will fix the scapula and so steady the glenoid cavity on which the head of the humerus will rotate. After the deltoid muscle has raised the arm to a right angle with the trunk, the serratus anterior and the trapeze muscle, by rotating the scapula, will raise the arm into an almost vertical position. When the shoulders are fixed the lower fibers of the serratus anterior may assist in raising and everting the ribs.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE SHOULDER

In this group are included the deltoid, the subscapular muscle, the supraspinal muscle, the infraspinal muscle, the fine minor muscle, and the fine major muscle.

In this group of muscles, the deep fascia covering the deltoid muscle invests the muscle, and sends numerous septa between its fasciculi. In front it is continuous with the fascia covering the major pectoral muscle; behind, where it is thick and strong, with that covering the infraspinal muscle; above, it is attached to the clavicle, the acromion, and the spine of the scapula; below, it is continuous with the deep fascia of the arm.

The subscapular fascia is a thin membrane attached to the entire circumference of the subscapular fossa, and affording attachment by its deep surface to some of the fibers of the subscapular muscle.

The supraspinal fascia completes the osseofibrous case in which the supraspinal muscle is contained; it affords attachment, by its deep surface, to some of the fibers of the muscle. It is thick medially, but thinner laterally under the coracoacromial ligament.

The infraspinal fascia is a dense fibrous membrane, covering the infraspinal muscle and fixed to the circumference of the infraspinal fossa; it affords attachment, by its deep surface, to some fibers of that muscle. It is intimately attached to the deltoid fascia along the over-lapping border of the deltoid muscle.

THE DELTOID MUSCLE — the deltoid muscle is a large, thick, triangular muscle, which covers the shoulder-joint in front, behind, and laterally. It arises from the anterior border and upper surface of the lateral third of the clavicle; from the lateral margin and upper surface of the acromion, and from the lower lip of the posterior border of the spine of the scapula, as far back as the triangular surface at its medial end. From this extensive origin the fibers converge toward their insertion, the middle passing vertically, the anterior obliquely backward and lateralward, the posterior obliquely forward and lateralward; they unite in a thick tendon, which is inserted into the deltoid prominence on the middle of the lateral side of the body of the humerus. At its insertion the muscle gives off an expansion to the deep fascia of the arm. This muscle is remarkably coarse in texture, and the arrangement of its fibers is peculiar; the central portion of the muscle — that is to say, the part arising from the acromion — consists of oblique fibers; these arise in a bipenniform manner from the sides of the tendinous intersections, generally four in number, which are attached above to the acromion and pass downward parallel to one another in the substance of the muscle. The oblique fibers thus formed are inserted into similar tendinous intersections, generally three in number, which pass upward from the insertion of the muscle and alternate with the descending septa. The portions of the muscle arising from the clavicle and spine of the scapula are not arranged in this manner, but are inserted into the margins of the inferior tendon.

The deltoid muscles will raise the arm from the side, so as to bring it at right angles with the trunk. Its anterior fibers, assisted by the major pectoral muscle, will draw the arm forward; and, aided by the fine major muscle and the important back muscle, its posterior fibers will draw it backward.

THE SUBSCAPULAR MUSCLE — the subscapular muscle is a large triangular muscle which fills the subscapular fossa, and arises from its medial two-thirds and from the lower two-thirds of the groove on the axillary border of the bone. Some fibers arise from tendinous laminae which intersect the muscle and are attached to ridges on the bone; others from an aponeurosis, which separates the muscle from the major fine muscle and the long head of the triceps muscle of the arm. The fibers pass lateralward, and, gradually converging, end in a tendon which is inserted into the lesser tubercle of the humerus and the front of the capsule of the shoulder-joint. The tendon of the muscle is separated from the neck of the scapula by a large bursa, which communicates with the cavity of the shoulder-joint through an aperture in the capsule.

The subscapular muscle will rotate the head of the humerus inward; when the arm is raised, it will draw the humerus forward and downward. It is a powerful defence to the front of the shoulder-joint, preventing displacement of the head of the humerus.

THE SUPRASPINAL MUSCLE — the supraspinal muscle occupies the whole of the supraspinatous fossa, arising from its medial two-thirds, and from the strong supraspinatous fascia. The muscular fibers converge to a tendon, which crosses the upper part of the shoulder-joint, and is inserted into the highest of the three impressions on the greater tubercle of the humerus; the tendon is intimately adherent to the capsule of the shoulder-joint.

THE INFRASPINAL MUSCLE — the infraspinal muscle is a thick triangular muscle, which occupies the chief part of the infraspinal fossa; it arises by fleshy fibers from its medial two-thirds, and by tendinous fibers from the ridges on its surface; it also arises from the infraspinal fascia which covers it, and separates it from the teretes major and minor. The fibers converge to a tendon, which glides over the lateral border of the spine of the scapula, and, passing across the posterior part of the capsule of the shoulder-joint, is inserted into the middle impression on the greater tubercle of the humerus. The tendon of this muscle is sometimes separated from the capsule of the shoulder-joint by a bursa, which may communicate with the joint cavity.

THE FINE MINOR MUSCLE — the fine minor muscle is a narrow, elongated muscle, which arises from the dorsal surface of the axillary border of the scapula for the upper two-thirds of its extent, and from two aponeurotic laminae, one of which separates it from the infraspinal muscle, the other from the teres major. Its fibers run obliquely upward and lateralward; the upper ones end in a tendon which is inserted into the lowest of the three impressions on the greater tubercle of the humerus; the lowest fibers are inserted directly into the humerus immediately below this impression. The tendon of this muscle passes across, and is united with, the posterior part of the capsule of the shoulder-joint.

THE FINE MAJOR MUSCLE — the fine major muscle is a thick but somewhat flattened muscle, which arises from the oval area on the dorsal surface of the inferior angle of the scapula, and from the fibrous septa interposed between the muscle and the fine minor muscle and infraspinal muscle; the fibers are directed upward and lateralward, and end in a flat tendon, about 5 cm long, which is inserted into the crest of the lesser tubercle of the humerus. The tendon, at its insertion, is located behind that of the important muscle of the back, from which it is separated by a bursa, the two tendons being, however, united along their lower borders for a short distance.

ACTIONS — In this group of muscles of the shoulder, the supraspinal muscle will assist the deltoid muscle in raising the arm from the side of the trunk and it will fix the head of the humerus in the glenoid cavity. The infraspinal muscle and fine minor muscle will rotate the head of the humerus outward; they also assist in carrying the arm backward. One of the most important uses of these three muscles will be to protect the shoulder-joint, the supraspinal muscle supporting it above, and the infraspinal muscle and fine minor muscle behind. The fine major muscle will assist the important muscle of the back in drawing the previously raised humerus downward and backward, and in rotating it inward; when the arm is fixed it may assist the pectorales and the important muscle of the back in drawing the trunk forward.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE ARM

The muscles of the arm include the coracobrachial muscle, the biceps muscle of the arm, the brachial muscle, and the triceps muscle of the arm.

In this group of muscles of the arm, the brachial fascia (deep fascia of the arm) is continuous with that covering the deltoid muscle and the major pectoral muscle, by means of which it is attached, above, to the clavicle, acromion, and spine of the scapula; it forms a thin, loose, membranous sheath for the muscles of the arm, and sends septa between them; it is composed of fibers disposed in a circular or spiral direction, and connected together by vertical and oblique fibers. It differs in thickness at different parts, being thin over the biceps muscle of the arm, but thicker where it covers the triceps muscle of the arm, and over the epicondyles of the humerus: it is strengthened by fibrous aponeuroses, derived from the major pectoral muscle and important muscle of the back medially, and from the deltoid muscle laterally. On either side it gives off a strong intermuscular septum, which is attached to the corresponding supracondylar ridge and epicondyle of the humerus.

The lateral intermuscular septum extends from the lower part of the crest of the greater tubercle, along the lateral supracondylar ridge, to the lateral epicondyle; it is blended with the tendon of the deltoid muscle, gives attachment to the triceps arm muscle behind, to the brachial muscle, radial muscle of the arm, and long radial extensor of the wrist in front, and is perforated by the radial nerve and profunda branch of the brachial artery.

THE MEDIAL INTERMUSCULAR SEPTUM, thicker than the preceding, extends from the lower part of the crest of the lesser tubercle of the humerus below the teres major, along the medial supracondylar ridge to the medial epicondyle; it is blended with the tendon of the coracobrachial muscle, and affords attachment to the triceps arm muscle behind and the brachial muscle in front.

It is perforated by the ulnar nerve, the superior ulnar collateral artery, and the posterior branch of the inferior ulnar collateral artery. At the elbow, the deep fascia is attached to the epicondyles of the humerus and the olecranon of the ulna, and is continuous with the deep fascia of the forearm. Just below the middle of the arm, on its medial side, is an oval opening in the deep fascia, which transmits the basilic vein and some lymphatic vessels.

THE CORACOBRACHIAL MUSCLE — the coracobrachial muscle is the smallest of the three muscles in this region. It is situated at the upper and medial part of the arm. It arises from the apex of the coracoid process, in common with the short head of the biceps muscle of the arm, and from the intermuscular septum between the two muscles; it is inserted by means of a flat tendon into an impression at the middle of the medial surface and border of the body of the humerus between the origins of the triceps arm muscle and brachial muscle. It is perforated by the musculocutaneous nerve.

ACTIONS — The coracobrachial muscle will draw the humerus forward and medialward, and at the same time it will assist in retaining the head of the bone in contact with the glenoid cavity.

THE BICEPS MUSCLE OF THE ARM — the biceps muscle of the arm is a long fusiform muscle, placed on the front of the arm, and arising by two heads, from which circumstance it has received its name. The short head arises by a thick flattened tendon from the apex of the coracoid process, in common with the coracobrachial muscle. The long head arises from the supraglenoid tuberosity at the upper margin of the glenoid cavity, and is continuous with the glenoidal labrum. This tendon, enclosed in a special sheath of the synovial membrane of the shoulder-joint, arches over the head of the humerus; it emerges from the capsule through an opening close to the humeral attachment of the ligament, and descends in the intertubercular groove; it is retained in the groove by the transverse humeral ligament and by a fibrous prolongation from the tendon of the major pectoral muscle. Each tendon is succeeded by an elongated muscular belly, and the two bellies, although closely applied to each other, can readily be separated until within about 7.5 cm of the elbow-joint. Here they end in a flattened tendon, which is inserted into the rough posterior portion of the tuberosity of the radius, a bursa being interposed between the tendon and the front part of the tuberosity. As the tendon of the muscle approaches the radius it is twisted upon itself, so that its anterior surface becomes lateral and is applied to the tuberosity of the radius at its insertion. Opposite the bend of the elbow the tendon gives off, from its medial side, a broad aponeurosis, the lacertus fibrosus (bicipital fascia) which passes obliquely downward and medialward across the brachial artery, and is continuous with the deep fascia covering the origins of the flexor muscles of the forearm.

ACTIONS — The biceps muscle of the arm is a flexor of the elbow and, to a less extent, of the shoulder; it is also a powerful supinator, and it will serve to render tense the deep fascia of the forearm by means of the lacertus fibrosus given off from its tendon.

THE BRACHIAL MUSCLE — the brachial muscle covers the front of the elbow-joint and the lower half of the humerus. It arises from the lower half of the front of the humerus, commencing above at the insertion of the deltoid muscle, which it embraces by two angular processes. Its origin extends below to within 2.5 cm of the margin of the articular surface. It also arises from the intermuscular septa, but more extensively from the medial than the lateral; it is separated from the lateral below by the radial muscle of the arm and long radial extensor of the wrist. Its fibers converge to a thick tendon, which is inserted into the tuberosity of the ulna and the rough depression on the anterior surface of the coronoid process.

ACTIONS — The brachial muscle is a flexor of the forearm, and it will form an important defence to the elbow-joint. When the forearm is fixed, the biceps muscle of the arm and brachial muscle flex the arm upon the forearm, as in efforts of climbing.

THE TRICEPS ARM MUSCLE — the Triceps arm muscle is situated on the back of the arm, extending the entire length of the dorsal surface of the humerus. It is of large size, and arises by three heads (long, lateral, and medial), hence its name.

The long head arises by a flattened tendon from the infraglenoid tuberosity of the scapula, being blended at its upper part with the capsule of the shoulder-joint; the muscular fibers pass downward between the two other heads of the muscle, and join with them in the tendon of insertion.

The lateral head arises from the posterior surface of the body of the humerus, between the insertion of the Teres minor and the upper part of the groove for the radial nerve, and from the lateral border of the humerus and the lateral intermuscular septum; the fibers from this origin converge toward the tendon of insertion.

The medial head arises from the posterior surface of the body of the humerus, below the groove for the radial nerve; it is narrow and pointed above, and extends from the insertion of the Teres major to within 2.5 cm of the trochlea: it also arises from the medial border of the humerus and from the back of the whole length of the medial intermuscular septum. Some of the fibers are directed downward to the olecranon, while others converge to the tendon of insertion.

ACTIONS — The triceps arm muscle will be the great extensor muscle of the forearm, and will be the direct antagonist of the biceps muscle of the arm and brachial muscle. When the arm will be extended, the long head of the muscle may assist the fine major muscle and the important muscle of the back in drawing the humerus backward and in adducting it to the thorax. The long head will support the under part of the shoulder-joint. The subanconeus muscle will draw up the synovial membrane of the elbow-joint during extension of the forearm.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE FOREARM

In this group of muscle, the antibrachial fascia (deep fascia of the forearm) continuous above with the brachial fascia, is a dense, membranous investment, which forms a general sheath for the muscles in this region; it is attached, behind, to the olecranon and dorsal border of the ulna, and gives off from its deep surface numerous intermuscular septa, which enclose each muscle separately. Over the Flexor tendons as they approach the wrist it is especially thickened, and forms the volar carpal ligament. This is continuous with the transverse carpal ligament, and forms a sheath for the tendon of the long palmar muscle which passes over the transverse carpal ligament to be inserted into the palmar aponeurosis. Behind, near the wrist-joint, it is thickened by the addition of many transverse fibers, and forms the dorsal carpal ligament. It is much thicker on the dorsal than on the volar surface, and at the lower than at the upper part of the forearm, and is strengthened above by tendinous fibers derived from the biceps muscle of the arm in front, and from the triceps arm muscle behind. It gives origin to muscular fibers, especially at the upper part of the medial and lateral sides of the forearm, and forms the boundaries of a series of cone-shaped cavities, in which the muscles are contained. Besides the vertical septa separating the individual muscles, transverse septa are given off both on the volar and dorsal surfaces of the forearm, separating the deep from the superficial layers of muscles. Apertures exist in the fascia for the passage of vessels and nerves; one of these apertures of large size, situated at the front of the elbow, serves for the passage of a communicating branch between the superficial and deep veins.

The antibrachial or forearm muscles may be divided into a volar and a dorsal group.

THE VOLAR ANTIBRACHIAL MUSCLES — these muscles are divided for convenience of description into two groups, superficial and deep.

THE SUPERFICIAL GROUP includes the fine pronator muscle, the long palmar muscle, the radial flexor of the wrist, the ulnar flexor of the wrist, and the flexor digitorum sublimis. The muscles of this group take origin from the medial epicondyle of the humerus by a common tendon; they receive additional fibers from the deep fascia of the forearm near the elbow, and from the septa which pass from this fascia between the individual muscles.

THE FINE PRONATOR MUSCLE has two heads of origin: humeral and ulnar. The humeral head, the larger and more superficial, arises immediately above the medial epicondyle, and from the tendon common to the origin of the other muscles; also from the intermuscular septum between it and the radial flexor of the wrist and from the antibrachial fascia. The ulnar head is a thin fasciculus, which arises from the medial side of the coronoid process of the ulna, and joins the preceding at an acute angle. The median nerve enters the forearm between the two heads of the muscle, and is separated from the ulnar artery by the ulnar head. The muscle passes obliquely across the forearm, and ends in a flat tendon, which is inserted into a rough impression at the middle of the lateral surface of the body of the radius. The lateral border of the muscle forms the medial boundary of a triangular hollow situated in front of the elbow-joint and containing the brachial artery, median nerve, and tendon of the biceps muscle of the arm.

THE RADIAL FLEXOR OF THE WRIST is located on the medial side of the preceding muscle. It arises from the medial epicondyle by the common tendon; from the fascia of the forearm; and from the intermuscular septa between it and the fine pronator muscle laterally, the long palmar muscle medially, and the flexor digitorum sublimis beneath. Slender and aponeurotic in structure at its commencement, it increases in size, and ends in a tendon which forms rather more than the lower half of its length. This tendon passes through a canal in the lateral part of the transverse carpal ligament and runs through a groove on the greater multangular bone; the groove is converted into a canal by fibrous tissue, and lined by a mucous sheath. The tendon is inserted into the base of the second metacarpal bone, and sends a slip to the base of the third metacarpal bone. The radial artery, in the lower part of the forearm, lies between the tendon of this muscle and the radial muscle of the arm.

THE LONG PALMAR MUSCLE is a slender, fusiform muscle, lying on the medial side of the preceding. It arises from the medial epicondyle of the humerus by the common tendon, from the intermuscular septa between it and the adjacent muscles, and from the antibrachial fascia. It ends in a slender, flattened tendon, which passes over the upper part of the transverse carpal ligament, and is inserted into the central part of the transverse carpal ligament and lower part of the palmar aponeurosis, frequently sending a tendinous slip to the short muscles of the thumb.

THE ULNAR FLEXOR OF THE WRIST is located along the ulnar side of the forearm. It arises by two heads, humeral and ulnar, connected by a tendinous arch, beneath which the ulnar nerve and posterior ulnar recurrent artery pass. The humeral head arises from the medial epicondyle of the humerus by the common tendon; the ulnar head arises from the medial margin of the olecranon and from the upper two-thirds of the dorsal border of the ulna by an aponeurosis, common to it and the Ulnar extensor muscle of the wrist and flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb; and from the intermuscular septum between it and the flexor digitorum sublimis. The fibers end in a tendon, which occupies the anterior part of the lower half of the muscle and is inserted into the pisiform bone, and is prolonged from this to the hamate and fifth metacarpal bones by the pisohamate and pisometacarpal ligaments; it is also attached by a few fibers to the transverse carpal ligament. The ulnar vessels and nerve lie on the lateral side of the tendon of this muscle, in the lower two-thirds of the forearm.

THE FLEXOR DIGITORUM SUBLIMIS is placed beneath the previous muscle; it is the largest of the muscles of the superficial group, and arises by three heads: humeral, ulnar, and radial. The humeral head arises from the medial epicondyle of the humerus by the common tendon, from the ulnar collateral ligament of the elbow-joint, and from the intermuscular septa between it and the preceding muscles. The ulnar head arises from the medial side of the coronoid process, above the ulnar origin of the fine pronator muscle. The radial head arises from the oblique line of the radius, extending from the radial tuberosity to the insertion of the Pronator teres. The muscle speedily separates into two planes of muscular fibers, superficial and deep: the superficial plane divides into two parts which end in tendons for the middle and ring fingers; the deep plane gives off a muscular slip to join the portion of the superficial plane which is associated with the tendon of the ring finger, and then divides into two parts, which end in tendons for the index and little fingers. As the four tendons thus formed pass beneath the transverse carpal ligament into the palm of the hand, they are arranged in pairs, the superficial pair going to the middle and ring fingers, the deep pair to the index and little fingers. The tendons diverge from one another in the palm and form dorsal relations to the superficial volar arch and digital branches of the median and ulnar nerves. Opposite the bases of the first phalanges each tendon divides into two slips to allow of the passage of the corresponding tendon of the flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb; the two slips then reunite and form a grooved channel for the reception of the accompanying tendon of the flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb. Finally the tendon divides and is inserted into the sides of the second phalanx about its middle.

THE DEEP GROUP includes the flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb, the long flexor muscle of the thumb and the pronator quadratus.

THE FLEXOR OF THE DEEP MUSCLE OF THE THUMB is situated on the ulnar side of the forearm, immediately beneath the superficial flexors. It arises from the upper three-fourths of the volar and medial surfaces of the body of the ulna, embracing the insertion of the brachial muscle above, and extending below to within a short distance of the Pronator quadratus. It also arises from a depression on the medial side of the coronoid process; by an aponeurosis from the upper three-fourths of the dorsal border of the ulna, in common with the flexor and ulnar extensor muscle of the wrist; and from the ulnar half of the interosseous membrane. The muscle ends in four tendons which run under the transverse carpal ligament dorsal to the tendons of the Flexor digitorum sublimis. Opposite the first phalanges the tendons pass through the openings in the tendons of the flexor digitorum sublimis, and are finally inserted into the bases of the last phalanges. The portion of the muscle for the index finger is usually distinct throughout, but the tendons for the middle, ring, and little fingers are connected together by areolar tissue and tendinous slips, as far as the palm of the hand.

THE LONG FLEXOR MUSCLE OF THE THUMB is situated on the radial side of the forearm, lying in the same plane as the preceding. It arises from the grooved volar surface of the body of the radius, extending from immediately below the tuberosity and oblique line to within a short distance of the pronator quadratus. It arises also from the adjacent part of the interosseous membrane, and generally by a fleshy slip from the medial border of the coronoid process, or from the medial epicondyle of the humerus. The fibers end in a flattened tendon, which passes beneath the transverse carpal ligament, is then lodged between the lateral head of the short flexor of the thumb and the oblique part of the adductor muscle of the thumb, and, entering an osseaponeurotic canal similar to those for the flexor tendons of the fingers, is inserted into the base of the distal phalanx of the thumb. The volar interosseous nerve and vessels pass downward on the front of the interosseous membrane between the long flexor muscle of the thumb and flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb.

THE PRONATOR QUADRATUS is a small, flat, quadrilateral muscle, extending across the front of the lower parts of the radius and ulna. It arises from the pronator ridge on the lower part of the volar surface of the body of the ulna; from the medial part of the volar surface of the lower fourth of the ulna; and from a strong aponeurosis which covers the medial third of the muscle. The fibers pass lateralward and slightly downward, to be inserted into the lower fourth of the lateral border and the volar surface of the body of the radius. The deeper fibers of the muscle are inserted into the triangular area above the ulnar notch of the radius — an attachment comparable with the origin of the Supinator from the triangular area below the radial notch of the ulna.

ACTIONS — These muscles of the deep group will act upon the forearm, the wrist, and hand. The fine pronator muscle will rotate the radius upon the ulna, rendering the hand prone; when the radius is fixed, it will assist in flexing the forearm. The radial flexor of the wrist is a flexor and ab-ductor of the wrist; it will also assist in pronating the hand, and in bending the elbow. The ulnar flexor of the wrist is a flexor and adductor of the wrist; it will also assist in bending the elbow. The long palmar muscle is a flexor of the wrist-joint; it will also assist in flexing the elbow. The flexor digitorum sublimis will flex first the middle and then the proximal phalanges; it will also assist in flexing the wrist and elbow. The flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb is one of the flexors of the phalanges. After the flexor sublimis has bent the second phalanx, the flexor profundus will flex the terminal one; but it cannot do so until after the contraction of the superficial muscle. It will also assist in flexing the wrist. The long flexor muscle of the thumb is a flexor of the phalanges of the thumb; when the thumb is fixed, it will assist in flexing the wrist. The pronator quadratus will rotate the radius upon the ulna, rendering the hand prone.

THE DORSAL ANTIBRACHIAL MUSCLES — these muscles are divided for convenience of description into two groups, superficial and deep.

THE SUPERFICIAL GROUP includes the radial muscle of the arm, the long radial extensor of the wrist, the short radial extensor of the wrist, the common extensor muscle of the thumb, the proper fifth extensor muscle of the finger, the ulnar extensor muscle of the wrist, and the anconeus muscle.

THE RADIAL MUSCLE OF THE ARM is the most superficial muscle on the radial side of the forearm. It arises from the upper two-thirds of the lateral supracondylar ridge of the humerus, and from the lateral intermuscular septum, being limited above by the groove for the radial nerve. Interposed between it and the brachial muscle are the radial nerve and the anastomosis between the anterior branch of the profunda artery and the radial recurrent. The fibers end above the middle of the forearm in a flat tendon, which is inserted into the lateral side of the base of the styloid process of the radius. The tendon is crossed near its insertion by the tendons of the long abductor of the thumb and extensor pollicis brevis; on its ulnar side is the radial artery.

THE LONG RADIAL EXTENSOR OF THE WRIST is placed partly beneath the radial muscle of the arm. It arises from the lower third of the lateral supracondylar ridge of the humerus, from the lateral intermuscular septum, and by a few fibers from the common tendon of origin of the extensor muscles of the forearm. The fibers end at the upper third of the forearm in a flat tendon, which runs along the lateral border of the radius, beneath the long abductor of the thumb and extensor pollicis brevis; it then passes beneath the dorsal carpal ligament, where it lies in a groove on the back of the radius common to it and the short radial extensor of the wrist, immediately behind the styloid process. It is inserted into the dorsal surface of the base of the second metacarpal bone, on its radial side.

THE SHORT RADIAL EXTENSOR OF THE WRIST is shorter and thicker than the preceding muscle, beneath which it is placed. It arises from the lateral epicondyle of the humerus, by a tendon common to it and the three following muscles; from the radial collateral ligament of the elbow-joint; from a strong aponeurosis which covers its surface; and from the intermuscular septa between it and the adjacent muscles. The fibers end about the middle of the forearm in a flat tendon, which is closely connected with that of the preceding muscle, and accompanies it to the wrist; it passes beneath the long abductor of the thumb and extensor pollicis brevis, then beneath the dorsal carpal ligament, and is inserted into the dorsal surface of the base of the third metacarpal bone on its radial side. Under the dorsal carpal ligament the tendon lies on the back of the radius in a shallow groove, to the ulnar side of that which lodges the tendon of the extensor carpi radialis, longus, and separated from it by a faint ridge.

The tendons of the two preceding muscles pass through the same compartment of the dorsal carpal ligament in a single mucous sheath.

THE COMMON EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE THUMB arises from the lateral epicondyle of the humerus, by the common tendon; from the intermuscular septa between it and the adjacent muscles, and from the antibrachial fascia. It divides below into four tendons, which pass, together with that of the Extensor indicis proprius, through a separate compartment of the dorsal carpal ligament, within a mucous sheath. The tendons then diverge on the back of the hand, and are inserted into the second and third phalanges of the fingers in the following manner. Opposite the metacarpophalangeal articulation each tendon is bound by fasciculi to the collateral ligaments and serves as the dorsal ligament of this joint; after having crossed the joint, it spreads out into a broad aponeurosis, which covers the dorsal surface of the first phalanx and is reinforced, in this situation, by the tendons of the Interossei and Lumbricalis. Opposite the first interphalangeal joint this aponeurosis divides into three slips; an intermediate and two collaterals: the former is inserted into the base of the second phalanx; and the two collaterals, which are continued onward along the sides of the second phalanx, unite by their contiguous margins, and are inserted into the dorsal surface of the last phalanx. As the tendons cross the interphalangeal joints, they furnish them with dorsal ligaments. The tendon to the index finger is accompanied by the Extensor indicis proprius, which lies on its ulnar side. On the back of the hand, the tendons to the middle, ring, and little fingers are connected by two obliquely placed bands, one from the third tendon passing downward and lateralward to the second tendon, and the other passing from the same tendon downward and medialward to the fourth. Occasionally the first tendon is connected to the second by a thin transverse band.

THE PROPER FIFTH EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE FINGER is a slender muscle placed on the medial side of the common extensor muscle of the thumb, with which it is generally connected. It arises from the common extensor tendon by a thin tendinous slip, from the intermuscular septa between it and the adjacent muscles. Its tendon runs through a compartment of the dorsal carpal ligament behind the distal radio-ulnar joint, then divides into two as it crosses the hand, and finally joins the expansion of the common extensor muscle of the thumb tendon on the dorsum of the first phalanx of the little finger.

THE ULNAR EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE WRIST is located on the ulnar side of the forearm. It arises from the lateral epicondyle of the humerus, by the common tendon; by an aponeurosis from the dorsal border of the ulna in common with the ulnar flexor of the wrist and the flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb; and from the deep fascia of the forearm. It ends in a tendon, which runs in a groove between the head and the styloid process of the ulna, passing through a separate compartment of the dorsal carpal ligament, and is inserted into the prominent tubercle on the ulnar side of the base of the fifth metacarpal bone.

THE ANCONIUS MUSCLE is a small triangular muscle which is placed on the back of the elbow-joint, and appears to be a continuation of the triceps muscle of the arm. It arises by a separate tendon from the back part of the lateral epicondyle of the humerus; its fibers diverge and are inserted into the side of the olecranon, and upper fourth of the dorsal surface of the body of the ulna.

THE DEEP GROUP includes the supinator, the long ab-ductor of the thumb, the extensor pollicis brevis, the extensor pollicis longus, and the extensor indicis proprius.

THE SUPINATOR is a broad muscle, curved around the upper third of the radius. It consists of two planes of fibers, between which the deep branch of the radial nerve lies. The two planes arise in common — the superficial one by tendinous and the deeper by muscular fibers — from the lateral epicondyle of the humerus; from the radial collateral ligament of the elbow-joint, and the annular ligament; from the ridge on the ulna, which runs obliquely downward from the dorsal end of the radial notch; from the triangular depression below the notch; and from a tendinous expansion which covers the surface of the muscle. The superficial fibers surround the upper part of the radius, and are inserted into the lateral edge of the radial tuberosity and the oblique line of the radius, as low down as the insertion of the fine pronator muscle. The upper fibers of the deeper plane form a sling-like fasciculus, which encircles the neck of the radius above the tuberosity and is attached to the back part of its medial surface; the greater part of this portion of the muscle is inserted into the dorsal and lateral surfaces of the body of the radius, midway between the oblique line and the head of the bone.

THE LONG AB-DUCTOR OF THE THUMB is located immediately below the supinator and is sometimes united with it. It arises from the lateral part of the dorsal surface of the body of the ulna below the insertion of the anconeus muscle, from the interosseous membrane, and from the middle third of the dorsal surface of the body of the radius. Passing obliquely downward and lateralward, it ends in a tendon, which runs through a groove on the lateral side of the lower end of the radius, accompanied by the tendon of the extensor pollicis brevis, and is inserted into the radial side of the base of the first metacarpal bone. It occasionally gives off two slips near its insertion: one to the greater multangular bone and the other to blend with the origin of the short ab-ductor of the thumb.

THE SHORT EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE THUMB is located on the medial side of, and is closely connected with, the long ab-ductor of the thumb. It arises from the dorsal surface of the body of the radius below that muscle, and from the interosseous membrane. Its direction is similar to that of the long ab-ductor of the thumb, its tendon passing the same groove on the lateral side of the lower end of the radius, to be inserted into the base of the first phalanx of the thumb.

THE LONG EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE THUMB is much larger than the preceding muscle, the origin of which it partly covers. It arises from the lateral part of the middle third of the dorsal surface of the body of the ulna below the origin of the long abductor of the thumb, and from the interosseous membrane. It ends in a tendon, which passes through a separate compartment in the dorsal carpal ligament, lying in a narrow, oblique groove on the back of the lower end of the radius. It then crosses obliquely the tendons of the extensores carpi radialis longus and brevis, and is separated from the extensor brevis pollicis by a triangular interval, in which the radial artery is found; and is finally inserted into the base of the last phalanx of the thumb. The radial artery is crossed by the tendons of the long abductor of the thumb and of the extensores pollicis longus and brevis.

THE PROPER EXTENSOR MUSCLE OF THE INDEX is a narrow, elongated muscle, placed medial to, and parallel with, the preceding. It arises, from the dorsal surface of the body of the ulna below the origin of the extensor pollicis longus, and from the interosseous membrane. Its tendon passes under the dorsal carpal ligament in the same compartment as that which transmits the tendons of the common extensor muscle of the thumb, and opposite the head of the second metacarpal bone, joins the ulnar side of the tendon of the common extensor muscle of the thumb which belongs to the index finger.

ACTIONS — The muscles of the lateral and dorsal aspects of the forearm, which comprise all the extensor muscles and the supinator, will act upon the forearm, wrist, and hand; they are the direct antagonists of the pronator and flexor muscles. The anconeus muscle will assist the triceps in extending the forearm. The radial muscle of the arm is a flexor of the elbow-joint, but only it will act as such when the movement of flexion has been initiated by the biceps muscle of the arm and brachial muscle. The action of the supinator is given by its name; it will assist the biceps in bringing the hand into the supine position. The long radial extensor of the wrist will extend the wrist and abduct the hand. It may also assist in bending the elbow-joint; at all events it will serve to fix or steady this articulation. The short radial extensor of the wrist will extend the wrist, and may also act slightly as an abductor of the hand. The ulnar extensor muscle of the wrist will extend the wrist, but when acting alone, it will incline the hand toward the ulnar side; by its continued action it will extend the elbow-joint. The common extensor muscle of the thumb will extend the phalanges, then the wrist, and finally the elbow. It will act principally on the proximal phalanges, the middle and terminal phalanges being extended mainly by the interossei and lumbricales. It will tend to separate the fingers as it will extend them. The proper fifth extensor muscle of the finger will extend the little finger, and by its continued action, it will assist in extending the wrist. It is owing to this muscle that the little finger can be extended or pointed while the others are flexed. The chief action of the long abductor of the thumb is to carry the thumb laterally from the palm of the hand. By its continued action it will help to extend and abduct the wrist. The extensor pollicis brevis will extend the proximal phalanx, and the extensor pollicis longus the terminal phalanx of the thumb; by their continued action they will help to extend and abduct the wrist. The extensor indicis proprius will extend the index finger, and by its continued action, it will assist in extending the wrist.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE HAND

The muscles of the hand are subdivided into three groups: those of the thumb, which occupy the radial side and produce the thenar eminence; those of the little finger, which occupy the ulnar side and give rise to the hypothenar eminence; those in the middle of the palm and between the metacarpal bones.

The volar carpal ligament is the thickened band of antibrachial fascia which extends from the radius to the ulna over the flexor tendons as they enter the wrist.

The transverse carpal ligament (anterior annular ligament) is a strong, fibrous band, which arches over the carpus, converting the deep groove on the front of the carpal bones into a tunnel, through which the flexor tendons of the digits and the median nerve pass. It is attached, medially, to the pisiform and the hamulus of the hamate bone; laterally, to the tuberosity of the navicular, and to the medial part of the volar surface and the ridge of the greater multangular. It is continuous, above, with the volar carpal ligament; and below, with the palmar aponeurosis. It is crossed by the ulnar vessels and nerve, and the cutaneous branches of the median and ulnar nerves. At its lateral end is the tendon of the radial flexor of the wrist, which lies in the groove on the greater multangular between the attachments of the ligament to the bone. On its volar surface the tendons of the long palmar muscle and ulnar flexor of the wrist are partly inserted; below, it gives origin to the short muscles of the thumb and little finger.

Two sheaths envelop the tendons as they pass beneath the transverse carpal ligament, one for the flexores digitorum sublimis and profundus, the other for the long flexor muscle of the thumb. They extend into the forearm for about 2.5 cm above the transverse carpal ligament, and occasionally communicate with each other under the ligament.

(a) First superficial layer

(b) Second layer

The sheath which surrounds the flexores digitorum extends downward about half-way along the metacarpal bones, where it ends in blind diverticula around the tendons to the index, middle, and ring fingers. It is prolonged on the tendons to the little finger and usually communicates with the mucous sheath of these tendons. The sheath of the tendon of the long flexor muscle of the thumb is continued along the thumb as far as the insertion of the tendon.

The dorsal carpal ligament (posterior annular ligament) is a strong, fibrous band, extending obliquely downward and medialward across the back of the wrist, and consisting of part of the deep fascia of the back of the forearm, strengthened by the addition of some transverse fibers. It is attached, medially, to the styloid process of the ulna and to the triangular and pisiform bones; laterally, to the lateral margin of the radius; and, in its passage across the wrist, to the ridges on the dorsal surface of the radius.

The mucous sheaths of the tendons on the back of the wrist are protective coverings for tendons in the wrist. Between the dorsal carpal ligament and the bones six compartments are formed for the passage of tendons, each compartment having a separate mucous sheath. One is found in each of the following positions:

- On the lateral side of the radial styloid process, for the tendons of the Abductor pollicis longus and extensor pollicis brevis;
- Behind the styloid process, for the tendons of the extensores carpi radialis longus and brevis;
- About the middle of the dorsal surface of the radius, for the tendon of the Extensor pollicis longus;
- To the medial side of the latter, for the tendons of the common extensor muscle of the thumb and Extensor indicis proprius;
- Opposite the interval between the radius and ulna, for the proper fifth extensor muscle of the finger;
- Between the head and styloid process of the ulna, for the tendon of the unlar extensor muscle of the wrist.

The palmar aponeurosis invests the muscles of the palm, and consists of central, lateral, and medial portions.

The central portion occupies the middle of the palm, is triangular in shape, and of great strength and thickness. Its apex is continuous with the lower margin of the transverse carpal ligament, and receives the expanded tendon of the long palmar muscle. Its base divides below into four slips, one for each finger. Each slip gives off superficial fibers to the skin of the palm and finger, those to the palm joining the skin at the furrow corresponding to the metacarpophalangeal articulations, and those to the fingers passing into the skin at the transverse fold at the bases of the fingers. The deeper part of each slip subdivides into two processes, which are inserted into the fibrous sheaths of the flexor tendons. From the sides of these processes offsets are attached to the transverse metacarpal ligament. By this arrangement short channels are formed on the front of the heads of the metacarpal bones; through these the flexor tendons pass. The intervals between the four slips transmit the digital vessels and nerves, and the tendons of the Lumbricales. At the points of division into the slips mentioned, numerous strong, transverse fasciculi bind the separate processes together. The central part of the palmar aponeurosis is intimately bound to the integument by dense fibroareolar tissue forming the superficial palmar fascia, and gives origin by its medial margin to the short palmar muscle. It covers the superficial volar arch, the tendons of the flexor muscles, and the branches of the median and ulnar nerves; and on either side it gives off a septum, which is continuous with the interosseous aponeurosis, and separates the intermediate from the collateral groups of muscles.

The lateral and medial portions of the palmar aponeurosis are thin, fibrous layers, which cover, on the radial side, the muscles of the ball of the thumb, and, on the ulnar side, the muscles of the little finger; they are continuous with the central portion and with the fascia on the dorsum of the hand.

The superficial transverse ligament of the fingers is a thin band of transverse fasciculi; it stretches across the roots of the four fingers, and is closely attached to the skin of the clefts, and medially to the fifth metacarpal bone, forming a sort of rudimentary web. Beneath it the digital vessels and nerves pass to their destinations.

THE LATERAL VOLAR MUSCLES include the short ab-ductor of the thumb, opposite muscle of the thumb, the short flexor of the thumb, adductor muscle of the thumb (transversus), and the adductor (oblique) muscle of the thumb.

The short ab-ductor of the thumb is a thin, flat muscle, placed immediately beneath the integument. It arises from the transverse carpal ligament, the tuberosity of the navicular, and the ridge of the greater multangular, frequently by two distinct slips. Running lateralward and downward, it is inserted by a thin, flat tendon into the radial side of the base of the first phalanx of the thumb and the capsule of the metacarpophalangeal articulation.

The opposite muscle of the thumb is a small, triangular muscle, placed beneath the preceding. It arises from the ridge on the greater multangular and from the transverse carpal ligament, passes downward and lateralward, and is inserted into the whole length of the metacarpal bone of the thumb on its radial side.

The short flexor of the thumb consists of two portions, lateral and medial. The lateral and more superficial portion arises from the lower border of the transverse carpal ligament and the lower part of the ridge on the greater multangular bone; it passes along the radial side of the tendon of the long flexor muscle of the thumb, and, becoming tendinous, is inserted into the radial side of the base of the first phalanx of the thumb; in its tendon of insertion there is a sesamoid bone. The medial and deeper portion of the muscle is very small, and arises from the ulnar side of the first metacarpal bone between the adductor (oblique) muscle of the thumb and the lateral head of the first interosseous dorsalis, and is inserted into the ulnar side of the base of the first phalanx with the adductor (oblique) muscle of the thumb. The medial part of the short flexor muscle of the thumb is sometimes described as the first interosseous volaris.

The oblique adductor muscle of the thumb arises by several slips from the capitate bone, the bases of the second and third metacarpals, the intercarpal ligaments, and the sheath of the tendon of the radial flexor of the wrist. From this origin the greater number of fibers pass obliquely downward and converge to a tendon, which, uniting with the tendons of the medial portion of the short flexor of the thumb and the transverse part of the adductor, is inserted into the ulnar side of the base of the first phalanx of the thumb, a sesamoid bone being present in the tendon. A considerable fasciculus, however, passes more obliquely beneath the tendon of the long flexor muscle of the thumb to join the lateral portion of the short flexor and the short ab-ductor muscles of the thumb.

The transversal adductor muscle of the thumb is the most deeply seated of this group of muscles. It is of a triangular form arising by a broad base from the lower two-thirds of the volar surface of the third metacarpal bone; the fibers converge, to be inserted with the medial part of the short flexor of the thumb and the oblique adductor muscle of the thumb into the ulnar side of the base of the first phalanx of the thumb.

The short ab-ductor of the thumb will draw the thumb forward in a plane at right angles to that of the palm of the hand. The adductor muscle of the thumb is the opponent of this muscle, and approximates the thumb to the palm. The opposite muscle of the thumb will flex the metacarpal bone, that is to say, it will draw it medialward over the palm; the short flexor of the thumb will flex and adduct the proximal phalanx.

THE MEDIAL VOLAR MUSCLES include short palmar muscle, the fifth ab-ductor muscle of the finger, the short fifth flexor muscle of the finger, and the fifth opposite muscle of the finger.

The short palmar muscle is a thin, quadrilateral muscle, placed beneath the integument of the ulnar side of the hand. It arises by tendinous fasciculi from the transverse carpal ligament and palmar aponeurosis; the fleshy fibers are inserted into the skin on the ulnar border of the palm of the hand.

The fifth ab-ductor muscle of the finger is situated on the ulnar border of the palm of the hand. It arises from the pisiform bone and from the tendon of the ulnar flexor of the wrist, and ends in a flat tendon, which divides into two slips; one is inserted into the ulnar side of the base of the first phalanx of the little finger; the other into the ulnar border of the aponeurosis of the proper fifth extensor muscle of the finger.

The short fifth flexor muscle of the finger is located on the same plane as the preceding muscle, on its radial side. It arises from the convex surface of the hamulus of the hamate bone, and the volar surface of the transverse carpal ligament, and is inserted into the ulnar side of the base of the first phalanx of the little finger. It is separated from the ab-ductor, at its origin, by the deep branches of the ulnar artery and nerve.

The fifth opposite muscle of the finger is of a triangular form, and placed immediately beneath the preceding muscles. It arises from the convexity of the hamulus of the hamate bone, and contiguous portion of the transverse carpal ligament; it is inserted into the whole length of the metacarpal bone of the little finger, along its ulnar margin.

The ab-ductor and short fifth flexor muscle of the finger will abduct the little finger from the ring finger and assist in flexing the proximal phalanx. The fifth opposite muscle of the finger will draw forward the fifth metacarpal bone, so as to deepen the hollow of the palm. The short palmar muscle will corrugate the skin on the ulnar side of the palm.

THE INTERMEDIATE MUSCLES include the lumbricales and the interossei.

THE LUMBRICALES are four small fleshy fasciculi, associated with the tendons of the flexor of the deep muscle of the thumb. The first and second arise from the radial sides and volar surfaces of the tendons of the index and middle fingers respectively; the third, from the contiguous sides of the tendons of the middle and ring fingers; and the fourth, from the contiguous sides of the tendons of the ring and little fingers. Each passes to the radial side of the corresponding finger, and opposite the metacarpophalangeal articulation is inserted into the tendinous expansion of the common extensor muscle of the thumb covering the dorsal aspect of the finger.

THE INTEROSSEI are so named from occupying the intervals between the metacarpal bones, and are divided into two sets, a dorsal and a volar.

The interossei dorsales are four in number, and occupy the intervals between the metacarpal bones. They are bipenniform muscles, each arising by two heads from the adjacent sides of the metacarpal bones, but more extensively from the metacarpal bone of the finger into which the muscle is inserted. They are inserted into the bases of the first phalanges and into the aponeuroses of the tendons of the common extensor muscle of the thumb. Between the double origin of each of these muscles is a narrow triangular interval; through the first of these the radial artery passes; through each of the other three a perforating branch from the deep volar arch is transmitted.

The first or ab-ductor indicis is larger than the others. It is flat, triangular in form, and arises by two heads, separated by a fibrous arch for the passage of the radial artery from the dorsum to the palm of the hand. The lateral head arises from the proximal half of the ulnar border of the first metacarpal bone; the medial head, from almost the entire length of the radial border of the second metacarpal bone; the tendon is inserted into the radial side of the index finger. The second and third are inserted into the middle finger, the former into its radial, the latter into its ulnar side. The fourth is inserted into the ulnar side of the ring finger.

The interossei volares, three in number, are smaller than the interossei dorsales, and placed upon the volar surfaces of the metacarpal bones, rather than between them. Each arises from the entire length of the metacarpal bone of one finger, and is inserted into the side of the base of the first phalanx and aponeurotic expansion of the common tendon of the extensor muscle to the same finger.

The first arises from the ulnar side of the second metacarpal bone, and is inserted into the same side of the first phalanx of the index finger. The second arises from the radial side of the fourth metacarpal bone, and is inserted into the same side of the ring finger. The third arises from the radial side of the fifth metacarpal bone, and is inserted into the same side of the little finger. From this account it may be seen that each finger is provided with two interossei, with the exception of the little finger, in which the ab-ductor takes the place of one of the pair.

ACTIONS — The interossei volares will adduct the fingers to a line drawn longitudinally through the center of the middle finger; and the interossei dorsales will abduct the fingers from that line. In addition to this the interossei, in conjunction with the Lumbricales, will flex the first phalanges at the metacarpophalangeal joints, and extend the second and third phalanges in consequence of their insertions into the expansions of the extensor tendons. The common extensor muscle of the thumb acts almost entirely on the first phalanges.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE LOWER EXTREMITY.

The muscles of the lower extremity are subdivided into groups corresponding with the different regions of the limb. These are: the muscles of the iliac region, the muscles of the thigh, the muscles of the leg, the muscles of the foot.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE ILIAC REGION — these muscles include the psoas major, the psoas minor, the iliac muscle.

The fascia covering the psoas and iliacus is thin above, and becomes gradually thicker below as it approaches the inguinal ligament.

The portion covering the psoas is thickened above to form the medial lumbocostal arch, which stretches from the transverse process of the first lumbar vertebra to the body of the second. Medially, it is attached by a series of arched processes to the intervertebral fibrocartilages, and prominent margins of the bodies of the vertebrae, and to the upper part of the sacrum; the intervals left, opposite the constricted portions of the bodies, transmit the lumbar arteries and veins and filaments of the sympathetic trunk. Laterally, above the crest of the ilium, it is continuous with the fascia covering the front of the lumbar quadrilateral muscle, while below the crest of the ilium it is continuous with the fascia covering the iliacus.

The portions investing the iliacus (iliac fascia) is connected, laterally to the whole length of the inner lip of the iliac crest; and medially, to the terminal line of the lesser pelvis, where it is continuous with the periosteum. At the iliopectineal eminence it receives the tendon of insertion of the Psoas minor, when that muscle exists. Lateral to the femoral vessels it is intimately connected to the posterior margin of the inguinal ligament, and is continuous with the transversalis fascia. Immediately lateral to the femoral vessels the iliac fascia is prolonged backward and medialward from the inguinal ligament as a band, the iliopectineal fascia, which is attached to the iliopectineal eminence. This fascia divides the space between the inguinal ligament and the hip bone into two lacunae or compartments, the medial of which transmits the femoral vessels, the lateral the Psoas major and Iliacus and the femoral nerve. Medial to the vessels the iliac fascia is attached to the pectineal line behind the inguinal aponeurotic falx, where it is again continuous with the transversalis fascia. On the thigh the fasciae of the iliacus and psoas form a single sheet termed the iliopectineal fascia. Where the external iliac vessels pass into the thigh, the fascia descends behind them, forming the posterior wall of the femoral sheath. The portion of the iliopectineal fascia which passes behind the femoral vessels is also attached to the pectineal line beyond the limits of the attachment of the inguinal aponeurotic falx; at this part it is continuous with the pectineal fascia. The external iliac vessels lie in front of the iliac fascia, but all the branches of the lumbar plexus are behind it; it is separated from the peritoneum by a quantity of loose areolar tissue.

THE PSOAS MAJOR is a long fusiform muscle placed on the side of the lumbar region of the vertebral column and brim of the lesser pelvis. It arises:

1. From the anterior surfaces of the bases and lower borders of the transverse processes of all the lumbar vertebrae;
2. From the sides of the bodies and the corresponding intervertebral fibrocartilages of the last thoracic and all the lumbar vertebrae by five slips, each of which is attached to the adjacent upper and lower margins of two vertebrae, and to the intervertebral fibrocartilage;
3. From a series of tendinous arches which extend across the constricted parts of the bodies of the lumbar vertebrae between the previous slips; the lumbar arteries and veins, and filaments from the sympathetic trunk pass beneath these tendinous arches.

The muscle proceeds downward across the brim of the lesser pelvis, and diminishing gradually in size, passes beneath the inguinal ligament and in front of the capsule of the hip-joint and ends in a tendon; the tendon receives nearly the whole of the fibers of the iliacus and is inserted into the lesser trochanter of the femur. A large bursa which may communicate with the cavity of the hip-joint, separates the tendon from the pubis and the capsule of the joint.

THE PSOAS MINOR is a long slender muscle, placed in front of the Psoas major. It arises from the sides of the bodies of the twelfth thoracic and first lumbar vertebrae and from the fibrocartilage between them. It ends in a long flat tendon which is inserted into the pectineal line and iliopectineal eminence, and, by its lateral border, into the iliac fascia. This muscle is often absent.

THE ILIACUS is a flat, triangular muscle, which fills the iliac fossa. It arises from the upper two-thirds of this fossa, and from the inner lip of the iliac crest; behind, from the anterior sacroiliac and the iliolumbar ligaments, and base of the sacrum; in front, it reaches as far as the anterior superior and anterior inferior iliac spines, and the notch between them. The fibers converge to be inserted into the lateral side of the tendon of the psoas major, some of them being prolonged on to the body of the femur for about 2.5 cm below and in front of the lesser trochanter.

ACTIONS — The psoas major, acting from above, will flex the thigh upon the pelvis, being assisted by the iliacus; acting from below, with the femur fixed, it will bend the lumbar portion of the vertebral column forward and to its own side, and then, in conjunction with the iliacus, it will tilt the pelvis forward. When the muscles of both sides will act from below, they will serve to maintain the erect posture by supporting the vertebral column and pelvis upon the femora, or in continued action bend the trunk and pelvis forward, as in raising the trunk from the recumbent posture. The psoas minor is a tensor of the iliac fascia.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE THIGH

This group of muscles include the anterior femoral muscles, the medial femoral muscles, the muscles of the gluteal region, the posterior femoral muscles (hamstring muscles).

THE ANTERIOR FEMORAL MUSCLES comprise the sartorial muscle, vastus lateralis, huge medial muscle, vastus intermedius, articularis genu, the quadriceps femoral muscle, and the rectilinear femoral muscle.

The superficial fascia of the anterior femoral muscles forms a continuous layer over the whole of the thigh; it consists of areolar tissue containing in its meshes much fat, and may be separated into two or more layers, between which are found the superficial vessels and nerves. It varies in thickness in different parts of the limb; in the groin it is thick, and the two layers are separated from one another by the superficial inguinal lymph glands, the great saphenous vein, and several smaller vessels.

The superficial layer is continuous above with the superficial fascia of the abdomen. The deep layer of the superficial fascia is a very thin, fibrous stratum, best marked on the medial side of the great saphenous vein and below the inguinal ligament. It is placed beneath the subcutaneous vessels and nerves and upon the surface of the wide fascia. It is intimately adherent to the wide fascia a little below the inguinal ligament. It covers the fossa ovalis (saphenous opening), being closely united to its circumference, and is connected to the sheath of the femoral vessels. The portion of fascia covering this fossa is perforated by the great saphenous vein and by numerous blood and lymphatic vessels; hence it has been termed the fascia cribrosa, the openings for these vessels having been likened to the holes in a sieve. A large subcutaneous bursa is found in the superficial fascia over the patella.

ANTERIOR VIEW

The deep fascia of the thigh is designated, from its great extent, the wide fascia; it constitutes an investment for the whole of this region of the limb, but varies in thickness in different parts. Thus, it is thicker in the upper and lateral part of the thigh, where it receives a fibrous expansion from the maximal gluteal muscle, and where the wide fasciae tensor is inserted between its layers; it is very thin behind and at the upper and medial part, where it covers the adductor muscles, and again becomes stronger around the knee, receiving fibrous expansions from the tendon of the biceps femoris laterally, from the sartorial muscle medially, and from the quadriceps femoral muscle in front. The wide fascia is attached, above and behind, to the back of the sacrum and coccyx; laterally, to the iliac crest; in front, to the inguinal ligament, and to the superior ramus of the pubis; and medially, to the inferior ramus of the pubis, to the inferior ramus and tuberosity of the ischium, and to the lower border of the sacrotuberous ligament. From its attachment to the iliac crest it passes down over the medial gluteal muscle to the upper border of the maximal gluteal muscle, where it splits into two layers: one passing superficial to, and the other passing beneath this muscle; at the lower border of the muscle, the two layers reunite.

Laterally, the wide fascia receives the greater part of the tendon of insertion of the maximal gluteal muscle, and becomes proportionately thickened. The portion of the wide fascia attached to the front part of the iliac crest, and corresponding to the origin of the wide fasciae tensor, extends down the lateral side of the thigh as two layers: one extends down superficial to this muscle and the other extends down beneath this muscle; at the lower end of the muscle, these two layers unite and form a strong band, having first received the insertion of the muscle. This band is continued downward, under the designation of the iliotibial band and is attached to the lateral condyle of the tibia. The part of the iliotibial band which lies beneath the wide fasciae tensor is prolonged upward to join the lateral part of the capsule of the hip-joint.

Below, the wide fascia is attached to all the prominent points around the knee-joint, that is to say, the condyles of the femur and tibia, and the head of the fibula. On either side of the patella it is strengthened by transverse fibers from the lower parts of the huge muscle, which are attached to and support this bone. Of these the lateral are the stronger, and are continuous with the iliotibial band. The deep surface of the wide fascia gives off two strong intermuscular septa, which are attached to the whole length of the rough line and its prolongations above and below; the lateral and stronger one, which extends from the insertion of the maximal gluteal muscle to the lateral condyle, separates the vastus lateralis in front from the short head of the biceps femoris behind, and gives partial origin to these muscles; the medial and thinner one separates the huge medial muscle from the adductores and pectineal muscle. Besides these there are numerous smaller septa, separating the individual muscles, and enclosing each in a distinct sheath.

THE FOSSA OVALIS (SAPHENOUS OPENING) — at the upper and medial part of the thigh, a little below the medial end of the inguinal ligament, is a large oval-shaped aperture in the wide fascia; it transmits the great saphenous vein, and other, smaller vessels, and is termed the fossa ovalis. The fascia cribrosa, which is pierced by the structures passing through the opening, closes the aperture and must be removed to expose it. The wide fascia in this part of the thigh is described as consisting of a superficial and a deep portion.

The superficial portion of the wide fascia is the part on the lateral side of the fossa ovalis. It is attached, laterally, to the crest and anterior superior spine of the ilium, to the whole length of the inguinal ligament, and to the pectineal line in conjunction with the lacunar ligament. From the tubercle of the pubis it is reflected downward and lateralward, as an arched margin, the falciform margin, forming the lateral boundary of the fossa ovalis; this margin overlies and is adherent to the anterior layer of the sheath of the femoral vessels: to its edge is attached the fascia cribrosa. The upward and medial prolongation of the falciform margin is named the superior cornu; its downward and medial prolongation, the inferior cornu. The latter is well-defined, and is continuous behind the great saphenous vein with the pectineal fascia.

The deep portion is situated on the medial side of the fossa ovalis, and at the lower margin of the fossa is continuous with the superficial portion; traced upward, it covers the pectineal muscle, long adductor muscle, and gracilis, and, passing behind the sheath of the femoral vessels, to which it is closely united, is continuous with the iliopectineal fascia, and is attached to the pectineal line.

From this description it may be observed that the superficial portion of the wide fascia lies in front of the femoral vessels, and the deep portion behind them, so that an apparent aperture exists between the two, through which the great saphenous passes to join the femoral vein.

THE SARTORIAL MUSCLE, the longest muscle in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is narrow and ribbon-like; it arises by tendinous fibers from the anterior superior iliac spine and the upper half of the notch below it. It passes obliquely across the upper and anterior part of the thigh, from the lateral to the medial side of the limb, then, it descends vertically, as far as the medial side of the knee, passing behind the medial condyle of the femur to end in a tendon. This curves obliquely forward and expands into a broad aponeurosis, which is inserted, in front of the gracilis and semitendinosus, into the upper part of the medial surface of the body of the tibia, nearly as far forward as the anterior crest. The upper part of the aponeurosis is curved backward over the upper edge of the tendon of the gracilis so as to be inserted behind it. An offset, from its upper margin, blends with the capsule of the knee-joint, and another from its lower border, with the fascia on the medial side of the leg.

THE QUADRICEPS FEMORAL MUSCLE (QUADRICEPS EXTENSOR) includes the four remaining muscles on the front of the thigh. It is the great extensor muscle of the leg, forming a large fleshy mass which covers the front and sides of the femur. It is subdivided into separate portions, which have received distinctive names. One occupying the middle of the thigh, and connected above with the ilium, is called from its rectilinear course the rectilinear femoral muscle. The other three lie in immediate connection with the body of the femur, which they cover from the trochanters to the condyles. The portion on the lateral side of the femur is termed the huge lateral muscle; that covering the medial side, the huge medial muscle; and that in front, the huge intermediate muscle.

THE RECTILINEAR FEMORAL MUSCLE is situated in the middle of the front of the thigh; it is fusiform in shape, and its superficial fibers are arranged in a bipenniform manner, the deep fibers running rectilinear down to the deep aponeurosis. It arises by two tendons: one, the anterior or rectilinear, from the anterior inferior iliac spine; the other, the posterior or reflected, from a groove above the brim of the acetabulum. The two unite at an acute angle, and spread into an aponeurosis which is prolonged downward on the anterior surface of the muscle, and from this the muscular fibers arise. The muscle ends in a broad and thick aponeurosis which occupies the lower two-thirds of its posterior surface, and, gradually becoming narrowed into a flattened tendon, is inserted into the base of the patella.

THE HUGE LATERAL MUSCLE (VASTUS EXTERNUS) is the largest part of the quadriceps femoral muscle. It arises by a broad aponeurosis, which is attached to the upper part of the intertrochanteric line, to the anterior and inferior borders of the greater trochanter, to the lateral lip of the gluteal tuberosity, and to the upper half of the lateral lip of the rough line; this aponeurosis covers the upper three-fourths of the muscle, and from its deep surface many fibers take origin. A few additional fibers arise from the tendon of the maximal gluteal muscle, and from the lateral intermuscular septum between the vastus lateralis and short head of the biceps femoris. The fibers form a large fleshy mass, which is attached to a strong aponeurosis, placed on the deep surface of the lower part of the muscle: this aponeurosis becomes contracted and thickened into a flat tendon inserted into the lateral border of the patella, blending with the quadriceps femoral muscle tendon, and giving an expansion to the capsule of the knee-joint.

THE HUGE MEDIAL MUSCLE AND HUGE INTERMEDIATE MUSCLE appear to be inseparably united, but when the rectilinear femoral muscle has been reflected a narrow interval will be observed extending upward from the medial border of the patella between the two muscles, and the separation may be continued as far as the lower part of the intertrochanteric line, where, however, the two muscles are frequently continuous.

THE HUGE MEDIAL MUSCLE arises from the lower half of the intertrochanteric line, the medial lip of the rough line, the upper part of the medial supracondylar line, the tendons of the long adductor muscle and the great adductor muscle and the medial intermuscular septum. Its fibers are directed downward and forward, and are chiefly attached to an aponeurosis which lies on the deep surface of the muscle and is inserted into the medial border of the patella and the quadriceps femoral muscle tendon, an expansion being sent to the capsule of the knee-joint.

THE HUGE INTERMEDIATE MUSCLE arises from the front and lateral surfaces of the body of the femur in its upper two-thirds and from the lower part of the lateral intermuscular septum. Its fibers end in a superficial aponeurosis, which forms the deep part of the quadriceps femoral muscle tendon.

The tendons of the different portions of the quadriceps unite at the lower part of the thigh, so as to form a single strong tendon, which is inserted into the base of the patella, some few fibers passing over it to blend with the ligamentum patellae. More properly, the patella may be regarded as a sesamoid bone, developed in the tendon of the quadriceps; and the ligamentum patellae, which is continued from the apex of the patella to the tuberosity of the tibia, as the proper tendon of insertion of the muscle, the medial and lateral patellar retinacula being expansions from its borders. A bursa, which usually communicates with the cavity of the knee-joint, is situated between the femur and the portion of the quadriceps tendon above the patella; another is interposed between the tendon and the upper part of the front of the tibia; and a third, the prepatellar bursa, is placed over the patella itself.

THE ARTICULARIS GENU is a small muscle, usually distinct from the vastus intermedius, but occasionally blended with it; it arises from the anterior surface of the lower part of the body of the femur, and is inserted into the upper part of the synovial membrane of the knee-joint. It sometimes consists of several separate muscular bundles.

ACTIONS — In the muscles of this region, the sartorial muscle will flex the leg upon the thigh, and, continuing to act, it will flex the thigh upon the pelvis; it next abducts and rotates the thigh outward. When the knee will bend, the sartorial muscle will assist the semitendinous muscle, the semimembranous muscle, and the popliteal muscle in rotating the tibia inward. Taking its fixed point from the leg, it will flex the pelvis upon the thigh, and, if one muscle acts, it will assist in rotating the pelvis. The quadriceps femoral muscle will extend the leg upon the thigh. The rectilinear femoral muscle will assist the psoas major and iliacus in supporting the pelvis and trunk upon the femur. It will also assist in flexing the thigh on the pelvis, or if the thigh be fixed it will flex the pelvis. The huge medial muscle will draw the patella medialward as well as upward.

THE MEDIAL FEMORAL MUSCLES include the gracilis, the pectineal muscle, the long adductor muscle, the short adductor muscle, and the great adductor muscle.

THE GRACILIS is the most superficial muscle on the medial side of the thigh. It is thin and flattened, broad above, narrow and tapering below. It arises by a thin aponeurosis from the anterior margins of the lower half of the symphysis pubis and the upper half of the pubic arch. The fibers run vertically downward, and end in a rounded tendon, which passes behind the medial condyle of the femur, curves around the medial condyle of the tibia, where it becomes flattened, and is inserted into the upper part of the medial surface of the body of the tibia, below the condyle.

A few of the fibers of the lower part of the tendon are prolonged into the deep fascia of the leg. At its insertion the tendon is situated immediately above that of the semitendinous muscle, and its upper edge is overlapped by the tendon of the sartorial muscle, with which it is in part blended. It is separated from the tibial collateral ligament of the knee-joint, by a bursa common to it and the tendon of the semitendinous muscle.

THE PECTINEAL MUSCLE is a flat, quadrangular muscle, situated at the anterior part of the upper and medial aspect of the thigh. It arises from the pectineal line, and to a slight extent from the surface of bone in front of it, between the iliopectineal eminence and tubercle of the pubis, and from the fascia covering the anterior surface of the muscle; the fibers pass downward, backward, and lateralward, to be inserted into a rough line leading from the lesser trochanter to the rough line.

THE LONG ADDUCTOR MUSCLE, the most superficial of the three adductores, is a triangular muscle, lying in the same plane as the pectineal muscle. It arises by a flat, narrow tendon, from the front of the pubis, at the angle of junction of the crest with the symphysis; and soon expands into a broad fleshy belly. This passes downward, backward, and lateralward, and is inserted, by an aponeurosis, into the rough line, between the huge medial muscle and the great adductor muscle, with both of which it is usually blended.

THE SHORT ADDUCTOR MUSCLE is situated immediately behind the two preceding muscles. It is somewhat triangular in form, and arises by a narrow origin from the outer surfaces of the superior and inferior rami of the pubis, between the gracilis and external obturator muscle. Its fibers, passing backward, lateralward, and downward, are inserted, by an aponeurosis, into the line leading from the lesser trochanter to the rough line and into the upper part of the rough line, immediately behind the pectineal muscle and upper part of the long adductor muscle.

THE GREAT ADDUCTOR MUSCLE is a large triangular muscle, situated on the medial side of the thigh. It arises from a small part of the inferior ramus of the pubis, from the inferior ramus of the ischium, and from the outer margin of the inferior part of the tuberosity of the ischium. Those fibers which arise from the ramus of the pubis are short, horizontal in direction, and are inserted into the rough line leading from the greater trochanter to the rough line, medial to the maximal gluteal muscle; those from the ramus of the ischium are directed downward and lateralward with different degrees of obliquity, to be inserted, by means of a broad aponeurosis, into the rough line and the upper part of its medial prolongation below. The medial portion of the muscle, composed principally of the fibers arising from the tuberosity of the ischium, forms a thick fleshy mass consisting of coarse bundles which descend almost vertically, and end about the lower third of the thigh in a rounded tendon which is inserted into the adductor tubercle on the medial condyle of the femur, and is connected by a fibrous expansion to the line leading upward from the tubercle to the rough line. At the insertion of the muscle, there is a series of osseaponeurotic openings, formed by tendinous arches attached to the bone. The upper four openings are small, and give passage to the perforating branches of the profunda femoris artery. The lowest is of large size, and transmits the femoral vessels to the popliteal fossa.

ACTIONS — The pectineal muscle and three adductores will adduct the thigh powerfully. In consequence of the obliquity of their insertions into the rough line, they will rotate the thigh outward, assisting the external rotators, and when the limb has been abducted, they will draw it medialward, carrying the thigh across that of the opposite side. The pectineal muscle and adductores brevis and longus will assist the psoas major and iliacus in flexing the thigh upon the pelvis. In progression, all these muscles assist in drawing forward the lower limb. The gracilis will assist the sartorial muscle in flexing the leg and rotating it inward; it is also an adductor of the thigh. If the lower extremities be fixed, these muscles, taking their fixed points below, may act upon the pelvis, serving to maintain the body in an erect posture; or, if their action be continued, flex the pelvis forward upon the femur.

THE MUSCLES OF THE GLUTEAL REGION include the maximal gluteal muscle, the medial gluteal muscle, the minimal gluteal muscle, the wide fasciae tensor, the piriform muscle, the internal obturator muscle, the gemellus superior, the gemellus inferior, the quadrilateral femoral muscle, the external obturator muscle.

THE GLUTEAL MAXIMAL MUSCLE, the most superficial muscle in the gluteal region, is a broad and thick fleshy mass of a quadrilateral shape, and forms the prominence of the nates. Its large size is one of the most characteristic features of the muscular system in man, connected as it is with the power he has of maintaining the trunk in the erect posture. The muscle is remarkably coarse in structure, being made up of fasciculi lying parallel with one another and collected together into large bundles separated by fibrous septa. It arises from the posterior gluteal line of the ilium, and the rough portion of bone including the crest, immediately above and behind it; from the posterior surface of the lower part of the sacrum and the side of the coccyx; from the aponeurosis of the sacrospinal muscle, the sacrotuberous ligament, and the fascia covering the medial gluteal muscle. The fibers are directed obliquely downward and lateralward; those forming the upper and larger portion of the muscle, together with the superficial fibers of the lower portion, end in a thick tendinous lamina, which passes across the greater trochanter, and is inserted into the iliotibial band of the wide fascia; the deeper fibers of the lower portion of the muscle are inserted into the gluteal tuberosity between the huge lateral muscle and great adductor muscle.

THE GLUTEAL MEDIAL MUSCLE is a broad, thick, radiating muscle, situated on the outer surface of the pelvis. Its posterior third is covered by the maximal gluteal muscle, its anterior two-thirds by the gluteal aponeurosis, which separates it from the superficial fascia and integument. It arises from the outer surface of the ilium between the iliac crest and posterior gluteal line above, and the anterior gluteal line below; it also arises from the gluteal aponeurosis covering its outer surface. The fibers converge to a strong flattened tendon, which is inserted into the oblique ridge which runs downward and forward on the lateral surface of the greater trochanter. A bursa separates the tendon of the muscle from the surface of the trochanter over which it glides.

THE GLUTEAL MINIMAL MUSCLE, the smallest of the three gluteal muscles, is placed immediately beneath the preceding. It is fan-shaped, arising from the outer surface of the ilium, between the anterior and inferior gluteal lines, and behind, from the margin of the greater sciatic notch. The fibers converge to the deep surface of a radiated aponeurosis, and this ends in a tendon which is inserted into an impression on the anterior border of the greater trochanter, and gives an expansion to the capsule of the hip-joint. A bursa is interposed between the tendon and the greater trochanter. Between the medial gluteal muscle and minimal gluteal muscle are the deep branches of the superior gluteal vessels and the superior gluteal nerve. The deep surface of the minimal gluteal muscle is in relation with the reflected tendon of the rectilinear femoral muscle and the capsule of the hip-joint.

THE WIDE FASCIAE TENSOR (TENSOR FASCIAE FEMORIS) arises from the anterior part of the outer lip of the iliac crest; from the outer surface of the anterior superior iliac spine, and part of the outer border of the notch below it, between the Gluteus medius and sartorial muscle; and from the deep surface of the wide fascia. It is inserted between the two layers of the iliotibial band of the wide fascia about the junction of the middle and upper thirds of the thigh.

THE PIRIFORM MUSCLE is a flat muscle, pyramidal in shape, lying almost parallel with the posterior margin of the medial gluteal muscle. It is situated partly within the pelvis against its posterior wall, and partly at the back of the hip-joint. It arises from the front of the sacrum by three fleshy digitations, attached to the portions of bone between the first, second, third, and fourth anterior sacral foramina, and to the grooves leading from the foramina: a few fibers also arise from the margin of the greater sciatic foramen, and from the anterior surface of the sacrotuberous ligament. The muscle passes out of the pelvis through the greater sciatic foramen, the upper part of which it fills, and is inserted by a rounded tendon into the upper border of the greater trochanter behind, but often partly blended with, the common tendon of the internal obturator muscle and gemelli.

M THE OBTURATOR MEMBRANE is a thin fibrous sheet, which almost completely closes the obturator foramen. Its fibers are arranged in interlacing bundles mainly transverse in direction; the uppermost bundle is attached to the obturator tubercles and completes the obturator canal for the passage of the obturator vessels and nerve. The membrane is attached to the sharp margin of the obturator foramen except at its lower lateral angle, where it is fixed to the pelvic surface of the inferior ramus of the ischium, i. e., within the margin. Both obturator muscles are connected with this membrane.

O THE EXTERNAL OBTURATOR MUSCLE is a flat, triangular muscle, which covers the outer surface of the anterior wall of the pelvis. It arises from the margin of bone immediately around the medial side of the obturator foramen, that is to say, from the rami of the pubis, and the inferior ramus of the ischium; it also arises from the medial two-thirds of the outer surface of the obturator membrane, and from the tendinous arch which completes the canal for the passage of the obturator vessels and nerves. The fibers springing from the pubic arch extend on to the inner surface of the bone, where they obtain a narrow origin between the margin of the foramen and the attachment of the obturator membrane. The fibers converge and pass backward, lateralward, and upward, and end in a tendon which runs across the back of the neck of the femur and lower part of the capsule of the hipjoint and is inserted into the trochanteric fossa of the femur. The obturator vessels lie between the muscle and the obturator membrane; the anterior branch of the obturator nerve reaches the thigh by passing in front of the muscle, and the posterior branch by piercing it.

ACTIONS — These muscles of the gluteus region will act upon the femur and the pelvis. When the maximal gluteal muscle will take its fixed point from the pelvis, it will extend the femur and brings the bent thigh into a line with the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Taking its fixed point from below, it will act upon the pelvis, supporting it and the trunk upon the head of the femur. Its most powerful action will be to cause the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to regain the erect position after stooping, by drawing the pelvis backward, being assisted in this action by the biceps femoris, the semitendinous muscle, and the semimembranous muscle.

The maximal gluteal muscle is a tensor of the wide fascia, and by its connection with the iliotibial band, it will keep the femur steady on the articular surfaces of the tibia during standing, when the extensor muscles will be relaxed. The lower part of the muscle will also act as an adductor and external rotator of the limb. The glutei medius and minimus will abduct the thigh, when the limb will be extended, and they will be principally called into action in supporting the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” on one limb, in conjunction with the wide fasciae tensor. Their anterior fibers, by drawing the greater trochanter forward, will rotate the thigh inward, in which action they will also be assisted by the wide fasciae tensor. The wide fasciae tensor is a tensor of the wide fascia; continuing its action, the oblique direction of its fibers will enable it to abduct the thigh and to rotate it inward. In the erect posture, acting from below, it will serve to keep the pelvis steady upon the head of the femur; and by means of the iliotibial band it will keep the condyles of the femur steady on the articular surfaces of the tibia, and it will assist the maximal gluteal muscle in supporting the knee in the extended position. The remaining muscles are powerful external rotators of the thigh. In the sitting posture, when the thigh will be flexed upon the pelvis, their action as rotators will cease, and they will become abductors, with the exception of the external obturator muscle, which still rotates the femur outward.

THE POSTERIOR FEMORAL MUSCLES (HAMSTRING MUSCLES) include the biceps femoris, the semitendinous muscle, and the semimembranous muscle.

THE BICEPS FEMORAL MUSCLE is situated on the posterior and lateral aspect of the thigh. It has two heads of origin; one, the long head, arises from the lower and inner impression on the back part of the tuberosity of the ischium, by a tendon common to it and the semitendinous muscle, and from the lower part of the sacrotuberous ligament; the other, the short head, arises from the lateral lip of the rough line, between the great adductor muscle and vastus lateralis, extending up almost as high as the insertion of the maximal gluteal muscle; from the lateral prolongation of the rough line to within 5 cm of the lateral condyle; and from the lateral intermuscular septum. The fibers of the long head form a fusiform belly, which passes obliquely downward and lateralward across the sciatic nerve to end in an aponeurosis which covers the posterior surface of the muscle, and receives the fibers of the short head; this aponeurosis becomes gradually contracted into a tendon, which is inserted into the lateral side of the head of the fibula, and by a small slip into the lateral condyle of the tibia. At its insertion the tendon divides into two portions, which embrace the fibular collateral ligament of the knee-joint. From the posterior border of the tendon a thin expansion is given off to the fascia of the leg. The tendon of insertion of this muscle forms the lateral hamstring; the common peroneal nerve descends along its medial border.

THE SEMITENDINOUS MUSCLE, remarkable for the great length of its tendon of insertion, is situated at the posterior and medial aspect of the thigh. It arises from the lower and medial impression on the tuberosity of the ischium, by a tendon common to it and the long head of the biceps femoris; it also arises from an aponeurosis which connects the adjacent surfaces of the two muscles to the extent of about 7.5 cm from their origin. The muscle is fusiform and ends a little below the middle of the thigh in a long round tendon which lies along the medial side of the popliteal fossa; it then curves around the medial condyle of the tibia and passes over the tibial collateral ligament of the knee-joint, from which it is separated by a bursa, and is inserted into the upper part of the medial surface of the body of the tibia, nearly as far forward as its anterior crest. At its insertion it gives off from its lower border a prolongation to the deep fascia of the leg and lies behind the tendon of the sartorial muscle, and below that of the gracilis, to which it is united.

THE SEMIMEMBRANOUS MUSCLE, so designated from its membranous tendon of origin, is situated at the back and medial side of the thigh. It arises by a thick tendon from the upper and outer impression on the tuberosity of the ischium, above and lateral to the biceps femoris and semitendinous muscle. The tendon of origin expands into an aponeurosis, which covers the upper part of the anterior surface of the muscle; from this aponeurosis muscular fibers arise, and converge to another aponeurosis which covers the lower part of the posterior surface of the muscle and contracts into the tendon of insertion. It is inserted mainly into the horizontal groove on the posterior medial aspect of the medial condyle of the tibia. The tendon of insertion gives off certain fibrous expansions: one, of considerable size, passes upward and lateralward to be inserted into the back part of the lateral condyle of the femur, forming part of the oblique popliteal ligament of the knee-joint; a second is continued downward to the fascia which covers the popliteal muscle; while a few fibers join the tibial collateral ligament of the joint and the fascia of the leg. The muscle overlaps the upper part of the popliteal vessels.

ACTIONS — The action of the hamstring muscles will be to flex the leg upon the thigh. When the knee will be semiflexed, the biceps femoris in consequence of its oblique direction will rotate the leg slightly outward; and the semitendinous muscle, and to a slight extent the semimembranous muscle, it will rotate the leg inward, assisting the popliteal muscle. Taking their fixed point from below, these muscles will serve to support the pelvis upon the head of the femur, and to draw the trunk directly backward, as in raising it from the stooping position or in feats of strength, when the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be thrown backward in the form of an arch.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE LEG

The muscles of the leg may be divided into three groups: anterior, posterior, and lateral.

THE ANTERIOR CRURAL MUSCLES — the muscles of the anterior of the leg are the anterior muscle of tibia, the long hallux extensor, the long extensor of the thumb, and the third peroneal muscle.

The deep fascia of the leg forms a complete investment to the muscles, and is fused with the periosteum over the subcutaneous surfaces of the bones. It is continuous above with the wide fascia, and is attached around the knee to the patella, the ligamentum patellae, the tuberosity and condyles of the tibia, and the head of the fibula. Behind, it forms the popliteal fascia, covering in the popliteal fossa; here it is strengthened by transverse fibers, and perforated by the small saphenous vein. It receives an expansion from the tendon of the Biceps femoris laterally, and from the tendons of the sartorial muscle, gracilis, semitendinous muscle, and semimembranous muscle medially; in front, it blends with the periosteum covering the subcutaneous surface of the tibia, and with that covering the head and malleolus of the fibula; below, it is continuous with the transverse crural and lacinate ligaments. It is thick and dense in the upper and anterior part of the leg, and gives attachment, by its deep surface, to the anterior muscle of tibia and long extensor of the inch; but thinner behind, where it covers the gastrocnemius and soleus. It gives off from its deep surface, on the lateral side of the leg, two strong intermuscular septa, the anterior and posterior peroneal septa, which enclose the long and short fibular muscles, and separate them from the muscles of the anterior and posterior crural regions, and several more slender processes which enclose the individual muscles in each region. A broad transverse intermuscular septum, called the deep transverse fascia of the leg, intervenes between the superficial and deep posterior crural muscles.

THE ANTERIOR MUSCLE OF TIBIA is situated on the lateral side of the tibia; it is thick and fleshy above, tendinous below. It arises from the lateral condyle and upper half or two-thirds of the lateral surface of the body of the tibia; from the adjoining part of the interosseous membrane; from the deep surface of the fascia; and from the intermuscular septum between it and the long extensor of the inch. The fibers run vertically downward, and end in a tendon, which is apparent on the anterior surface of the muscle at the lower third of the leg. After passing through the most medial compartments of the transverse and cruciate crural ligaments, it is inserted into the medial and under surface of the first cuneiform bone, and the base of the first metatarsal bone. This muscle overlaps the anterior tibial vessels and deep peroneal nerve in the upper part of the leg.

THE EXTENSOR HALLUCIS LONGUS is a thin muscle, situated between the anterior muscle of tibia and the long extensor of the inch. It arises from the anterior surface of the fibula for about the middle two-fourths of its extent, medial to the origin of the Extensor digitorum longus; it also arises from the interosseous membrane to a similar extent. The anterior tibial vessels and deep peroneal nerve lie between it and the anterior muscle of tibia. The fibers pass downward, and end in a tendon, which occupies the anterior border of the muscle, passes through a distinct compartment in the cruciate crural ligament, crosses from the lateral to the medial side of the anterior tibial vessels near the bend of the ankle, and is inserted into the base of the distal phalanx of the great toe. Opposite the metatarsophalangeal articulation, the tendon gives off a thin prolongation on either side, to cover the surface of the joint. An expansion from the medial side of the tendon is usually inserted into the base of the proximal phalanx.

THE LONG EXTENSOR OF THE INCH is a penniform muscle, situated at the lateral part of the front of the leg. It arises from the lateral condyle of the tibia; from the upper three-fourths of the anterior surface of the body of the fibula; from the upper part of the interosseous membrane; from the deep surface of the fascia; and from the intermuscular septa between it and the anterior muscle of tibia on the medial, and the peronei on the lateral side. Between it and the anterior muscle of tibia are the upper portions of the anterior tibial vessels and deep peroneal nerve. The tendon passes under the transverse and cruciate crural ligaments in company with the third peroneal muscle, and divides into four slips, which run forward on the dorsum of the foot, and are inserted into the second and third phalanges of the four lesser toes. The tendons to the second, third, and fourth toes are each joined, opposite the metatarsophalangeal articulation, on the lateral side by a tendon of the extensor digitorum brevis. The tendons are inserted in the following manner: each receives a fibrous expansion from the interossei and lumbricalis, and then spreads out into a broad aponeurosis, which covers the dorsal surface of the first phalanx: this aponeurosis, at the articulation of the first with the second phalanx, divides into three slips: an intermediate, which is inserted into the base of the second phalanx; and two collateral slips, which, after uniting on the dorsal surface of the second phalanx, are continued onward, to be inserted into the base of the third phalanx.

THE THIRD PERONEAL MUSCLE is a part of the long extensor of the inch, and might be described as its fifth tendon. The fibers belonging to this tendon arise from the lower third or more of the anterior surface of the fibula; from the lower part of the interosseous membrane; and from an intermuscular septum between it and the short peroneal muscle. The tendon, after passing under the transverse and cruciate crural ligaments in the same canal as the long extensor of the inch, is inserted into the dorsal surface of the base of the metatarsal bone of the little toe.

ACTIONS — In this group of muscle, the anterior muscle of tibia and third peroneal muscle are the direct flexors of the foot at the ankle-joint; the former muscle, when acting in conjunction with the posterior muscle of tibia, will raise the medial border of the foot, i. e., it will invert the foot; and the latter, acting with the peronaei brevis and longus, it will raise the lateral border of the foot, i. e., it will evert the foot. The long extensor of the inch and long hallux extensor will extend the phalanges of the toes, and, continuing their action, they will flex the foot upon the leg. Taking their fixed points from below, in the erect posture, all these muscles will serve to fix the bones of the leg in the perpendicular position, and give increased strength to the ankle-joint.

THE POSTERIOR CRURAL MUSCLES — the muscles of the back of the leg are subdivided into two groups: superficial and deep. Those of the superficial group will constitute a powerful muscular mass, forming the calf of the leg. Their large size is one of the most characteristic features of the muscular apparatus in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the “MALE” adjective, and bears a direct relation to his erect attitude and his mode of progression.

THE SUPERFICIAL GROUP includes the gastrocnemius, the soleus, and the plantaris.

The gastrocnemius is the most superficial muscle, and forms the greater part of the calf. It arises by two heads, which are connected to the condyles of the femur by strong, flat tendons. The medial and larger head takes its origin from a depression at the upper and back part of the medial condyle and from the adjacent part of the femur. The lateral head arises from an impression on the side of the lateral condyle and from the posterior surface of the femur immediately above the lateral part of the condyle. Both heads, also, arise from the subjacent part of the capsule of the knee. Each tendon spreads out into an aponeurosis, which covers the posterior surface of that portion of the muscle to which it belongs. From the anterior surfaces of these tendinous expansions, muscular fibers are given off; those of the medial head being thicker and extending lower than those of the lateral. The fibers unite at an angle in the middle line of the muscle in a tendinous raphé, which expands into a broad aponeurosis on the anterior surface of the muscle, and into this the remaining fibers are inserted. The aponeurosis, gradually contracting, unites with the tendon of the soleus, and forms with it the calcaneal tendon.

THE SOLEUS is a broad flat muscle situated immediately in front of the Gastrocnemius. It arises by tendinous fibers from the back of the head of the fibula, and from the upper third of the posterior surface of the body of the bone; from the popliteal line, and the middle third of the medial border of the tibia; some fibers also arise from a tendinous arch placed between the tibial and fibular origins of the muscle, in front of which the popliteal vessels and tibial nerve run. The fibers end in an aponeurosis which covers the posterior surface of the muscle, and, gradually becoming thicker and narrower, joins with the tendon of the gastrocnemius, and forms with it the calcaneal tendon.

The gastrocnemius and soleus together form a muscular mass which is occasionally described as the triceps surae; its tendon of insertion is the calcaneal tendon.

THE CALCANEAL TENDON, the common tendon of the gastrocnemius and Soleus, is the thickest and strongest in this "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment". It is about 15 cm long, and begins near the middle of the leg, but receives fleshy fibers on its anterior surface, almost to its lower end. Gradually becoming contracted below, it is inserted into the middle part of the posterior surface of the calcaneal tendon, a bursa being interposed between the tendon and the upper part of this surface. The tendon spreads out at its lower end, so that its narrowest part is about 4 cm above its insertion. It is covered by the fascia and the integument, and is separated from the deep muscles and vessels by a considerable interval filled up with areolar and adipose tissue. Along its lateral side, but superficial to it, is the small saphenous vein.

THE PLANTAR MUSCLE is placed between the gastrocnemius and soleus. It arises from the lower part of the lateral prolongation of the rough line, and from the oblique popliteal ligament of the knee-joint. It forms a small fusiform belly, from 7 to 10 cm long, ending in a long slender tendon which crosses obliquely between the two muscles of the calf, and runs along the medial border of the calcaneal tendon, to be inserted with it into the posterior part of the calcaneal tendon.

ACTIONS — In this group of muscle, the muscles of the calf are the chief extensors of the foot at the ankle-joint. They possess considerable power, and will be constantly called into use in standing, walking, dancing, and leaping; hence the large size they present. In walking, these muscles will raise the heel from the ground; the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” being thus supported on the raised foot, the opposite limb can be carried forward. In standing, the soleus, taking its fixed point from below, will keep the leg steady upon the foot and it will prevent the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from falling forward. The gastrocnemius, acting from below, will serve to flex the femur upon the tibia, assisted by the popliteal muscle.

THE DEEP GROUP includes the popliteal muscle, the long hallux of the flexor muscle, the long flexor of the inch muscle, and the posterior muscle of tibia.

The deep transverse fascia of the leg is a transversely placed, intermuscular septum, between the superficial and deep muscles of the back of the leg. At the sides it is connected to the margins of the tibia and fibula. Above, where it covers the popliteal muscle, it is thick and dense, and receives an expansion from the tendon of the semimembranous muscle; it is thinner in the middle of the leg; but below, where it covers the tendons passing behind the malleoli, it is thickened and continuous with the lacinate ligament.

THE POPLITEAL MUSCLE is a thin, flat, triangular muscle, which forms the lower part of the floor of the popliteal fossa. It arises by a strong tendon about 2.5 cm long, from a depression at the anterior part of the groove on the lateral condyle of the femur, and to a small extent from the oblique popliteal ligament of the knee-joint; and is inserted into the medial two-thirds of the triangular surface above the popliteal line on the posterior surface of the body of the tibia, and into the tendinous expansion covering the surface of the muscle.

THE FLEXOR HALLUCIS LONGUS is situated on the fibular side of the leg. It arises from the inferior two-thirds of the posterior surface of the body of the fibula, with the exception of 2.5 cm at its lowest part; from the lower part of the interosseous membrane; from an intermuscular septum between it and the peroneaei, laterally, and from the fascia covering the posterior muscle of tibia, medially. The fibers pass obliquely downward and backward, and end in a tendon which occupies nearly the whole length of the posterior surface of the muscle. This tendon lies in a groove which crosses the posterior surface of the lower end of the tibia, the posterior surface of the talus, and the under surface of the sustentaculum tali of the calcaneal tendon; in the sole of the foot it runs forward between the two heads of the short hallux of the flexor muscle, and is inserted into the base of the last phalanx of the great toe. The grooves on the talus and calcaneal tendon, which contain the tendon of the muscle, are converted by tendinous fibers into distinct canals, lined by a mucous sheath. As the tendon passes forward in the sole of the foot, it is situated above, and crosses from the lateral to the medial side of the tendon of the long flexor of the inch muscle, to which it is connected by a fibrous slip.

THE FLEXOR DIGITORUM LONGUS is situated on the tibial side of the leg. At its origin it is thin and pointed, but it gradually increases in size as it descends. It arises from the posterior surface of the body of the tibia, from immediately below the popliteal line to within 7 or 8 cm of its lower extremity, medial to the tibial origin of the posterior muscle of tibia; it also arises from the fascia covering the posterior muscle of tibia. The fibers end in a tendon, which runs nearly the whole length of the posterior surface of the muscle. This tendon passes behind the medial malleolus, in a groove, common to it and the posterior muscle of tibia, but separated from the latter by a fibrous septum, each tendon being contained in a special compartment lined by a separate mucous sheath. It passes obliquely forward and lateralward, superficial to the deltoid ligament of the ankle-joint, into the sole of the foot, where it crosses below the tendon of the long hallux of the flexor muscle, and receives from it a strong tendinous slip. It then expands and is joined by the quadrilateral plantar muscle, and finally divides into four tendons, which are inserted into the bases of the last phalanges of the second, third, fourth, and fifth toes, each tendon passing through an opening in the corresponding tendon of the short flexor of the thumb muscle opposite the base of the first phalanx.

THE POSTERIOR MUSCLE OF TIBIA is located between the two preceding muscles, and is the most deeply seated of the muscles on the back of the leg. It begins above by two pointed processes, separated by an angular interval through which the anterior tibial vessels pass forward to the front of the leg. It arises from the whole of the posterior surface of the interosseous membrane, excepting its lowest part; from the lateral portion of the posterior surface of the body of the tibia, between the commencement of the popliteal line above and the junction of the middle and lower thirds of the body of the tibia below; and from the upper two-thirds of the medial surface of the fibula; some fibers also arise from the deep transverse fascia, and from the intermuscular septa separating it from the adjacent muscles. In the lower fourth of the leg its tendon passes in front of that of the long flexor of the inch muscle and lies with it in a groove behind the medial malleolus, but enclosed in a separate sheath; it next passes under the lacinate and over the deltoid ligament into the foot, and then beneath the plantar calcaneonavicular ligament. The tendon contains a sesamoid fibrocartilage, as it runs under the plantar calcaneonavicular ligament. It is inserted into the tuberosity of the navicular bone, and gives off fibrous expansions, one of which passes backward to the sustentaculum tali of the calcaneal tendon, others forward and lateralward to the three cuneiforms, the cuboid, and the bases of the second, third, and fourth metatarsal bones.

ACTIONS — In this group of muscles, the popliteal muscle will assist in flexing the leg upon the thigh; when the leg is flexed, it will rotate the tibia inward. It will be especially called into action at the beginning of the act of bending the knee, inasmuch as it will produce the slight inward rotation of the tibia which is essential in the early stage of this movement. The posterior muscle of tibia is a direct extensor of the foot at the ankle-joint; acting in conjunction with the anterior muscle of tibia, it will turn the sole of the foot upward and medialward, i.e., it will invert the foot, antagonizing the peronaei, which will turn it upward and lateralward (evert it). In the sole of the foot the tendon of the posterior muscle of tibia is located directly below the plantar calcaneonavicular ligament, and will therefore be an important factor in maintaining the arch of the foot. The long flexor of the inch muscle and long hallux of the flexor muscle are the direct flexors of the phalanges, and, continuing their action, they will extend the foot upon the leg; they will assist the gastrocnemius and soleus in extending the foot, as in the act of walking, or in standing on tiptoe. In consequence of the oblique direction of its tendons the long flexor of the inch muscle would draw the toes medialward, were it not for the quadrilateral plantar muscle, which is inserted into the lateral side of the tendon, and will draw it to the middle line of the foot. Taking their fixed point from the foot, these muscles will serve to maintain the upright posture by steadying the tibia and fibula perpendicularly upon the talus.

THE LATERAL CRURAL MUSCLES — the muscles of the lateral crural of the leg are the long fibular muscle and the short fibular muscle.

THE LONG FIBULAR MUSCLE is situated at the upper part of the lateral side of the leg, and is the more superficial of the two muscles. It arises from the head and upper two-thirds of the lateral surface of the body of the fibula, from the deep surface of the fascia, and from the intermuscular septa between it and the muscles on the front and back of the leg; occasionally also by a few fibers from the lateral condyle of the tibia. Between its attachments to the head and to the body of the fibula there is a gap through which the common peroneal nerve passes to the front of the leg. It ends in a long tendon, which runs behind the lateral malleolus, in a groove common to it and the tendon of the short fubular muscle, behind which it lies; the groove is converted into a canal by the superior peroneal retinaculum, and the tendons in it are contained in a common mucous sheath. The tendon then extends obliquely forward across the lateral side of the calcaneal tendon, below the trochlear process, and the tendon of the short fubular muscle, and under cover of the inferior peroneal retinaculum. It crosses the lateral side of the cuboid, and then runs on the under surface of that bone in a groove which is converted into a canal by the long plantar ligament; the tendon then crosses the sole of the foot obliquely, and is inserted into the lateral side of the base of the first metatarsal bone and the lateral side of the first cuneiform. Occasionally it sends a slip to the base of the second metatarsal bone. The tendon changes its direction at two points: first, behind the lateral malleolus; secondly, on the cuboid bone; in both of these situations the tendon is thickened, and, in the latter, a sesamoid fibrocartilage, is developed in its substance.

THE SHORT FIBULAR MUSCLE is located under cover of the long fubular muscle, and is a shorter and smaller muscle. It arises from the lower two-thirds of the lateral surface of the body of the fibula; medial to the Peroneus longus; and from the intermuscular septa separating it from the adjacent muscles on the front and back of the leg. The fibers pass vertically downward, and end in a tendon which runs behind the lateral malleolus along with but in front of that of the preceding muscle, the two tendons being enclosed in the same compartment, and lubricated by a common mucous sheath. It then runs forward on the lateral side of the calcaneal tendon, above the trochlear process and the tendon of the long fubular muscle, and is inserted into the tuberosity at the base of the fifth metatarsal bone, on its lateral side.

On the lateral surface of the calcaneal tendon, the tendons of the long and short fubular muscles occupy separate osseoponeurotic canals formed by the calcaneal tendon and the perineal retinacula; each tendon is enveloped by a forward prolongation of the common mucous sheath.

ACTIONS — In this group of muscles, the long and short fubular muscles will extend the foot upon the leg, in conjunction with the posterior muscle of tibia, antagonizing the anterior muscle of tibia and third peroneal muscle, which are flexors of the foot. The long fubular muscle also will evert the sole of the foot, and from the oblique direction of the tendon across the sole of the foot, it will be an important agent in the maintenance of the transverse arch. Taking their fixed points below, the peronaei will serve to keep the leg steady upon the foot. This will be especially the case in standing upon one leg, when the tendency of the superincumbent weight is to throw the leg medialward; the long fibular muscle will overcome this tendency by drawing on the lateral side of the leg.

THE FASCIAE AROUND THE ANKLE

Fibrous bands, or thickened portions of the fascia, bind down the tendons in front of and behind the ankle in their passage to the foot. They comprise three ligaments, namely: the transverse crural, the cruciate crural and the laciniate; and the superior and inferior peroneal retinacula.

THE TRANSVERSE CRURAL LIGAMENT (upper part of anterior annular ligament) binds down the tendons of long extensor of the inch, long hallux extensor, third peroneal muscle, and anterior muscle of tibia as they descend on the front of the tibia and fibula; under it are found also the anterior tibial vessels and deep peroneal nerve. It is attached laterally to the lower end of the fibula, and medially to the tibia; above it is continuous with the fascia of the leg.

THE CRUCIATE CRURAL LIGAMENT (lower part of anterior annular ligament) is a Y-shaped band placed in front of the ankle-joint, the stem of the Y being attached laterally to the upper surface of the calcaneal tendon, in front of the depression for the interosseous talocalcaneal ligament; it is directed medialward as a double layer, one lamina passing in front of, and the other behind, the tendons of the Peroneus tertius and long extensor of the inch. At the medial border of the latter tendon these two layers join together, forming a compartment in which the tendons are enclosed. From the medial extremity of this sheath the two limbs of the Y diverge: one is directed upward and medialward, to be attached to the tibial malleolus, passing over the long hallux extensor and the vessels and nerves, but enclosing the anterior muscle of tibia by a splitting of its fibers. The other limb extends downward and medialward, to be attached to the border of the plantar aponeurosis, and passes over the tendons of the long hallux extensor and anterior muscle of tibia and also the vessels and nerves.

THE LACINIATE LIGAMENT (internal annular ligament) is a strong fibrous band, extending from the tibial malleolus above to the margin of the calcaneal tendon below, converting a series of bony grooves in this situation into canals for the passage of the tendons of the flexor muscles and the posterior tibial vessels and tibial nerve into the sole of the foot. It is continuous by its upper border with the deep fascia of the leg, and by its lower border with the plantar aponeurosis and the fibers of origin of the ab-ductor hallucis muscle. Enumerated from the medial side, the four canals which it forms transmit the tendon of the posterior muscle of tibia; the tendon of the long flexor of the inch muscle; the posterior tibial vessels and tibial nerve, which run through a broad space beneath the ligament; and lastly, in a canal formed partly by the talus, the tendon of the long hallux of the flexor muscle.

THE PERONEAL RETINACULA are fibrous bands which bind down the tendons of the long and short fubular muscles as they run across the lateral side of the ankle. The fibers of the superior retinaculum (external annular ligament) are attached above to the lateral malleolus and below to the lateral surface of the calcaneal tendon. The fibers of the inferior retinaculum are continuous in front with those of the cruciate crural ligament; behind they are attached to the lateral surface of the calcaneal tendon; some of the fibers are fixed to the peroneal trochlea, forming a septum between the tendons of the long and short fubular muscles.

THE MUCOUS SHEATHS OF THE TENDONS AROUND THE ANKLE. — All the tendons crossing the ankle-joint are enclosed for part of their length in mucous sheaths which have an almost uniform length of about 8 cm each.

On the front of the ankle the sheath for the anterior muscle of tibia extends from the upper margin of the transverse crural ligament to the interval between the diverging limbs of the cruciate ligament; those for the long extensor of the inch and long hallux extensor reach upward to just above the level of the tips of the malleoli, the former being the higher. The sheath of the long hallux extensor is prolonged on to the base of the first metatarsal bone, while that of the long extensor of the inch reaches only to the level of the base of the fifth metatarsal.

On the medial side of the ankle the sheath for the posterior muscle of tibia extends highest up — to about 4 cm above the tip of the malleolus — while below it stops just short of the tuberosity of the navicular. The sheath for long hallux of the flexor muscle reaches up to the level of the tip of the malleolus, while that for the long flexor of the inch muscle is slightly higher; the former is continued to the base of the first metatarsal, but the latter stops opposite the first cuneiform bone.

On the lateral side of the ankle, a sheath which is single for the greater part of its extent encloses the long and short fubular muscles. It extends upward for about 4 cm above the tip of the malleolus and downward and forward for about the same distance.

THE MUSCLES AND FASCIAE OF THE FOOT

This group of muscles include the dorsal and the plantar muscles.

THE DORSAL MUSCLE OF THE FOOT is designated as the extensor digitorum brevis.

The fascia on the dorsum of the foot is a thin membranous layer, continuous above with the transverse and cruciate crural ligaments; on either side it blends with the plantar aponeurosis; anteriorly it forms a sheath for the tendons on the dorsum of the foot.

THE EXTENSOR DIGITORUM BREVIS is a broad, thin muscle, which arises from the forepart of the upper and lateral surfaces of the calcaneal tendon, in front of the groove for the short fibular muscle; from the lateral talocalcaneal ligament; and from the common limb of the cruciate crural ligament. It passes obliquely across the dorsum of the foot, and ends in four tendons. The most medial, which is the largest, is inserted into the dorsal surface of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe, crossing the dorsalis pedis artery. The other three are inserted into the lateral sides of the tendons of the Extensor digitorum longus of the second, third, and fourth toes.

ACTIONS — the extensor digitorum brevis extends the phalanges of the four toes into which it is inserted, but in the great toe acts only on the first phalanx. The obliquity of its direction counteracts the oblique movement given to the toes by the long Extensor, so that when both muscles act, the toes are evenly extended.

THE PLANTAR MUSCLES OF THE FOOT — In this group of muscles, the plantar aponeurosis (plantar fascia) is of great strength, and consists of pearly white glistening fibers, disposed, for the most part, longitudinally: it is divided into central, lateral, and medial portions.

The central portion, the thickest, is narrow behind and attached to the medial process of the tuberosity of the calcaneal tendon, posterior to the origin of the short flexor of the thumb muscle; and becoming broader and thinner in front, divides near the heads of the metatarsal bones into five processes, one for each of the toes. Each of these processes divides opposite the metatarsophalangeal articulation into two strata, superficial and deep. The superficial stratum is inserted into the skin of the transverse sulcus which separates the toes from the sole. The deeper stratum divides into two slips which embrace the side of the flexor tendons of the toes, and blend with the sheaths of the tendons, and with the transverse metatarsal ligament, thus forming a series of arches through which the tendons of the short and long flexors pass to the toes. The intervals left between the five processes allow the digital vessels and nerves and the tendons of the lumbricales to become superficial. At the point of division of the aponeurosis, numerous transverse fasciculi are superadded; these serve to increase the strength of the aponeurosis at this part by binding the processes together, and connecting them with the integument. The central portion of the plantar aponeurosis is continuous with the lateral and medial portions and sends upward into the foot, at the lines of junction, two strong vertical intermuscular septa, broader in front than behind, which separate the intermediate from the lateral and medial plantar groups of muscles; from these again are derived thinner transverse septa which separate the various layers of muscles in this region. The upper surface of this aponeurosis gives origin behind to the short flexor of the thumb muscle.

- The lateral and medial portions of the plantar aponeurosis are thinner than the central piece, and cover the sides of the sole of the foot.
- The lateral portion covers the under surface of the fifth abductor muscle of the finger; it is thin in front and thick behind, where it forms a strong band between the lateral process of the tuberosity of the calcaneal tendon and the base of the fifth metatarsal bone; it is continuous medially with the central portion of the plantar aponeurosis, and laterally with the dorsal fascia.
- The medial portion is thin, and covers the under surface of the abductor hallucis; it is attached behind to the lacinate ligament, and is continuous around the side of the foot with the dorsal fascia, and laterally with the central portion of the plantar aponeurosis.

The muscles in the plantar region of the foot may be divided into three groups, in a similar manner to those in the hand. Those of the medial plantar region are connected with the great toe, and correspond with those of the thumb; those of the lateral plantar region are connected with the little toe, and correspond with those of the little finger; and those of the intermediate plantar region are connected with the tendons intervening between the two former groups. But in order to facilitate the description of these muscles, it is more convenient to divide them into four layers, in the order in which they are successively exposed.

THE FIRST LAYER OF THE PLANTAR MUSCLES OF THE FOOT includes the abductor hallucis, the short flexor of the thumb muscle, and the fifth abductor muscle of the finger.

THE ABDUCTOR HALLUCIS is located along the medial border of the foot and covers the origins of the plantar vessels and nerves. It arises from the medial process of the tuberosity of the calcaneal tendon, from the lacinate ligament, from the plantar aponeurosis, and from the intermuscular septum between it and the Flexor digitorum brevis. The fibers end in a tendon, which is inserted, together with the medial tendon of the Flexor hallucis brevis, into the tibial side of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe.

THE FLEXOR DIGITORUM BREVIS is located in the middle of the sole of the foot, immediately above the central part of the plantar aponeurosis, with which it is firmly united. Its deep surface is separated from the lateral plantar vessels and nerves by a thin layer of fascia. It arises by a narrow tendon, from the medial process of the tuberosity of the calcaneal tendon, from the central part of the plantar aponeurosis, and from the intermuscular septa between it and the adjacent muscles. It passes forward, and divides into four tendons, one for each of the four lesser toes. Opposite the bases of the first phalanges, each tendon divides into two slips, to allow of the passage of the corresponding tendon of the Flexor digitorum longus; the two portions of the tendon then unite and form a grooved channel for the reception of the accompanying long flexor tendon. Finally, it divides a second time, and is inserted into the sides of the second phalanx about its middle. The mode of division of the tendons of the short flexor of the thumb muscle, and of their insertion into the phalanges, is analogous to that of the tendons of the flexor digitorum sublimis in the hand.

The terminal portions of the tendons of the long and short flexor muscles are contained in osseaponeurotic canals similar in their arrangement to those in the fingers. These canals are formed above by the phalanges and below by fibrous bands, which arch across the tendons, and are attached on either side to the margins of the phalanges. Opposite the bodies of the proximal and second phalanges the fibrous bands are strong, and the fibers are transverse; but opposite the joints they are much thinner, and the fibers are directed obliquely. Each canal contains a mucous sheath, which is reflected on the contained tendons.

THE ABDUCTOR DIGITI QUINTI is located along the lateral border of the foot, and is in relation by its medial margin with the lateral plantar vessels and nerves. It arises, by a broad origin, from the lateral process of the tuberosity of the calcaneal tendon, from the under surface of the calcaneal tendon between the two processes of the tuberosity, from the forepart of the medial process, from the plantar aponeurosis, and from the intermuscular septum between it and the Flexor digitorum brevis. Its tendon, after gliding over a smooth facet on the under surface of the base of the fifth metatarsal bone, is inserted, with the short fifth flexor muscle of the finger, into the fibular side of the base of the first phalanx of the fifth toe.

THE SECOND LAYER OF THE PLANTAR MUSCLES OF THE FOOT includes the quadrilateral plantar muscles and the lumbricales.

THE QUADRILATERAL PLANTAR MUSCLES is separated from the muscles of the first layer by the lateral plantar vessels and nerve. It arises by two heads, which are separated from each other by the long plantar ligament: the medial or larger head is muscular, and is attached to the medial concave surface of the calcaneal tendon, below the groove which lodges the tendon of the long hallux of the flexor muscle; the lateral head, flat and tendinous, arises from the lateral border of the inferior surface of the calcaneal tendon, in front of the lateral process of its tuberosity, and from the long plantar ligament. The two portions join at an acute angle, and end in a flattened band which is inserted into the lateral margin and upper and under surfaces of the tendon of the long flexor of the inch muscle, forming a kind of groove, in which the tendon is lodged. It usually sends slips to those tendons of the long flexor of the inch muscle which pass to the second, third, and fourth toes.

THE LUMBRICALES are four small muscles, accessory to the tendons of the Flexor digitorum longus and numbered from the medial side of the foot; they arise from these tendons, as far back as their angles of division, each springing from two tendons, except the first. The muscles end in tendons, which pass forward on the medial sides of the four lesser toes, and are inserted into the expansions of the tendons of the long extensor of the inch on the dorsal surfaces of the first phalanges.

THE THIRD LAYER OF THE PLANTAR MUSCLES OF THE FOOT includes the short hallux of the flexor muscle, the short fifth flexor muscle of the finger, and the adductor hallucis.

THE FLEXOR HALLUCIS brevis arises, by a pointed tendinous process, from the medial part of the under surface of the cuboid bone, from the contiguous portion of the third cuneiform, and from the prolongation of the tendon of the posterior muscle of tibia which is attached to that bone. It divides in front into two portions, which are inserted into the medial and lateral sides of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe, a sesamoid bone being present in each tendon at its insertion. The medial portion is blended with the ab-ductor hallucis previous to its insertion; the lateral portion with the adductor hallucis; the tendon of the long hallux of the flexor muscle lies in a groove between them; the lateral portion is sometimes described as the first Interosseous plantaris.

THE ADDUCTOR HALLUCIS arises by two heads: oblique and transverse. The oblique head is a large, thick, fleshy mass, crossing the foot obliquely and occupying the hollow space under the first second, third, and fourth metatarsal bones. It arises from the bases of the second, third, and fourth metatarsal bones, and from the sheath of the tendon of the long fubular muscle, and is inserted, together with the lateral portion of the short hallux of the flexor muscle, into the lateral side of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe. The transverse head is a narrow, flat fasciculus which arises from the plantar metatarsophalangeal ligaments of the third, fourth, and fifth toes, and from the transverse ligament of the metatarsus. It is inserted into the lateral side of the base of the first phalanx of the great toe, its fibers blending with the tendon of insertion of the oblique head.

The ab-ductor, short flexor, and adductor of the great toe, like the similar muscles of the thumb, give off, at their insertions, fibrous expansions to blend with the tendons of the long extensor of the inch.

THE FLEXOR DIGITI QUINTI BREVIS is located under the metatarsal bone of the little toe, and resembles one of the Interossei. It arises from the base of the fifth metatarsal bone, and from the sheath of the long fubular muscle; its tendon is inserted into the lateral side of the base of the first phalanx of the fifth toe.

THE FOURTH LAYER OF THE PLANTAR MUSCLES OF THE FOOT includes the interossei dorsalis and the interossei plantares.

The seven (7) interossei in the foot are similar to those in the hand, with this exception, that they are grouped around the middle line of the second digit, instead of that of the third. They are seven in number, and consist of two groups, dorsal and plantar.

THE INTEROSSEI DORSALES, four in number, are situated between the metatarsal bones. They are bipenniform muscles, each arising by two heads from the adjacent sides of the metatarsal bones between which it is placed; their tendons are inserted into the bases of the first phalanges, and into the aponeurosis of the tendons of the long extensor of the inch. In the angular interval left between the heads of each of the three lateral muscles, one of the perforating arteries passes to the dorsum of the foot; through the space between the heads of the first muscle the deep plantar branch of the dorsalis pedis artery enters the sole of the foot. The first is inserted into the medial side of the second toe; the other three are inserted into the lateral sides of the second, third, and fourth toes.

THE INTEROSSEI PLANTARES, three in number, are located beneath rather than between the metatarsal bones, and each is connected with but one metatarsal bone. They arise from the bases and medial sides of the bodies of the third, fourth, and fifth metatarsal bones, and are inserted into the medial sides of the bases of the first phalanges of the same toes, and into the aponeuroses of the tendons of the long extensor of the inch.

ACTIONS — All the muscles of the foot will act upon the toes, and may be grouped as ab-ductors, adductors, flexors, or extensors.

THE AB-DUCTORS are the interossei dorsales, the ab-ductor hallucis, and the fifth ab-ductor muscle of the finger. The interossei dorsales are ab-ductors from a line passing through the axis of the second toe, so that the first muscle draws the second toe medialward, toward the great toe, the second muscle draws the same toe lateralward, and the third and fourth draw the third and fourth toes in the same direction. Like the interossei in the hand, each assists in flexing the first phalanx and extending the second and third phalanges. The ab-ductor hallucis will abduct the great toe from the second, and also flex its proximal phalanx. In the same way the action of the fifth ab-ductor muscle of the finger is twofold, as an ab-ductor of this toe from the fourth, and also as a flexor of its proximal phalanx.

THE ADDUCTORS are the interossei plantares and the adductor hallucis. The interossei plantares adduct the third, fourth, and fifth toes toward the line passing through the second toe, and by means of their insertions into the aponeuroses of the extensor tendons they assist in flexing the proximal phalanges and extending the middle and terminal phalanges. The oblique head of the adductor hallucis is chiefly concerned in adducting the great toe toward the second one, but also assists in flexing this toe; the transverse head approximates all the toes and thus increases the curve of the transverse arch of the metatarsus.

THE FLEXORS are the short flexor of the inch muscle, the quadrilateral plantar muscles, the short hallux of the flexor muscle, the short fifth flexor muscle of the finger, and the lumbricales. The short flexor of the inch muscle flexes the second phalanges upon the first, and, continuing its action, flexes the first phalanges also, and brings the toes together. The quadrilateral plantar muscle will assist the long flexor of the inch muscle and convert the oblique pull of the tendons of that muscle into a direct backward pull upon the toes. The short fifth flexor muscle of the finger will flex the little toe and draw its metatarsal bone downward and medialward. The lumbricales, like the corresponding muscles in the hand, will assist in flexing the proximal phalanges, and by their insertions into the tendons of the long extensor of the inch, they will aid that muscle in straightening the middle and terminal phalanges. The extensor digitorum brevis will extend the first phalanx of the great toe and assist the long extensor in extending the next three toes, and at the same time gives to the toes a lateral direction when they are extended.

As we have indicated, in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the muscles are manifestations of metaphors of those 64 equilibrium regions, which characterize “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, in the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Space” of a first “Formative Divine Particle” with respect to the “Generative Divine Particle” and through which the 64 equilibrium regions will pass.⁷⁷¹

In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was building all the cells, the tissues, the organs, and the systems of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, having the “MALE” adjective, up to the least details and synchronized as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, directly creating the layers of structures and organs of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to match those that would acquire “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when they approach the end of physical adolescence, and directly sewing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” into existence. In “slow motion”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing down the details of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” throughout the organs of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

⁷⁷¹ It is important that you grow your knowledge of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” by reading through discernment what is invisible in these descriptions of the muscles and their actions: look for what the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Visual Structure” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear cannot see. You will read it ONLY if you stand in “PURITY”.

Skin

Skin is the largest and fastest-growing organ in the body. The outermost layer, the epidermis, is composed of stratified squamous epithelial tissue. Below this layer is the dermis, which contains the cutaneous glands, hair follicles, and most of the skin's nerve endings. The hypodermis (subcutaneous layer) consists of loose connective and adipose tissue.

Cutaneous Glands

Cutaneous glands within the dermis include sebaceous and sweat glands. Sebaceous glands secrete sebum, an oily substance that waterproofs and lubricates the skin. Sweat glands help cool the body through evaporation of sweat.

Fingernails

Fingernails and toenails are made of densely-packed cells covered in keratin. The cuticle, found at the base of the nail, provides a barrier between the skin and the nail. The body of the nail appears pink due to numerous blood vessels in the nail bed underneath. Nails protect the fingers and toes and can be used for scratching.

Nerve receptors of the skin

Hair

Hair is a pigmented filament formed by mostly keratinized cells. Human hair follicles can be divided into 3 main segments: the bulb, root, and shaft. The shaft (the visible part of hair) consists of 3 layers: the cuticle, cortex, and medulla. The cortex defines texture and contains the pigment that gives hair its color.

DESCRIPTION OF THE ORGANS OF THE SENSES AND THE INTEGUMENTARY SYSTEM

As you have understood already, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is a perfect receiver-transmitter of signals, structured and much more complex than the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”.

In order to enable the prehension⁷⁷² of the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has also endowed the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model with basis structures, instincts, which are analogous to the basis structures and instincts of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

These basis structures and instincts of the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model allow to collect “specific signals” emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around this “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Among these specialized structures that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” are the organs of the senses: the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Visual Structure”, “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Auditory Structure”, the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Olfaction Structure”, the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Gustatory Structure”, and the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Tegumentary Structure”.

The organs of the senses may be divided into (a) the peripheral organs of the special senses, which include those of the special senses of taste, smell, sight, and ⁷⁷² As we have clarified in one previous annotation at the onset, we use the term “prehension” in the sense of an interaction, with the external and immediate environment all around, which involves “specific perception processes” — that is to say, the processes of capturing or collecting external signals coming from the external and immediate surrounding environment —, but not necessarily “specific cognition processes” — that is to say, the use of conscious mental “specific processes” that come immediately after “prehension” and lead to “comprehension” — that is to say, the act of grasping the nature, the significance, or meaning of the external signals that were captured or collected through “prehension”.

THE PERIPHERAL ORGANS OF THE SPECIAL SENSES

THE ORGANS OF TASTE

It is the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Gustatory Structure” that will allow the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to collect the flavour that has been assigned to particular forms of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” present in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around its “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The peripheral gustatory or taste organs consist of certain modified epithelial cells arranged in flask-shaped groups termed gustatory calyculi (taste-buds), which are found on the tongue and adjacent parts. They occupy nests in the stratified epithelium, and are present in large numbers on the sides of the vallate papillae, and to a less extent on their opposed walls. They are also found on the fungiform papillae over the back part and sides of the tongue, and in the general epithelial covering of the same areas. They are very plentiful over the fimbriae linguae, and are also present on the under surface of the soft palate, and on the posterior surface of the epiglottis.

The stimulus of the special sense of taste is chemical. The receptors for taste are scattered over the mouth, tongue, palate, and pharynx, the tongue being the chief organ. They are excited by a variety of soluble chemical substances belonging to one of four classes: sweet, bitter, sour, and salty. Nerve impulses generated by the receptors take complicated pathways to reach the brain stem and relay in the tractus solitarius to the thalamus. Their cortical destination is closely associated with that of other sensory modalities from the region of the face.

Each taste bud is flask-like in shape, its broad base resting on the corium, and its neck opening by an orifice, the gustatory pore, between the cells of the epithelium. The bud is formed by two kinds of cells: supporting (base) cells and gustatory cells. The supporting (base) cells are mostly arranged like the staves of a cask, and form an outer envelope for the bud. Some, however, are found in the interior of the bud between the gustatory cells. The gustatory cells occupy the central portion of the bud; they are spindle-shaped, and each possesses a large spherical nucleus near the middle of the cell. The peripheral end of the cell terminates at the gustatory pore in a fine hair-like filament, the gustatory hair. The central process passes toward the deep extremity of the bud, and there ends in single or bifurcated varicosities. The nerve fibrils after losing their medullary sheaths enter the taste bud, and end in fine extremities between the gustatory cells; other nerve fibrils ramify between the supporting cells and terminate in fine extremities; these, however, are believed to be nerves of ordinary sensation and not gustatory.

THE ORGAN OF SMELL

It is the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Olfaction Structure” that will allow the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to collect the odorific aspect (odour) emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, external and immediate, around it.

The peripheral olfactory organ or organ of smell consists of two parts: an outer, the external nose, which projects from the center of the face; and an internal, the nasal cavity, which is divided by a septum into right and left nasal chambers.

The external nose is pyramidal in form and its upper angle or root is connected directly with the forehead; its free angle is termed the apex. Its base is perforated by two elliptical orifices, the nares, separated from each other by an antero-posterior septum, the columna. The margins of the nares are provided with a number of stiff hairs, or vibrissae, which arrest the passage of foreign substances carried with the current of air intended for respiration. The lateral surfaces of the nose form, by their union in the middle line, the dorsum nasi, the direction of which varies considerably in different individuals; the upper part of the dorsum is supported by the nasal bones, and is designated as the bridge. The lateral surface ends below in a rounded eminence, the ala nasi.

The framework of the external nose is composed of bones and cartilages; it is covered by the integument, and lined by mucous membrane. The bony framework occupies the upper part of the organ; it consists of the nasal bones, and the frontal processes of the maxillae.

The nasal chambers are situated one on either side of the median plane. They open in front through the nares, and communicate behind through the choanæ with the nasal part of the pharynx. The nares are somewhat pear-shaped apertures, each measuring about 2.5 cm antero-posteriorly and 1.25 cm transversely at its widest part. The choanæ are two oval openings each measuring 2.5 cm in the vertical, and 1.25 cm in the transverse direction in a well-developed adult skull.

ספר הצו

The nasal mucous membrane lines the nasal cavities, and is intimately adherent to the periosteum or perichondrium. It is continuous with the skin through the nares, and with the mucous membrane of the nasal part of the pharynx through the choanæ. From the nasal cavity its continuity with the conjunctiva may be traced, through the nasolacrimal and lacrimal ducts; and with the frontal, ethmoidal, sphenoidal, and maxillary sinuses, through the several openings in the meatuses. The mucous membrane is thickest, and most vascular, over the nasal conchæ. It is also thick over the septum; but it is very thin in the meatuses on the floor of the nasal cavities, and in the various sinuses.

Low-magnification of a nasal concha.

Respiratory epithelium covers the concha externally and is in direct contact with the nasal cavity lumen. Its central core of loose connective tissue contains several thin-walled venous sinuses (V) and bony trabeculae (B). A small gland in the lamina propria is drained by a duct that opens onto the surface (arrow). Magnification 115x

Low-magnification of respiratory mucosa lining the nasal cavity.

The pseudostratified epithelium consists of basal cells (B), goblets cells (G), and columnar cells bearing apical cilia (short arrow). Note the particulate matter (long arrow) on the ciliated surface. A thin, imperceptible basement membrane (BM) separates the epithelium from underlying lamina propria, which is highly cellular and richly vascularized. This lamina contains a network of capillaries (C). This lamina contains a network of capillaries (C). Magnification 450x

Owing to the thickness of the greater part of this membrane, the nasal cavities are much narrower, and the middle and inferior nasal conchae appear larger and more prominent than in the skeleton; also the various apertures communicating with the meatuses are considerably narrowed.

The epithelium covering the mucous membrane differs in its character according to the functions of the part of the nose in which it is found. In the respiratory region it is columnar and ciliated. Interspersed among the columnar cells are goblet or mucin cells, while between their bases are found smaller pyramidal cells. Beneath the epithelium and its basement membrane is a fibrous layer infiltrated with lymph corpuscles, so as to form in many parts a diffuse adenoid tissue, and under this a nearly continuous layer of small and larger glands, some mucous and some serous, the ducts of which open upon the surface. In the olfactory region the mucous membrane is yellowish in color and the epithelial cells are columnar and non-ciliated; they are of two kinds, supporting cells and olfactory cells. The supporting cells contain oval nuclei, which are situated in the deeper parts of the cells and constitute the zone of oval nuclei; the superficial part of each cell is columnar, and contains granules of yellow pigment, while its deep part is prolonged as a delicate process which ramifies and communicates with similar processes from neighboring cells, so as to form a net-work in the mucous membrane. Located between the deep processes of the supporting cells are a number of bipolar nerve cells, the olfactory cells, each consisting of a small amount of granular protoplasm with a large spherical nucleus, and possessing two processes: a superficial one which runs between the columnar epithelial cells, and projects on the surface of the mucous membrane as a fine, hair-like process, the olfactory hair; the other or deep process runs inward, is frequently beaded, and is continued as the axon of an olfactory nerve fiber. Beneath the epithelium, and extending through the thickness of the mucous membrane, is a layer of tubular, often branched, glands, the glands of Bowman, identical in structure with serous glands. The epithelial cells of the nose, fauces and respiratory passages play an important role in the maintenance of an equable temperature, by the moisture with which they keep the surface always slightly lubricated.

The nerves of ordinary sensation are: the nasociliary branch of the ophthalmic, filaments from the anterior alveolar branch of the maxillary, the nerve of the pterygoid canal, the nasopalatine, the anterior palatine, and nasal branches of the sphenopalatine ganglion.

ספר הזוהר

The nasociliary branch of the ophthalmic distributes filaments to the forepart of the septum and lateral wall of the nasal cavity. Filaments from the anterior alveolar nerve supply the inferior meatus and inferior concha. The nerve of the pterygoid canal supplies the upper and back part of the septum, and superior concha; and the upper nasal branches from the sphenopalatine ganglion have a similar distribution. The nasopalatine nerve supplies the middle of the septum. The anterior palatine nerve supplies the lower nasal branches to the middle and inferior conchæ.

The olfactory, the special nerve of the sense of smell, is distributed to the olfactory region. Its fibers arise from the bipolar olfactory cells and are destitute of medullary sheaths. They unite in fasciculi which form a plexus beneath the mucous membrane and then ascend in grooves or canals in the ethmoid bone; they pass into the skull through the foramina in the cribriform plate of the ethmoid and enter the under surface of the olfactory bulb, in which they ramify and form synapses with the dendrites of the mitral cells.

THE ORGAN OF SIGHT

It is the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Visual Structure” that will allow the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to collect the luminous radiation emitted by various forms of “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” present in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” external and immediate around its “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

THE BULB OF THE EYE (bulbus oculi; eyeball), or organ of sight, is contained in the cavity of the orbit, where it is protected from injury and moved by the ocular muscles. Associated with it are certain accessory structures; namely, the muscles, fasciae, eyebrows, eyelids, conjunctiva, and lacrimal apparatus.

⁷⁷³ Observe carefully the sketched anatomy of the eye, and just as with all pictured anatomies, which we have outlined throughout this brief descriptions section, always look

The bulb of the eye is imbedded in the fat of the orbit, but is separated from it by a thin membranous sac, the fascia bulbi. It is composed of segments of two spheres of different sizes. The anterior segment is one of a small sphere; it is transparent, and forms about one-sixth of the bulb. It is more prominent than the posterior segment, which is one of a larger sphere, and is opaque, and forms about five-sixths of the bulb.

The term anterior pole is applied to the central point of the anterior curvature of the bulb, and that of posterior pole to the central point of its posterior curvature; a line joining the two poles forms the optic axis. The axes of the two bulbs are nearly parallel, and therefore do not correspond to the axes of the orbits, which are directed forward and lateralward. The optic nerves follow the direction of the axes of the orbits, and are therefore not parallel; each enters its eyeball 3 mm to the nasal side and a little below the level of the posterior pole. The bulb measures rather more in its transverse and antero-posterior diameters than in its vertical diameter, the former amounting to about 24 mm, the latter to about 23.5 mm.

From without inward the three tunics of the bulb of the eye are: (1) a fibrous tunic, consisting of the sclera behind and the cornea in front; (2) a vascular pigmented tunic, comprising, from behind forward, the choroid, ciliary body, and iris; and (3) a nervous tunic, the retina.

The sclera and cornea form the fibrous tunic of the bulb of the eye; the sclera is opaque, and constitutes the posterior five-sixths of the tunic; the cornea is transparent, and forms the anterior sixth.

THE SCLERA is a firm, unyielding membrane, serving to maintain the form of the bulb. It is much thicker behind than in front; the thickness of its posterior part is 1 mm. Its external surface is of white color, and is in contact with the inner surface of the fascia of the bulb; it is quite smooth, except at the points where the rectilinear and oblique muscles are inserted into it; its anterior part is covered by the conjunctival membrane. Its inner surface is brown in color and marked by grooves, in which the ciliary nerves and vessels are lodged; it is separated from the beyond the obvious, beyond the surface, beyond the painting, and ask yourself the question: “How did FATHER came out to such organ and has designed it and its functioning?” Think in terms of modelling, creativity and knowledge required to even picture such organ into existence. outer surface of the choroid by an extensive lymph space which is traversed by an exceedingly fine cellular tissue, the lamina suprachorioidea. Behind it is pierced by the optic nerve, and is continuous through the fibrous sheath of this nerve with the dura mater. Where the optic nerve passes through the sclera, the latter forms a thin cribriform lamina, the lamina cribrosa sclerae; the minute orifices in this lamina serve for the transmission of the nervous filaments, and the fibrous septa dividing them from one another are continuous with the membranous processes which separate the bundles of nerve fibers. One of these openings, larger than the rest, occupies the center of the lamina; it transmits the central artery and vein of the retina. Around the entrance of the optic nerve are numerous small apertures for the transmission of the ciliary vessels and nerves, and about midway between this entrance and the sclerocorneal junction are four or five large apertures for the transmission of veins. In front, the sclera is directly continuous with the cornea, the line of union being termed the sclero-corneal junction. In the inner part of the sclera close to this junction is a circular canal, the sinus venosus sclerae. In a meridional section of this region this sinus presents the appearance of a cleft, the outer wall of which consists of the firm tissue of the sclera, while its inner wall is formed by a triangular mass of trabecular tissue; the apex of the mass is directed forward and is continuous with the posterior elastic lamina of the cornea. The sinus is lined by endothelium and communicates externally with the anterior ciliary veins.

The sclera is formed of white fibrous tissue intermixed with fine elastic fibers; flattened connective-tissue corpuscles, some of which are pigmented, are contained in cell spaces between the fibers. The fibers are aggregated into bundles, which are arranged chiefly in a longitudinal direction. Its vessels are not numerous, the capillaries being of small size, uniting at long and wide intervals. Its nerves are derived from the ciliary nerves.

THE AQUEOUS HUMOR is the fluid that fills the anterior chamber of the eye, that area between the cornea and the front surface of the crystalline lens. It drains into the scleral sinuses by passage through the "pectinate villi" which are analogous in structure and function to the arachnoid villi of the cerebral meninges. The aqueous is produced by the ciliary body that is just posterior to the root of the iris and extends backwards along the inner globe to the anterior aspect of the retina. The aqueous finds its way into the anterior chamber by flowing between the crystalline lens and the iris through the pupil. It has two functions; it provides nutrients to the cornea and it is part of the optical pathway of the eye. The aqueous humor is basically a fortified blood plasma that circulates in the anterior chamber, providing nutrients to the cornea and the crystalline lens. It is a transparent fluid with an index of refraction of 1.333, which is slightly less than the index of refraction of the cornea (1.376) and less than the index of refraction of the lens (gradient index of 1.406 to 1.386).

THE CORNEA is the projecting transparent part of the external tunic, and forms the anterior sixth of the surface of the bulb. It is almost circular in outline, occasionally a little broader in the transverse than in the vertical direction. It is convex anteriorly and projects like a dome in front of the sclera. The cornea is dense and of uniform thickness throughout; its posterior surface is perfectly circular in outline, and exceeds the anterior surface slightly in diameter. Immediately in front of the sclero-corneal junction the cornea bulges inward as a thickened rim, and behind this there is a distinct furrow between the attachment of the iris and the sclero-corneal junction. Between this tissue and the anterior surface of the attached margin of the iris is an angular recess, designated as the iridial angle or filtration angle of the eye. Immediately outside the filtration angle is a projecting rim of scleral tissue which appears in a meridional section as a small triangular area, termed the scleral spur. Its base is continuous with the inner surface of the sclera immediately to the outer side of the filtration angle and its apex is directed forward and inward. To the anterior sloping margin of this spur, are attached the bundles of trabecular tissue just referred to; from its posterior margin the meridional fibers of the ciliaris muscle arise.

The cornea consists from before backward of four layers; namely: (1) the corneal epithelium, continuous with that of the conjunctiva; (2) the substantia propria (3) the posterior elastic lamina; and (4) the endothelium of the anterior chamber.

The corneal epithelium covers the front of the cornea and consists of several layers of cells. The cells of the deepest layer are columnar; then follow two or three layers of polyhedral cells, the majority of which are prickly cells similar to those found in the stratum mucosum of the cuticle. Lastly, there are three or four layers of squamous cells, with flattened nuclei.

The substantia propria is fibrous, tough, unyielding, and perfectly transparent. It is composed of about sixty flattened lamellae, superimposed one on another. These lamellae are made up of bundles of modified connective tissue, the fibers of which are directly continuous with those of the sclera. The fibers of each lamella are for the most part parallel with one another, but at right angles to those of adjacent lamellæ. Fibers, however, frequently pass from one lamella to the next.

The lamellae are connected with each other by an interstitial cement substance, in which are spaces, the corneal spaces. These are stellate in shape and communicate with one another by numerous offsets. Each contains a cell, the corneal corpuscle, resembling in form the space in which it is lodged, but not entirely filling it.

The layer immediately beneath the corneal epithelium differs, however, from the posterior elastic lamina, in presenting evidence of fibrillar structure, and in not having the same tendency to curl inward, or to undergo fracture, when detached from the other layers of the cornea. It consists of extremely closely interwoven fibrils, similar to those found in the substantia propria, but contains no corneal corpuscles. It may be regarded as a condensed part of the substantia propria.

The posterior elastic lamina covers the posterior surface of the substantia propria, and is an elastic, transparent homogeneous membrane, of extreme thinness, which is not rendered opaque by either water, alcohol, or acids. When stripped from the substantia propria it curls up, or rolls upon itself with the attached surface innermost.

At the margin of the cornea the posterior elastic lamina breaks up into fibers which form the trabecular tissue already described; the spaces between the trabeculae are termed the spaces of the angle of the iris; they communicate with the sinus venosus sclerae and with the anterior chamber at the filtration angle. Some of the fibers of this trabecular tissue are continued into the substance of the iris, forming the pectinate ligament of the iris; while others are connected with the forepart of the sclera and choroid.

The endothelium of the anterior chamber covers the posterior surface of the elastic lamina, is reflected on to the front of the iris, and also lines the spaces of the angle of the iris; it consists of a single stratum of polygonal, flattened, nucleated cells.

VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE CORNEA.— The cornea is a non-vascular structure; the capillary vessels ending in loops at its circumference are derived from the anterior ciliary arteries. Lymphatic vessels are represented by the channels in which the bundles of nerves run; these channels are lined by an endothelium.

The nerves are numerous and are derived from the ciliary nerves. Around the periphery of the cornea they form an annular plexus, from which fibers enter the substantia propria. They lose their medullary sheaths and ramify throughout its substance in a delicate network, and their terminal filaments form a firm and closer plexus on the surface of the cornea proper, beneath the epithelium. This is termed the subepithelial plexus, and from it fibrils are given off which ramify between the epithelial cells, forming an intraepithelial plexus.

THE VASCULAR TUNIC.— The vascular tunic of the eye is formed from behind forward by the choroid, the ciliary body, and the iris.

THE CHOROID invests the posterior five-sixths of the bulb, and extends as far forward as the ora serrata of the retina. The ciliary body connects the choroid to the circumference of the iris. The iris is a circular diaphragm behind the cornea, and presents near its center a rounded aperture, the pupil.

The choroid is a thin, highly vascular membrane, of a dark brown or chocolate color, investing the posterior five-sixths of the globe; it is pierced behind by the optic nerve, and in this situation is firmly adherent to the sclera. It is thicker behind than in front. Its outer surface is loosely connected by the lamina suprachorioidea with the sclera; its inner surface is attached to the pigmented layer of the retina.

The choroid consists mainly of a dense capillary plexus, and of small arteries and veins carrying blood to and returning it from this plexus. On its external surface is a thin membrane, the lamina suprachorioidea, composed of delicate non-vascular lamellae — each lamella consisting of a network of fine elastic fibers among which are branched pigment cells. The spaces between the lamellae are lined by endothelium, and open freely into the perichoroidal lymph space, which, in its turn, communicates with the periscleral space by the perforations in the sclera through which the vessels and nerves are transmitted.

Internal to this lamina is the choroid proper, consisting of two layers: an outer, composed of small arteries and veins, with pigment cells interspersed between them; and an inner, consisting of a capillary plexus. The outer layer (lamina vasculosa) consists, in part, of the larger branches of the short ciliary arteries which run forward between the veins, before they bend inward to end in the capillaries, but is formed principally of veins, named, from their arrangement, the venae vorticosae. They converge to four or five equidistant trunks, which pierce the sclera about midway between the sclero-corneal junction and the entrance of the optic nerve. Interspersed between the vessels are dark star-shaped pigment cells, the processes of which, communicating with those of neighboring cells, form a delicate network or stroma, which toward the inner surface of the choroid loses its pigmentary character. The inner layer (lamina choriocapillaris) consists of an exceedingly fine capillary plexus, formed by the short ciliary vessels; the network is closer and finer in the posterior than in the anterior part of the choroid. About 1.25 cm behind the cornea its meshes become larger, and are continuous with those of the ciliary processes. These two laminae are connected by a stratum intermedium consisting of fine elastic fibers. On the inner surface of the lamina choriocapillaris is a very thin, structureless, or faintly fibrous membrane, designated as the lamina basalis; it is closely connected with the stroma of the choroid, and separates it from the pigmentary layer of the retina.

One of the functions of the choroid is to provide nutrition for the retina, and to convey vessels and nerves to the ciliary body and iris.

THE CILIARY BODY comprises the orbiculus ciliaris, the ciliary processes, and the Ciliaris muscle.

THE ORBICULUS CILIARIS is a zone of about 4 mm in width, directly continuous with the anterior part of the choroid; it presents numerous ridges arranged in a radial manner.

THE CILIARY PROCESSES are formed by the inward folding of the various layers of the choroid, i.e., the choroid proper and the lamina basalis, and are received between corresponding foldings of the suspensory ligament of the lens. They are arranged in a circle, and form a sort of frill behind the iris, around the margin of the lens. They vary from sixty to eighty in number, lie side by side, and may be divided into large and small; the former are about 2.5 mm in length, and the latter, consisting of about one-third of the entire number, are situated in spaces between them, but without regular arrangement. They are attached by their periphery to three or four of the ridges of the orbiculus ciliaris, and are continuous with the layers of the choroid: their opposite extremities are free and rounded, and are directed toward the posterior chamber of the eyeball and circumference of the lens. In front, they are continuous with the periphery of the iris. Their posterior surfaces are connected with the suspensory ligament of the lens.

The ciliary processes are similar in structure to the choroid, but the vessels are larger, and have chiefly a longitudinal direction. Their posterior surfaces are covered by a bilaminar layer of black pigment cells, which is continued forward from the retina, and is named the pars ciliaris retinae. In the stroma of the ciliary processes there are also stellate pigment cells, but these are not so numerous as in the choroid itself.

THE CILIARIS MUSCLE consists of unstriped fibers: it forms a grayish, semitransparent, circular band, about 3 mm. broad, on the outer surface of the fore-part of the choroid. It is thickest in front, and consists of two sets of fibers, meridional and circular. The meridional fibers, much the more numerous, arise from the posterior margin of the scleral spur; they run backward, and are attached to the ciliary processes and orbiculus ciliaris. The circular fibers are internal to the meridional ones, and in a meridional section appear as a triangular zone behind the filtration angle and close to the circumference of the iris. They are well-developed in hypermetropic, but are rudimentary or absent in myopic eyes. The Ciliaris muscle is the chief agent in accommodation, i. e., in adjusting the eye to the vision of near objects. When it contracts it draws forward the ciliary processes, relaxes the suspensory ligament of the lens, and thus allows the lens to become more convex.

THE IRIS.— The iris is a thin, circular, contractile disk, of around 12 mm in diameter, suspended in the aqueous humor between the cornea and lens, and perforated a little to the nasal side of its center by a circular aperture, the pupil. By its periphery it is continuous with the ciliary body, and is also connected with the posterior elastic lamina of the cornea by means of the pectinate ligament; its surfaces are flattened, and look forward and backward, the anterior toward the cornea, the posterior toward the ciliary processes and lens. The iris divides the space between the lens and the cornea into an anterior and a posterior chamber. The anterior chamber of the eye is bounded in front by the posterior surface of the cornea; behind by the front of the iris and the central part of the lens. The posterior chamber is a narrow chink behind the peripheral part of the iris, and in front of the suspensory ligament of the lens and the ciliary processes.

An astounding level of intricacy is revealed by a macro photograph of a human eye in the area around the iris. In this example, the blue iris is mostly filled with an incredible swirling pattern, which gives way to yellow on the outer edges.⁷⁷⁴

The iris is composed of the following structures:

1. In front is a layer of flattened endothelial cells placed on a delicate hyaline basement membrane. This layer is continuous with the endothelium covering the posterior elastic lamina of the cornea, and in individuals with dark-colored irides the cells contain pigment granules.
2. The stroma of the iris consists of fibers and cells. The former are made up of delicate bundles of fibrous tissue; a few fibers at the circumference of the iris have a circular direction; but the majority radiate toward the pupil, forming by their interlacement, delicate meshes, in which the vessels and nerves are contained. Interspersed between the bundles of connective tissue are numerous branched cells with fine processes. In dark eyes many of them contain pigment granules, but in blue eyes and the eyes of albinos they are unpigmented.
3. The muscular fibers are involuntary, and consist of circular and radiating fibers. The circular fibers form the sphincter pupillae; they are arranged in a narrow band about 1 mm in width which surrounds the margin of the pupil toward the posterior surface of the iris; those near the free margin are closely aggregated; those near the periphery of the band are somewhat separated and form incomplete circles. The radiating fibers form the dilatator pupillae; they converge from the circumference toward the center, and blend with the circular fibers near the margin of the pupil.

⁷⁷⁴ As we have indicated in the previous annotation, here too, observe carefully the macro photograph of this eye model and look beyond the obvious, beyond the surface, beyond the living painting, and ask yourself the question: “How did FATHER came out to such organ and has designed it and its functioning?” Think in terms of the level of intricacy in the modelling, creativity and knowledge required to even picture such organ into existence. Think about “THE DIVINE FORCE” who is in the process of producing this organ into existence during the fulfilment of this sixth decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. Reflect on “THE SCIENCE” that has been deployed inside you, as human creature; reflect on the depth and the scope of the “INTELLECTUAL” work that was deployed to bring you into existence, and most importantly, reflect on the origin of that “SCIENCE”.

4. The posterior surface of the iris is of a deep purple tint, being covered by two layers of pigmented columnar epithelium, continuous at the periphery of the iris with the pars ciliaris retinae. This pigmented epithelium is named the pars iridica retinae, or, from the resemblance of its color to that of a ripe grape, the uvea.

The color of the iris is produced by the reflection of light from dark pigment cells underlying a translucent tissue, and is therefore determined by the amount of the pigment and its distribution throughout the texture of the iris. The number and the situation of the pigment cells differ in different irides. In the albino pigment is absent; in the various shades of blue eyes the pigment cells are confined to the posterior surface of the iris, whereas in gray, brown, and black eyes pigment is found also in the cells of the stroma and in those of the endothelium on the front of the iris.

The iris tissue forms complex patterns of ridges and folds, which will contain many distinct and unique features for each copy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The three most common iris patterns are pigmented rings, crypts, and furrows. Pigmented rings are wide, colored bands around the pupil, which are a different shade than the rest of the iris: they provide a measure of the amount of melanin that surrounds the pupil and distinguishes different shades of green and hazel eye color. Crypts are tiny diamond-shaped holes or pits near the pupillary margin of the anterior surface of the iris, which that can range in size; these are spaces in the anterior iris stroma through which the aqueous humor washes with every pupillary movement. Furrows are regions on the iris, which are formed by a series of pale lines, which are circumferentially folded when the iris adapts in response to different light conditions.

The iris controls the amount of light entering the eye which is focused by the lens onto the retina so as to provide the sense of vision. It contracts in bright light making the pupil smaller and dilates in dark conditions making the pupil larger, which together with the source of the incident light can influence the perception of the color of the eye and the iris pattern. In the brown iris there is an abundance of melanocytes and melanin in the anterior border layer and stroma whereas in the blue iris these layers contain very little melanin. As light traverses these relatively melanin-free layers, collagen fibrils of the iris scatter the short blue wavelengths to the surface, thus a blue iris is a consequence of structure not of major differences in chemical composition. Different shades of blue, and in irises with a limited amount of melanin, different shades of grey, green and hazel, are determined by the thickness and density of the iris itself and the extent of accumulation of white collagen fibres, as well as patches of tissue loss in the anterior border layer and stroma.

The arteries of the iris are derived from the long and anterior ciliary arteries, and from the vessels of the ciliary processes. Each of the two long ciliary arteries, having reached the attached margin of the iris, divides into an upper and lower branch; these anastomose with corresponding branches from the opposite side and thus encircle the iris; into this vascular circle the anterior ciliary arteries pour their blood, and from it vessels converge to the free margin of the iris, and there communicate and form a second circle.

The nerves of the choroid and iris are the long and short ciliary; the former being branches of the nasociliary nerve, the latter of the ciliary ganglion. They pierce the sclera around the entrance of the optic nerve, run forward in the perichoroidal space, and supply the bloodvessels of the choroid. After reaching the iris they form a plexus around its attached margin; from this are derived non-medullated fibers which end in the sphincter and dilatator pupillae. Other fibers from the plexus end in a network on the anterior surface of the iris. The fibers derived through the motor root of the ciliary ganglion from the oculomotor nerve, supply the sphincter, while those derived from the sympathetic supply the dilatator.

THE RETINA.— The retina is a delicate nervous membrane, upon which the images of external objects are received. Its outer surface is in contact with the choroid; its inner with the hyaloid membrane of the vitreous body. Behind, it is continuous with the optic nerve; it gradually diminishes in thickness from behind forward, and extends nearly as far as the ciliary body, where it appears to end in a jagged margin, the ora serrata. Here the nervous tissues of the retina end, but a thin prolongation of the membrane extends forward over the back of the ciliary processes and iris, forming the pars ciliaris retinæ and pars iridica retinæ already referred to. This forward prolongation consists of the pigmentary layer of the retina together with a stratum of columnar epithelium. The retina is soft, semitransparent, and of a purple tint in the fresh state, owing to the presence of a coloring material named rhodopsin or visual purple; but it soon becomes clouded, opaque, and bleached when exposed to sunlight. Exactly in the center of the posterior part of the retina, corresponding to the axis of the eye, and at a point in which the sense of vision is most perfect, is an oval yellowish area, the macula lutea; in the macula is a central depression, the fovea centralis. At the fovea centralis the retina is exceedingly thin, and the dark color of the choroid is distinctly seen through it. About 3 mm to the nasal side of the macula lutea is the entrance of the optic nerve (optic disk), the circumference of which is slightly raised to form an eminence; the arteria centralis retinæ pierces the center of the disk. This is the only part of the surface of the retina which is insensitive to light, and it is termed the blind spot.

The retina consists of an outer pigmented layer and an inner nervous stratum or retina proper. The pigmented layer consists of a single stratum of cells. When viewed from the outer surface these cells are smooth and hexagonal⁷⁷⁵ in shape; when seen in section, each cell consists of an outer non-pigmented part containing a large oval nucleus and an inner pigmented portion which extends as ⁷⁷⁵ Why hexagons, rather than squares or even triangles, you will ask? As we have indicated already, it is because the use of regular hexagonal forms provides the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter. Space-efficiency is not the only benefit of using regular hexagons. Stacked together, regular hexagons fill spans in an offset arrangement with six short walls around each “tube”, giving the resulting structures a high compression strength. The regular hexagon is the base shape for a matrix that minimized the used of construction material while at the same time maximizing the strength and reducing the weight of the final product.

a series of straight thread-like processes between the rods, this being especially the case when the eye is exposed to light. In the eyes of albinos the cells of this layer are destitute of pigment.

Seven (7) layers constituents of nervous structures of the retina proper

The nervous structures of the retina proper are supported by a series of nonnervous or sustentacular fibers, and, when examined microscopically by means of sections made perpendicularly to the surface of the retina, are found to consist of seven (7) layers, designated from within outward as follows:

1. Optical layer.
2. Ganglionic layer.
3. Inner plexiform layer.
4. Inner nuclear layer, or layer of inner granules.
5. Outer plexiform layer.

6. Outer nuclear layer, or layer of outer granules.
7. Layer of rods and cones.

1. THE OPTICAL LAYER OR LAYER OF NERVE FIBERS is formed by the expansion of the fibers of the optic nerve; it is thickest near the porus opticus, gradually diminishing toward the ora serrata. As the nerve fibers pass through the lamina cribrosa scleræ they lose their medullary sheaths and are continued onward through the choroid and retina as simple axis-cylinders. When they reach the internal surface of the retina they radiate from their point of entrance over this surface grouped in bundles, and in many places arranged in plexuses. Most of the fibers are centripetal, and are the direct continuations of the axis-cylinder processes of the cells of the ganglionic layer, but a few of them are centrifugal and ramify in the inner plexiform and inner nuclear layers, where they end in enlarged extremities.

2. THE GANGLIONIC LAYER consists of a single layer of large ganglion cells, except in the macula lutea, where there are several strata. The cells are somewhat flask-shaped; the rounded internal surface of each resting on the stratum opticum, and sending off an axon which is prolonged into it. From the opposite end numerous dendrites extend into the inner plexiform layer, where they branch and form flattened arborizations at different levels. The ganglion cells vary much in size, and the dendrites of the smaller ones as a rule arborize in the inner plexiform layer as soon as they enter it; while those of the larger cells ramify close to the inner nuclear layer.

3. THE INNER PLEXIFORM LAYER is made up of a dense reticulum of minute fibrils formed by the interlacement of the dendrites of the ganglion cells with those of the cells of the inner nuclear layer; within this reticulum a few branched spongioblasts are sometimes imbedded.

4. THE INNER NUCLEAR LAYER OR LAYER OF INNER GRANULES is made up of a number of closely packed cells, of which there are three varieties, namely: bipolar cells, horizontal cells, and amacrine cells.

- The bipolar cells, by far the most numerous, are round or oval in shape, and each is prolonged into an inner and an outer process. They are divisible into rod bipolars and cone bipolars. The inner processes of the rod bipolars run through the inner plexiform layer and arborize around the bodies of the cells of the ganglionic layer; their outer processes end in the outer plexiform layer in tufts of fibrils around the button-like ends of the inner processes of the rod granules. The inner processes of the cone bipolars ramify in the inner plexiform layer in contact with the dendrites of the ganglionic cells.

- The horizontal cells lie in the outer part of the inner nuclear layer and possess somewhat flattened cell bodies. Their dendrites divide into numerous branches in the outer plexiform layer, while their axons run horizontally for some distance and finally ramify in the same layer.
- The amacrine cells are placed in the inner part of the inner nuclear layer, and are so named because they have not yet been shown to possess axis-cylinder processes. Their dendrites undergo extensive ramification in the inner plexiform layer.

5. THE OUTER PLEXIFORM LAYER is much thinner than the inner layer; but, like it, consists of a dense network of minute fibrils derived from the processes of the horizontal cells of the preceding layer, and the outer processes of the rod and cone bipolar granules, which ramify in it, forming arborizations around the enlarged ends of the rod fibers and with the branched foot plates of the cone fibers.

6. THE OUTER NUCLEAR LAYER OR LAYER OF OUTER GRANULES, like the inner nuclear layer, contains several strata of oval nuclear bodies; they are of two kinds, namely: rod and cone granules, so named on account of their being respectively connected with the rods and cones of the next layer. The rod granules are much the more numerous, and are placed at different levels throughout the layer. Their nuclei present a peculiar cross-striped appearance, and prolonged from either extremity of each cell is a refined process; the outer process is continuous with a single rod of the layer of rods and cones; the inner ends in the outer plexiform layer in an enlarged extremity, and is imbedded in the tuft into which the outer processes of the rod bipolar cells break up. In its course it presents numerous varicosities. The cone granules, fewer in number than the rod granules, are placed close to the membrana limitans externa, through which they are continuous with the cones of the layer of rods and cones. They do not present any cross-striation, but contain a pyriform nucleus, which almost completely fills the cell. From the inner extremity of the granule a thick process passes into the outer plexiform layer, and there expands into a pyramidal enlargement or foot plate, from which are given off numerous fine fibrils, that come in contact with the outer processes of the cone bipolars.

7. THE PIGMENTED LAYER OF RETINA OR RETINAL PIGMENT EPITHELIUM is the pigmented cell layer just outside the neurosensory retina that nourishes retinal visual cells, and is firmly attached to the underlying choroid and overlying retinal visual cells.

The retinal pigment epithelium is composed of a single layer of hexagonal cells that are densely packed with pigment granules. When viewed from the outer surface, these cells are smooth and hexagonal in shape. When seen in section, each cell consists of an outer non-pigmented part containing a large oval nucleus and an inner pigmented portion which extends as a series of straight thread-like processes between the rods, this being especially the case when the eye is exposed to light.

The retinal pigment epithelium has several functions, namely, light absorption, epithelial transport, spatial ion buffering, visual cycle, phagocytosis, secretion and immune modulation.

- Light absorption: the retinal pigment epithelium is responsible for absorbing scattered light. This role is very important for two main reasons, first, to improve the quality of the optical system, second, light is radiation, and it is concentrated by a lens onto the cells of the macula, resulting in a strong concentration of photo-oxidative energy. Melanosomes absorb the scattered light and thus diminish the photo-oxidative stress. The high perfusion of retina brings a high oxygen tension environment. The combination of light and oxygen brings oxidative stress, and RPE has many mechanisms to cope with it.
- Epithelial transport: the retinal pigment epithelium composes the outer blood–retinal barrier, the epithelia has tight junctions between the lateral surfaces and implies an isolation of the inner retina from the systemic influences. This is important for the immune privilege (not only as barrier, but with signalling process as well) of eyes, a highly selective transport of substances for a tightly controlled environment. The retinal pigment epithelium supply nutrients to photoreceptors, control ion homeostasis and eliminate water and metabolites.
- Spatial buffering of ions: Changes in the subretinal space are fast and require a capacitative compensation by the retinal pigment epithelium many cells are involved in transduction of light and if they are not compensated for, they are no longer excitable and proper transduction would not be possible. The normal transepithelial transport of ions would be too slow to compensate quickly enough for these changes, there are many underlying mechanisms based on the activity of voltage-dependent ion channels add to the basic transepithelial transport of ions.

- Visual cycle: The visual cycle fulfills an essential task of maintaining visual function and needs therefore to be adapted to different visual needs such as vision in darkness or lightness. For this, functional aspects come into play: the storage of retinal and the adaption of the reaction speed. Basically vision at low light intensities requires a lower turn-over rate of the visual cycle whereas during light the turn-over rate is much higher. In the transition from darkness to light suddenly, large amount of 11-cis retinal is required. This comes not directly from the visual cycle but from several retinal pools of retinal binding proteins which are connected to each other by the transportation and reaction steps of the visual cycle.
- Phagocytosis of photoreceptor outer segment membranes: the photoreceptor outer segment membranes are exposed to constant photo-oxidative stress, and they go through constant destruction by it. They are constantly renewed by shedding their end, which the retinal pigment epithelium then phagocytose and digest.
- Secretion: The retinal pigment epithelium is an epithelium which closely interacts with photoreceptors on one side but must also be able to interact with cells on the blood side of the epithelium, such as endothelial cells or cells of the immune system. In order to communicate with the neighboring tissues the retinal pigment epithelium is able to secrete a large variety of factors and signaling molecules. It secretes ATP molecules, fas-ligand (fas-L), fibroblast growth factors (FGF-1, FGF-2, and FGF-5), transforming growth factor- β (TGF- β), insulin-like growth factor-1 (IGF-1), ciliary neurotrophic factor (CNTF), platelet-derived growth factor (PDGF), vascular endothelial growth factor (VEGF), lens epithelium-derived growth factor (LEDGF), members of the interleukin family, tissue inhibitor of matrix metalloproteinase (TIMP) and pigment epithelium-derived factor (PEDF). Many of these signaling molecules have important physiopathologic roles.
- Immune privilege of the eye: The inner eye represents an immune privileged space which is disconnected from the immune system of the blood stream. The immune privilege is supported by the retinal pigment epithelium in two ways. First, it represents a mechanical and tight barrier which separates the inner space of the eye from the blood stream. Second, the retinal pigment epithelium is able to communicate with the immune system in order to silence immune reaction in the healthy eye or, on the other hand, to activate the immune system in the case of disease.

SUPPORTING FRAMEWORK OF THE RETINA.— The nervous layers of the retina are connected together by a supporting frame-work, formed by the sustentacular fibers of Müller; these fibers pass through all the nervous layers, except that of the rods and cones. Each begins on the inner surface of the retina by an expanded, often forked base, which sometimes contains a spheroidal body staining deeply with hematoxylin, the edges of the bases of adjoining fibers being united to form the membrana limitans interna. As the fibers pass through the nerve fiber and ganglionic layers they give off a few lateral branches; in the inner nuclear layer they give off numerous lateral processes for the support of the bipolar cells, while in the outer nuclear layer they form a network around the rod- and cone-fibrils, and unite to form the membrana limitans externa at the bases of the rods and cones. At the level of the inner nuclear layer each sustentacular fiber contains a clear oval nucleus.

MACULA LUTEA AND FOVEA CENTRALIS.— In the macula lutea the nerve fibers are wanting as a continuous layer, the ganglionic layer consists of several strata of cells, there are no rods, but only cones, which are longer and narrower than in other parts, and in the outer nuclear layer there are only cone-granules, the processes of which are very long and arranged in curved lines. In the fovea centralis the only parts present are: (1) the cones; (2) the outer nuclear layer, the cone-fibers of which are almost horizontal in direction; (3) an exceedingly thin inner plexiform layer. The pigmented layer is thicker and its pigment more pronounced than elsewhere. The color of the macula seems to imbue all the layers except that of the rods and cones; it is of a rich yellow, deepest toward the center of the macula, and does not appear to be due to pigment cells, but simply to a staining of the constituent parts.

At the ora serrata the nervous layers of the retina end abruptly, and the retina is continued onward as a single layer of columnar cells covered by the pigmented layer. This double layer is known as the pars ciliaris retinae, and can be traced forward from the ciliary processes on to the back of the iris, where it is termed the pars iridica retinae or uvea.

The arteria centralis retinae and its accompanying vein pierce the optic nerve, and enter the bulb of the eye through the porus opticus. The artery immediately bifurcates into an upper and a lower branch, and each of these again divides into a medial or nasal and a lateral or temporal branch, which at first run between the hyaloid membrane and the nervous layer; but they soon enter the latter, and pass forward, dividing dichotomously. From these branches a minute capillary plexus is given off, which does not extend beyond the inner nuclear layer. The macula receives two small branches (superior and inferior macular arteries) from the temporal branches and small twigs directly from the central artery; these do not, however, reach as far as the fovea centralis, which has no bloodvessels. The branches of the arteria centralis retinae do not anastomose with each other; in other words they are terminal arteries.

THE REFRACTING MEDIA — is constituted by the fluids and transparent tissues of the eye, which refract light rays passing through them toward the retina. The refracting media includes the aqueous humor, the vitreous body, and the crystalline lens.

The aqueous humor fills the anterior and posterior chambers of the eyeball. It is small in quantity, has an alkaline reaction, and consists mainly of water, less than one-fiftieth of its weight being solid matter, chiefly chloride of sodium.

The vitreous body forms about four-fifths of the bulb of the eye. It fills the concavity of the retina, and is hollowed in front, forming a deep concavity, the hyaloid fossa, for the reception of the lens. It is transparent, of the consistence of thin jelly, and is composed of an albuminous fluid enclosed in a delicate transparent membrane, the hyaloid membrane. In the center of the vitreous body, running from the entrance of the optic nerve to the posterior surface of the lens, is a canal, the hyaloid canal, filled with lymph and lined by a prolongation of the hyaloid membrane. This canal, in the embryonic vitreous body, conveyed the arteria hyaloidea from the central artery of the retina to the back of the lens. The fluid from the vitreous body is nearly pure water; it contains, however, some salts, and a little albumin.

The hyaloid membrane envelopes the vitreous body. The portion in front of the ora serrata is thickened by the accession of radial fibers and is termed the zonula ciliaris. Here it presents a series of radially arranged furrows, in which the ciliary processes are accommodated and to which they adhere, as is shown by the fact that when they are removed some of their pigment remains attached to the zonula. The zonula ciliaris splits into two layers, one of which is thin and lines the hyaloid fossa; the other is named the suspensory ligament of the lens: it is thicker, and passes over the ciliary body to be attached to the capsule of the lens a short distance in front of its equator. Scattered and delicate fibers are also attached to the region of the equator itself. This ligament retains the lens in position, and is relaxed by the contraction of the meridional fibers of the ciliaris muscle, so that the lens is allowed to become more convex. Behind the suspensory ligament there is a sacculated canal, the spatia zonularis, which encircles the equator of the lens; it can be easily inflated through a fine blowpipe inserted under the suspensory ligament.

No bloodvessels penetrate the vitreous body, so that its nutrition will be carried on by vessels of the retina and ciliary processes, situated upon its exterior.

THE CRYSTALLINE LENS.— The crystalline lens, enclosed in its capsule, is situated immediately behind the iris, in front of the vitreous body, and encircled by the ciliary processes, which slightly overlap its margin.

The capsule of the lens (capsula lentis) is a transparent, structureless membrane which closely surrounds the lens, and is thicker in front than behind. It is brittle but highly elastic, and when ruptured the edges roll up with the outer surface innermost. It rests, behind, in the hyaloid fossa in the forepart of the vitreous body; in front, it is in contact with the free border of the iris, but recedes from it at the circumference, thus forming the posterior chamber of the eye; it is retained in its position chiefly by the suspensory ligament of the lens, already described.

The lens is a transparent, biconvex body, the convexity of its anterior being less than that of its posterior surface. The central points of these surfaces are termed respectively the anterior and posterior poles; a line connecting the poles constitutes the axis of the lens, while the marginal circumference is termed the equator.

The lens is made up of soft cortical substance and a firm, central part, the nucleus. Faint lines radiate from the poles to the equator. They correspond with the free edges of an equal number of septa composed of an amorphous substance, which dip into the substance of the lens. When the lens has been hardened it is seen to consist of a series of concentrically arranged laminae, each of which is interrupted at the septa referred to. Each lamina is built up of a number of hexagonal, ribbon-like lens fibers, the edges of which are more or less serrated — the serrations fitting between those of neighboring fibers, while the ends of the fibers come into apposition at the septa.

The fibers run in a curved manner from the septa on the anterior surface to those on the posterior surface. No fibers pass from pole to pole; they are arranged in such a way that those which begin near the pole on one surface of the lens end near the peripheral extremity of the plane on the other, and vice versa. The fibers of the outer layers of the lens are nucleated, and together form a nuclear layer, most distinct toward the equator. The anterior surface of the lens is covered by a layer of transparent, columnar, nucleated epithelium. At the equator the cells become elongated, and their gradual transition into lens fibers can be traced.

THE ACCESSORY ORGANS OF THE EYE

The accessory organs of the eye include the ocular muscles, the fasciae, the eyebrows, the eyelids, which we have covered in the previous section, the conjunctiva, and the lacrimal apparatus. The lacrimal apparatus consists of (a) the lacrimal gland, which secretes the tears, and its excretory ducts, which convey the fluid to the surface of the eye; (b) the lacrimal ducts, the lacrimal sac, and the nasolacrimal duct, by which the fluid is conveyed into the cavity of the nose.

THE ORGAN OF HEARING

It is the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Auditory Structure” that will allow the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to collect auditory signals emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, external and immediate, around it.

The ear, or organ of hearing, is divisible into three parts: the external ear, the middle ear or tympanic cavity, and the internal ear or labyrinth.

THE ORGAN OF HEARING — THE EXTERNAL EAR

The external ear can be divided functionally and structurally into two parts; the auricle (or pinna), and the external acoustic meatus, which ends at the tympanic membrane.

THE AURICLE is the external, visible component of the ear around the outer opening of the ear canal. It consists of the expanded portion named the auricula or pinna, and the external acoustic meatus. The former projects from the side of the head and serves to collect the vibrations of the air by which sound is produced; the latter leads inward from the bottom of the auricula and conducts the vibrations to the tympanic cavity.

The auricle is of an ovoid form, with its larger end directed upward. Its lateral surface is irregularly concave, directed slightly forward, and presents numerous eminences and depressions to which names have been assigned. The prominent rim of the auricula is called the helix; where the helix turns downward behind, a small tubercle, the auricular lobule, is frequently seen. Another curved prominence, parallel with and in front of the helix, is designated as the antihelix; this divides above into two crura, between which is a triangular depression, the fossa triangularis. The narrow-curved depression between the helix and the antihelix is designated as the scapha; the antihelix describes a curve around a deep, capacious cavity, the concha, which is partially divided into two parts by the crus or commencement of the helix; the upper part is termed the cymba conchae, the lower part the cavum conchae. In front of the concha, and projecting backward over the meatus, is a small pointed eminence, designated as the tragus. Opposite the tragus, and separated from it by the intertragic notch, is a small tubercle, the antitragus. Below this is the lobule, composed of tough areolar and adipose tissues, and wanting the firmness and elasticity of the rest of the auricula.

The auricle is composed of a thin plate of yellow fibrocartilage, covered with integument, and connected to the surrounding parts by ligaments and muscles; and to the commencement of the external acoustic meatus by fibrous tissue.

The cartilage of the auricle consists of a single piece; it gives form to this part of the ear, and upon its surface are found the eminences and depressions above described. It is absent from the lobule; it is deficient, also, between the tragus and beginning of the helix, the gap being filled up by dense fibrous tissue. At the front part of the auricula, where the helix bends upward, is a small projection of cartilage, designated as the spina helices, while in the lower part of the helix the cartilage is prolonged downward as a tail-like process, the cauda helices; this is separated from the antihelix by a fissure, the fissura antitragohelicina. The cranial aspect of the cartilage exhibits a transverse furrow, the sulcus antihelices transversus, which corresponds with the inferior crus of the antihelix.

The sensory innervation of the auricle is provided by the great auricular nerve (originating from cervical plexus) supplying the helix, antihelix and lobule of the auricle; the lesser occipital nerve (also from cervical plexus) supplying the superior part of the cranial surface of the auricle; the auriculotemporal nerve (a branch of the mandibular nerve) innervating the tragus, the crus and the adjacent part of the helix; and the auricular branch of the vagus nerve (CN X) together with the facial nerve (CN VII) supplying small areas of the auricle, innervating the concha, as well as the posterior and superior parts of the eminentia of the concha, which is present on the posterior surface of the auricle. The posterior and anterior auricular arteries arising from the external carotid artery provide blood supply to the auricle.

THE EXTERNAL ACOUSTIC MEATUS (also designated as the external auditory meatus, the external auditory canal or the ear canal) is an air-filled tubular space that extends from the bottom of the concha to the tympanic membrane. It is about 4 cm in length if measured from the tragus; from the bottom of the concha its length is about 2.5 cm. It forms an S-shaped curve, and is directed at first inward, forward, and slightly upward (pars externa); it then passes inward and backward (pars media), and lastly is carried inward, forward, and slightly downward (pars interna). It is an oval cylindrical canal, the greatest diameter being directed downward and backward at the external orifice, but nearly horizontally at the inner end. It presents two constrictions, one near the inner end of the cartilaginous portion, and another, the isthmus, in the osseous portion, about 2 cm from the bottom of the concha. The tympanic membrane, which closes the inner end of the meatus, is obliquely directed; in consequence of this the floor and anterior wall of the meatus are longer than the roof and posterior wall.

The external acoustic meatus is formed partly by cartilage and membrane, and partly by bone, and is lined by skin.

The cartilaginous portion is about 8 mm in length; it is continuous with the cartilage of the auricle, and firmly attached to the circumference of the auditory process of the temporal bone. The cartilage is deficient at the upper and back part of the meatus, its place being supplied by fibrous membrane; two or three deep fissures are present in the anterior part of the cartilage.

The osseous portion is about 16 mm in length, and is narrower than the cartilaginous portion. It is directed inward and a little forward, forming in its course a slight curve the convexity of which is upward and backward. Its inner end is smaller than the outer, and sloped, the anterior wall projecting beyond the posterior for about 4 mm; it is marked, except at its upper part, by a narrow groove, the tympanic sulcus, in which the circumference of the tympanic membrane is attached. Its outer end is dilated and rough in the greater part of its circumference, for the attachment of the cartilage of the auricle.

The sensory innervation of the external auditory meatus is provided by branches of several cranial nerves. The auriculotemporal branch of the mandibular nerve (CN V3) with the nerve to external acoustic meatus supplies the anterior and superior wall of the canal with sensory innervation. The auricular branch of the vagus nerve (CN X) supplies the posterior and inferior walls of the canal, and the facial nerve (CN VII) may also supply it due to its connection with the vagus nerve.

THE ORGAN OF HEARING — THE MIDDLE EAR

The middle ear or tympanic cavity is an irregular, laterally compressed space within the temporal bone. It is filled with air, which is conveyed to it from the nasal part of the pharynx through the auditory tube. It contains a chain of movable bones, which connect its lateral to its medial wall, and serve to convey the vibrations communicated to the tympanic membrane across the cavity to the internal ear.

The tympanic cavity consists of two parts: the tympanic cavity proper, opposite the tympanic membrane, and the attic or epitympanic recess, above the level of the membrane; the latter contains the upper half of the malleus and the greater part of the incus. Including the attic, the vertical and antero-posterior diameters of the cavity are each about 15 mm. The transverse diameter measures about 6 mm above and 4 mm below; opposite the center of the tympanic membrane it is only about 2 mm. The tympanic cavity is bounded laterally by the tympanic membrane; medially, by the lateral wall of the internal ear; it communicates, behind, with the tympanic antrum and through it with the mastoid air cells, and in front with the auditory tube.

THE TEGMENTAL WALL or roof is formed by a thin plate of bone, the tegmen tympani, which separates the cranial and tympanic cavities. It is situated on the anterior surface of the petrous portion of the temporal bone close to its angle of junction with the squama temporalis; it is prolonged backward so as to roof in the tympanic antrum, and forward to cover in the semicanal for the Tensor tympani muscle. Its lateral edge corresponds with the remains of the petrosquamous suture.

THE JUGULAR WALL or floor (paries jugularis) is narrow, and consists of a thin plate of bone (fundus tympani) which separates the tympanic cavity from the jugular fossa. It presents, near the labyrinthine wall, a small aperture for the passage of the tympanic branch of the glossopharyngeal nerve.

THE MEMBRANOUS OR LATERAL WALL (paries membranacea; outer wall) is formed mainly by the tympanic membrane, partly by the ring of bone into which this membrane is inserted. This ring of bone is incomplete at its upper part, forming a notch, close to which are three small apertures: the iter chordae posterius, the petrotympanic fissure, and the iter chordæ anterieus.

The iter chordae posterius (apertura tympanica canaliculi chordae) is situated in the angle of junction between the mastoid and membranous wall of the tympanic cavity immediately behind the tympanic membrane and on a level with the upper end of the manubrium of the malleus; it leads into a minute canal, which descends in front of the canal for the facial nerve, and ends in that canal near the stylo-mastoid foramen. Through it the chorda tympani nerve enters the tympanic cavity.

The petrotympanic fissure (fissura petrotympanica) opens just above and in front of the ring of bone into which the tympanic membrane is inserted; in this situation it is a mere slit about 2 mm in length. It lodges the anterior process and anterior ligament of the malleus, and gives passage to the anterior tympanic branch of the internal maxillary artery.

The iter chordae anterioris is placed at the medial end of the petrotympanic fissure; through it the chorda tympani nerve leaves the tympanic cavity.

THE TYMPANIC MEMBRANE (membrana tympani) separates the tympanic cavity from the bottom of the external acoustic meatus. It is a thin, semitransparent membrane, nearly oval in form, somewhat broader above than below, and directed very obliquely downward and inward so as to form an angle of about fifty-five degrees with the floor of the meatus. Its longest diameter is downward and forward, and measures from 9 to 10 mm; its shortest diameter measures from 8 to 9 mm.

The greater part of its circumference is thickened, and forms a fibrocartilaginous ring which is fixed in the tympanic sulcus at the inner end of the meatus. This sulcus is deficient superiorly at the notch, and from the ends of this notch two bands, the anterior and posterior malleolar folds, are prolonged to the lateral process of the malleus. The small, somewhat triangular part of the membrane situated above these folds is lax and thin, and is designated as the pars flaccida; in it a small orifice is sometimes seen. The manubrium of the malleus is firmly attached to the medial surface of the membrane as far as its center, which it draws toward the tympanic cavity; the lateral surface of the membrane is thus concave, and the most depressed part of this concavity is named the umbo.

The tympanic membrane is composed of three strata: a lateral (cutaneous), an intermediate (fibrous), and a medial (mucous). The cutaneous stratum is derived from the integument lining the meatus. The fibrous stratum consists of two layers: a radiate stratum, the fibers of which diverge from the manubrium of the malleus, and a circular stratum, the fibers of which are plentiful around the circumference but sparse and scattered near the center of the membrane. Branched or dendritic fibers are also present especially in the posterior half of the membrane.

The arteries of the tympanic membrane are derived from the deep auricular branch of the internal maxillary, which ramifies beneath the cutaneous stratum; and from the stylomastoid branch of the posterior auricular, and tympanic branch of the internal maxillary, which are distributed on the mucous surface. The superficial veins open into the external jugular; those on the deep surface drain partly into the transverse sinus and veins of the dura mater, and partly into a plexus on the auditory tube. The membrane receives its chief nerve supply from the auriculotemporal branch of the mandibular; the auricular branch of the vagus, and the tympanic branch of the glossopharyngeal also supply it.

The sensory innervation of the tympanic membrane is provided by several cranial nerves. The auriculotemporal nerve, arising from the mandibular nerve (CN V3), supplies the external surface of the tympanic membrane, which also receives fibers from the auricular branch of the vagus nerve (CN X), and the facial nerve (CN VII). The inner surface of the tympanic membrane is supplied by the glossopharyngeal nerve (CN IX).

THE AUDITORY TUBE (also designated as the pharyngotympanic tube, Eustachian tube) is the channel through which the tympanic cavity communicates with the nasal part of the pharynx. Its length is about 36 mm, and its direction is downward, forward, and medialward, forming an angle of about 45 degrees with the sagittal plane and one of from 30 to 40 degrees with the horizontal plane. It is formed partly of bone, partly of cartilage and fibrous tissue.

The osseous portion (pars osseo tubae auditivae) is about 12 mm in length. It begins in the carotid wall of the tympanic cavity, below the septum canalis musculotubarii, and, gradually narrowing, ends at the angle of junction of the squama and the petrous portion of the temporal bone, its extremity presenting a jagged margin which serves for the attachment of the cartilaginous portion.

The cartilaginous portion (pars cartilaginea tubae auditivae), about 24 mm in length, is formed of a triangular plate of elastic fibrocartilage, the apex of which is attached to the margin of the medial end of the osseous portion of the tube, while its base lies directly under the mucous membrane of the nasal part of the pharynx, where it forms an elevation, the torus tubarius or cushion, behind the pharyngeal orifice of the tube. The upper edge of the cartilage is curled upon itself, being bent laterally so as to present on transverse section the appearance of a hook; a groove or furrow is thus produced, which is open below and laterally, and this part of the canal is completed by fibrous membrane. The cartilage lies in a groove between the petrous part of the temporal and the great wing of the sphenoid; this groove ends opposite the middle of the medial pterygoid plate. The cartilaginous and bony portions of the tube are not in the same plane, the former inclining downward a little more than the latter. The diameter of the tube is not uniform throughout, being greatest at the pharyngeal orifice, least at the junction of the bony and cartilaginous portions, and again increased toward the tympanic cavity; the narrowest part of the tube is termed the isthmus. The position and relations of the pharyngeal orifice are described with the nasal part of the pharynx. The mucous membrane of the tube is continuous in front with that of the nasal part of the pharynx, and behind with that of the tympanic cavity; it is covered with ciliated epithelium and is thin in the osseous portion, while in the cartilaginous portion it contains many mucous glands and near the pharyngeal orifice a considerable amount of adenoid tissue. The tube is opened during deglutition by the salpingopharyngeal muscle and dilatator tube. The latter arises from the hook of the cartilage and from the membranous part of the tube, and blends below with the tensor veli palatini.

The blood supply to the auditory tube is provided by the ascending pharyngeal artery (a branch of the external carotid artery), the middle meningeal artery (a branch of the maxillary artery), and the artery of the pterygoid canal (a branch of the maxillary artery).

The venous blood is drained from the auditory tube via the pterygoid plexus of veins in the infratemporal fossa. The nerve supply to the auditory tube is provided by the tympanic plexus.

THE AUDITORY OSSICLES are a chain of three movable ossicles, the malleus, incus, and stapes contained in the tympanic cavity. The first is attached to the tympanic membrane, the last to the circumference of the fenestra vestibuli, the incus being placed between and connected to both by delicate articulations.

The malleus, so termed from its fancied resemblance to a hammer, consists of a head, neck, and three processes; namely: the manubrium, the anterior and lateral processes.

- The head (capitulum mallei) is the large upper extremity of the bone; it is oval in shape, and articulates posteriorly with the incus, being free in the rest of its extent. The facet for articulation with the incus is constricted near the middle, and consists of an upper larger and lower smaller part, which form nearly a right angle with each other. Opposite the constriction the lower margin of the facet projects in the form of a process, the cog-tooth or spur of the malleus.
- The neck is the narrow contracted part just beneath the head; below it, is a prominence, to which the various processes are attached.
- The manubrium mallei is connected by its lateral margin with the tympanic membrane. It is directed downward, medialward, and backward; it decreases in size toward its free end, which is curved slightly forward, and flattened transversely. On its medial side, near its upper end, is a slight projection, into which the tendon of the Tensor tympani is inserted.
- The anterior process is a delicate spicule, which springs from the eminence below the neck and is directed forward to the petrotympanic fissure, to which it is connected by ligamentous fibers. In the fetus this is the longest process of the malleus, and is in direct continuity with the cartilaginous bar of the mandibular arch.
- The lateral process is a slight conical projection, which springs from the root of the manubrium; it is directed laterally, and is attached to the upper part of the tympanic membrane and, by means of the anterior and posterior malleolar folds, to the extremities of the notch.

The Incus has received its designation from its supposed resemblance to an anvil, but it is more like a premolar tooth, with two roots, which differ in length, and are widely separated from each other. It consists of a body and two crura.

- The body (corpus incudis) is somewhat cubical but compressed transversely. On its anterior surface is a deeply concavo-convex facet, which articulates with the head of the malleus.

- The two crura diverge from one another nearly at right angles.
 - The short crus (crus breve; short process), somewhat conical in shape, projects almost horizontally backward, and is attached to the fossa incudis, in the lower and back part of the epitympanic recess.
 - The long crus (crus longum; long process) descends nearly vertically behind and parallel to the manubrium of the malleus, and, bending medialward, ends in a rounded projection, the lenticular process, which is tipped with cartilage, and articulates with the head of the stapes.

The Stapes, so termed from its resemblance to a stirrup, consists of a head, neck, two crura, and a base.

- The head (capitulum stapedis) presents a depression, which is covered by cartilage, and articulates with the lenticular process of the incus.
- The neck, the constricted part of the bone succeeding the head, gives insertion to the tendon of the stapedius muscle.
- The two crura (crus anterior and crus posterior) diverge from the neck and are connected at their ends by a flattened oval plate, the base (basis stapedis), which forms the foot-plate of the stirrup and is fixed to the margin of the fenestra vestibuli by a ring of ligamentous fibers. Of the two crura the anterior is shorter and less curved than the posterior.

The ossicles are connected with the walls of the tympanic cavity by ligaments: three for the malleus, and one each for the incus and stapes.

- The anterior ligament of the malleus is attached by one end to the neck of the malleus, just above the anterior process, and by the other to the anterior wall of the tympanic cavity, close to the petrotympanic fissure, some of its fibers being prolonged through the fissure to reach the spina angularis of the sphenoid.
- The superior ligament of the malleus is a delicate, round bundle which descends from the roof of the epitympanic recess to the head of the malleus.
- The lateral ligament of the malleus is a triangular band passing from the posterior part of the notch to the head of the malleus. Helmholtz described the anterior ligament and the posterior part of the lateral ligament as forming together the axis ligament around which the malleus rotates.

- The posterior ligament of the incus is a short, thick band connecting the end of the short crus of the incus to the fossa incudis.
- A superior ligament of the incus has been described, but it is little more than a fold of mucous membrane.

The vestibular surface and the circumference of the base of the stapes are covered with hyaline cartilage; that encircling the base is attached to the margin of the fenestra vestibuli by a fibrous ring, the annular ligament of the base of the stapes (ligament annulare baseos stapedis).

BLOOD VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE TYMPANIC CAVITY.— There are six arteries in the tympanic cavity. Two of them are larger than the others; namely: the tympanic branch of the internal maxillary, which supplies the tympanic membrane; and the stylomastoid branch of the posterior auricular, which supplies the back part of the tympanic cavity and mastoid cells. The smaller arteries are: the petrosal branch of the middle meningeal, which enters through the hiatus of the facial canal; a branch from the ascending pharyngeal, and another from the artery of the pterygoid canal, which accompany the auditory tube; and the tympanic branch from the internal carotid, given off in the carotid canal and perforating the thin anterior wall of the tympanic cavity. The veins terminate in the pterygoid plexus and the superior petrosal sinus. The nerves constitute the tympanic plexus, which ramifies upon the surface of the promontory. The plexus is formed by (1) the tympanic branch of the glossopharyngeal; (2) the caroticotympanic nerves; (3) the smaller superficial petrosal nerve; and (4) a branch which joins the greater superficial petrosal.

THE ORGAN OF HEARING — THE INTERNAL EAR

The internal ear is the essential part of the organ of hearing, receiving the ultimate distribution of the auditory nerve. It is called the labyrinth, from the complexity of its shape, and consists of two parts: the osseous labyrinth, a series of cavities within the petrous part of the temporal bone, and the membranous labyrinth, a series of communicating membranous sacs and ducts, contained within the bony cavities.

THE OSSEOUS LABYRINTH OF THE INTERNAL EAR

The osseous labyrinth consists of three parts: the vestibule, semicircular canals, and cochlea. These are cavities hollowed out of the substance of the bone, and lined by periosteum; they contain a clear fluid, the perilymph, in which the membranous labyrinth is situated.

THE VESTIBULE.— The vestibule is the central part of the osseous labyrinth, and is situated medial to the tympanic cavity, behind the cochlea, and in front of the semicircular canals. It is somewhat ovoid in shape, but flattened transversely; it measures about 5 mm from before backward, the same from above downward, and about 3 mm across. In its lateral or tympanic wall is the fenestra vestibuli, closed, in the fresh state, by the base of the stapes and annular ligament. On its medial wall, at the forepart, is a small circular depression, the spherical recess, which is perforated, at its anterior and inferior part, by several minute holes (macula cribrosa media) for the passage of filaments of the acoustic nerve to the saccule; and behind this depression is an oblique ridge, the crista vestibuli, the anterior end of which is named the pyramid of the vestibule. This ridge bifurcates below to enclose a small depression, the fossa cochlearis, which is perforated by a number of holes for the passage of filaments of the acoustic nerve which supply the vestibular end of the cochlear duct. As the hinder part of the medial wall is the orifice of the vestibular aquaduct, which extends to the posterior surface of the petrous portion of the temporal bone. It transmits a small vein, and contains a tubular prolongation of the membranous labyrinth, the ductus endolymphaticus, which ends in a cul-de-sac between the layers of the dura mater within the cranial cavity. On the upper wall or roof is a transversely oval depression, the recessus ellipticus, separated from the recessus sphæricus by the crista vestibuli already mentioned. The pyramid and adjoining part of the recessus ellipticus are perforated by a number of holes (macula cribrosa superior). The apertures in the pyramid transmit the nerves to the utricle; those in the recessus ellipticus the nerves to the ampullae of the superior and lateral semicircular ducts. Behind are the five orifices of the semicircular canals. In front is an elliptical opening, which communicates with the scala vestibuli of the cochlea.

THE BONY SEMICIRCULAR CANALS.— The bony semicircular canals are three in number, superior, posterior, and lateral, and are situated above and behind the vestibule. They are unequal in length, compressed from side to side, and each describes the greater part of a circle. Each measures about 0.8 mm in diameter, and presents a dilatation at one end, termed the ampulla, which measures more than twice the diameter of the tube. They open into the vestibule by five orifices, one of the apertures being common to two of the canals.

The superior semicircular canal, 15 to 20 mm in length, is vertical in direction, and is placed transversely to the long axis of the petrous portion of the temporal bone, on the anterior surface of which its arch forms a round projection. It describes about two-thirds of a circle. Its lateral extremity is ampullated, and opens into the upper part of the vestibule; the opposite end joins with the upper part of the posterior canal to form the crus commune, which opens into the upper and medial part of the vestibule.

The posterior semicircular canal, also vertical, is directed backward, nearly parallel to the posterior surface of the petrous bone; it is the longest of the three, measuring from 18 to 22 mm; its lower or ampullated end opens into the lower and back part of the vestibule, its upper into the crus commune.

The lateral or horizontal canal is the shortest of the three. It measures from 12 to 15 mm, and its arch is directed horizontally backward and lateralward; thus each semicircular canal stands at right angles to the other two. Its ampullated end corresponds to the upper and lateral angle of the vestibule, just above the fenestra vestibuli, where it opens close to the ampullated end of the superior canal; its opposite end opens at the upper and back part of the vestibule. The lateral canal of one ear is very nearly in the same plane as that of the other; while the superior canal of one ear is nearly parallel to the posterior canal of the other.

THE COCHLEA.— The cochlea bears some resemblance to a common snail-shell; it forms the anterior part of the labyrinth, is conical in form, and placed almost horizontally in front of the vestibule; its apex (cupula) is directed forward and lateralward, with a slight inclination downward, toward the upper and front part of the labyrinthine wall of the tympanic cavity; its base corresponds with the bottom of the internal acoustic meatus, and is perforated by numerous apertures for the passage of the cochlear division of the acoustic nerve. It measures about 5 mm from base to apex, and its breadth across the base is about 9 mm. It consists of a conical shaped central axis, the modiolus; of a canal, the inner wall of which is formed by the central axis, wound spirally around it for two turns and three-quarters, from the base to the apex; and of a delicate lamina, the osseous spiral lamina, which projects from the modiolus, and, following the windings of the canal, partially subdivides it into two. In the recent state a membrane, the basilar membrane, stretches from the free border of this lamina to the outer wall of the bony cochlea and completely separates the canal into two passages, which, however, communicate with each other at the apex of the modiolus by a small opening named the helicotrema.

The modiolus is the conical central axis or pillar of the cochlea. Its base is broad, and appears at the bottom of the internal acoustic meatus, where it corresponds with the area cochleæ; it is perforated by numerous orifices, which transmit filaments of the cochlear division of the acoustic nerve; the nerves for the first turn and a half pass through the foramina of the tractus spiralis foraminosus; those for the apical turn, through the foramen centrale. The canals of the tractus spiralis foraminosus pass up through the modiolus and successively bend outward to reach the attached margin of the osseous spiral lamina. Here they become enlarged, and by their apposition form the spiral canal of the modiolus, which follows the course of the attached margin of the osseous spiral lamina and lodges the spiral ganglion (ganglion of Corti). The foramen centrale is continued into a canal which runs up the middle of the modiolus to its apex. The modiolus diminishes rapidly in size in the second and succeeding coil.

The bony canal of the cochlea takes two turns and three-quarters around the modiolus. It is about 30 mm in length, and diminishes gradually in diameter from the base to the summit, where it terminates in the cupula, which forms the apex of the cochlea. The beginning of this canal is about 3 mm in diameter; it diverges from the modiolus toward the tympanic cavity and vestibule, and presents three openings. One, the fenestra cochleæ, communicates with the tympanic cavity; another, of an elliptical form, opens into the vestibule. The third is the aperture of the cochlear aquaduct, leading to a minute funnel-shaped canal, which opens on the inferior surface of the petrous part of the temporal bone and transmits a small vein, and also forms a communication between the subarachnoid cavity and the scala tympani.

The osseous spiral lamina (lamina spiralis ossea) is a bony shelf or ledge which projects from the modiolus into the interior of the canal, and, like the canal, takes two-and three-quarter turns around the modiolus. It reaches about half-way toward the outer wall of the tube, and partially divides its cavity into two passages or scalæ, of which the upper is designated as the scala vestibuli, while the lower is termed the scala tympani.

A. Cochlea cross-section

B. Cochlea chambers

The osseous labyrinth is lined by an exceedingly thin fibro-serous membrane; its attached surface is rough and fibrous, and closely adherent to the bone; its free surface is smooth and pale, covered with a layer of epithelium, and secretes a thin, limpid fluid, the perilymph. A delicate tubular process of this membrane is prolonged along the aqueduct of the cochlea to the inner surface of the dura mater.

The membranous labyrinth is lodged within the bony cavities just described, and has the same general form as these; it is, however, considerably smaller, and is partly separated from the bony walls by a quantity of fluid, the perilymph. In certain places it is fixed to the walls of the cavity. The membranous labyrinth contains fluid, the endolymph, and on its walls the ramifications of the acoustic nerve are distributed.

Within the osseous vestibule the membranous labyrinth does not quite preserve the form of the bony cavity, but consists of two membranous sacs, the utricle, and the saccule.

THE UTRICLE.— The utricle, the larger of the two, is of an oblong form, compressed transversely, and occupies the upper and back part of the vestibule, lying in contact with the recessus ellipticus and the part below it. That portion which is lodged in the recess forms a sort of pouch or cul-de-sac, the floor and anterior wall of which are thickened, and form the macula acustica utriculi, which receives the utricular filaments of the acoustic nerve. The cavity of the utricle communicates behind with the semicircular ducts by five orifices. From its anterior wall is given off the ductus utriculosaccularis, which opens into the ductus endolymphaticus.

THE SACCULE.— The saccule is the smaller of the two vestibular sacs; it is globular in form, and lies in the recessus sphæricus near the opening of the scala vestibuli of the cochlea. Its anterior part exhibits an oval thickening, the macula acustica sacculi, to which are distributed the saccular filaments of the acoustic nerve. Its cavity does not directly communicate with that of the utricle. From the posterior wall a canal, the ductus endolymphaticus, is given off; this duct is joined by the utriculosaccular duct, and then passes along the vestibular aquaduct and ends in a blind pouch (saccus endolymphaticus) on the posterior surface of the petrous portion of the temporal bone, where it is in contact with the dura mater. From the lower part of the saccule a short tube, the canalis reuniens of Hensen, passes downward and opens into the cochlear duct near its vestibular extremity.

THE SEMICIRCULAR DUCTS.— The semicircular ducts are about one-fourth of the diameter of the osseous canals, but in number, shape, and general form they are precisely similar, and each presents at one end an ampulla. They open by five orifices into the utricle, one opening being common to the medial end of the superior and the upper end of the posterior duct. In the ampullæ the wall is thickened, and projects into the cavity as a fiddle-shaped, transversely placed elevation, the septum transversum, in which the nerves end.

The utricle, saccule, and semicircular ducts are held in position by numerous fibrous bands which stretch across the space between them and the bony walls.

The walls of the utricle, saccule, and semicircular ducts consist of three layers. The outer layer is a loose and flocculent structure, apparently composed of ordinary fibrous tissue containing bloodvessels and some pigment-cells. The middle layer, thicker and more transparent, forms a homogeneous membrana propria, and presents on its internal surface, especially in the semicircular ducts, numerous papilliform projections, which, on the addition of acetic acid, exhibit an appearance of longitudinal fibrillation. The inner layer is formed of polygonal nucleated epithelial cells. In the maculae of the utricle and saccule, and in the transverse septa of the ampullae of the semicircular ducts, the middle coat is thickened and the epithelium is columnar, and consists of supporting cells and hair cells. The former are fusiform, and their deep ends are attached to the membrana propria, while their free extremities are united to form a thin cuticle. The hair cells are flask-shaped, and their deep, rounded ends do not reach the membrana propria, but lie between the supporting cells. The deep part of each contains a large nucleus, while its more superficial part is granular and pigmented. The free end is surmounted by a long, tapering, hair-like filament, which projects into the cavity. The filaments of the acoustic nerve enter these parts and, having pierced the outer and middle layers, they lose their medullary sheaths, and their axis-cylinders ramify between the hair cells.

Two small rounded bodies termed otoconia, each consisting of a mass of minute crystalline grains of carbonate of lime, held together in a mesh of gelatinous tissue, are suspended in the endolymph in contact with the free ends of the hairs projecting from the maculae.

THE COCHLEAR DUCT (membranous cochlea; scala media).— The cochlear duct consists of a spirally arranged tube enclosed in the bony canal of the cochlea and lying along its outer wall.

The osseous spiral lamina extends only part of the distance between the modiolus and the outer wall of the cochlea, while the basilar membrane stretches from its free edge to the outer wall of the cochlea, and completes the roof of the scala tympani. A second and more delicate membrane, the vestibular membrane extends from the thickened periosteum covering the osseous spiral lamina to the outer wall of the cochlea, where it is attached at some little distance above the outer edge of the basilar membrane. A canal is thus shut off between the scala tympani below and the scala vestibuli above; this is the cochlear duct or scala media. It is triangular on transverse section, its roof being formed by the vestibular membrane, its outer wall by the periosteum lining the bony canal, and its floor by the basilar membrane and the outer part of the osseous spiral lamina.

Its extremities are closed; the upper is termed the lagena and is attached to the cupula at the upper part of the helicotrema; the lower is lodged in the recessus cochlearis of the vestibule. Near the lower end the cochlear duct is brought into continuity with the saccule by a narrow, short canal, the canalis reuniens.

On the basilar membrane is situated the spiral organ of Corti. The vestibular membrane is thin and homogeneous, and is covered on its upper and under surfaces by a layer of epithelium. The periosteum, forming the outer wall of the cochlear duct, is greatly thickened and altered in character, and is called the spiral ligament. It projects inward below as a triangular prominence, the basilar crest, which gives attachment to the outer edge of the basilar membrane; immediately above the crest is a concavity, the sulcus spiralis externus. The upper portion of the spiral ligament contains numerous capillary loops and small bloodvessels, and is termed the stria vascularis.

The osseous spiral lamina consists of two plates of bone, and between these are the canals for the transmission of the filaments of the acoustic nerve. On the upper plate of that part of the lamina which is outside the vestibular membrane, the periosteum is thickened to form the limbus laminae spiralis, this ends externally in a concavity, the sulcus spiralis internus, which represents, on section, the form of the letter C; the upper part, formed by the overhanging extremity of the limbus, is named the vestibular lip; the lower part, prolonged and tapering, is called the tympanic lip, and is perforated by numerous foramina for the passage of the cochlear nerves. The upper surface of the vestibular lip is intersected at right angles by a number of furrows, between which are numerous elevations; these present the appearance of teeth along the free surface and margin of the lip, and have been named by Huschke the auditory teeth. The limbus is covered by a layer of what appears to be squamous epithelium, but the deeper parts of the cells with their contained nuclei occupy the intervals between the elevations and between the auditory teeth. This layer of epithelium is continuous on the one hand with that lining the sulcus spiralis internus, and on the other with that covering the under surface of the vestibular membrane.

BASILAR MEMBRANE.— The basilar membrane stretches from the tympanic lip of the osseous spiral lamina to the basilar crest and consists of two parts, an inner and an outer. The inner is thin, and is named the zona arcuata: it supports the spiral organ of Corti. The outer is thicker and striated, and is termed the zona pectinata. The under surface of the membrane is covered by a layer of vascular connective tissue; one of the vessels in this tissue is somewhat larger than the rest, and is named the vas spirale; it lies below Corti's tunnel.

The spiral organ of Corti is composed of a series of epithelial structures placed upon the inner part of the basilar membrane. The more central of these structures are two rows of rod-like bodies, the inner and outer rods or pillars of Corti. The bases of the rods are supported on the basilar membrane, those of the inner row at some distance from those of the outer; the two rows incline toward each other and, coming into contact above, enclose between them and the basilar membrane a triangular tunnel, the tunnel of Corti. On the inner side of the inner rods is a single row of hair cells and, on the outer side of the outer rods three or four rows of similar cells, together with certain supporting cells. The free ends of the outer hair cells occupy a series of apertures in a net-like membrane, the reticular membrane, and the entire organ is covered by the tectorial membrane.

RODS OF CORTI.— Each of these consists of a base or foot-plate, and elongated part or body, and an upper end or head; the body of each rod is finely striated, but in the head there is an oval non-striated portion which stains deeply with carmine. Occupying the angles between the rods and the basilar membrane are nucleated cells which partly envelop the rods and extend on to the floor of Corti's tunnel; these may be looked upon as the undifferentiated parts of the cells from which the rods have been formed.

There are nearly 6000 inner rods number, and their bases rest on the basilar membrane close to the tympanic lip of the sulcus spiralis internus. The shaft or body of each is sinously curved and forms an angle of about 60 degrees with the basilar membrane. The head resembles the proximal end of the ulna and presents a deep concavity which accommodates a convexity on the head of the outer rod. The head-plate, or portion overhanging the concavity, overlaps the head-plate of the outer rod.

The outer rods, nearly 4000 in number, are longer and more obliquely set than the inner, forming with the basilar membrane an angle of about 40 degrees. Their heads are convex internally; they fit into the concavities on the heads of the inner rods and are continued outward as thin flattened plates, termed phalangeal processes, which unite with the phalangeal processes of supporting cells to form the reticular membrane.

HAIR CELLS.— The hair cells are short columnar cells; their free ends are on a level with the heads of Corti's rods, and each is surmounted by about twenty hair-like processes arranged in the form of a crescent with its concavity directed inward. The deep ends of the cells reach about half-way along Corti's rods, and each contains a large nucleus; in contact with the deep ends of the hair cells are the terminal filaments of the cochlear division of the acoustic nerve. The inner hair cells are arranged in a single row on the medial side of the inner rods, and their diameters being greater than those of the rods it follows that each hair cell is supported by more than one rod. The free ends of the inner hair cells are encircled by a cuticular membrane which is fixed to the heads of the inner rods. Adjoining the inner hair cells are one or two rows of columnar supporting cells, which, in turn, are continuous with the cubical cells lining the sulcus spiralis internus. There are about 12000 outer hair cells number and are nearly twice as long as the inner. In the basal coil of the cochlea they are arranged in three regular rows; in the apical coil, in four, somewhat irregular, rows.

Between the rows of the outer hair cells are rows of supporting cells; their expanded bases are planted on the basilar membrane, while the opposite end of each presents a clubbed extremity or phalangeal process. Immediately to the outer side of these supporting cells, there are five or six rows of columnar cells. Their bases are narrow, while their upper parts are expanded and form a rounded elevation on the floor of the cochlear duct. A space exists between the outer rods of Corti and the adjacent hair cells; this is called the space of Nuel.

The reticular lamina is a delicate framework perforated by rounded holes which are occupied by the free ends of the outer hair cells. It extends from the heads of the outer rods of Corti to the external row of the outer hair cells, and is formed by several rows of "minute fiddle-shaped cuticular structures", called phalanges, between which are circular apertures containing the free ends of the hair cells.

The inner most row of phalanges consists of the phalangeal processes of the outer rods of Corti; the outer rows are formed by the modified free ends of supporting cells.

Covering the sulcus spiralis internus and the spiral organ of Corti is the tectorial membrane, which is attached to the limbus laminae spiralis close to the inner edge of the vestibular membrane. Its inner part is thin and overlies the auditory teeth of Huschke; its outer part is thick, and along its lower surface, opposite the inner hair cells, is a clear band. The lateral margin of the membrane is much thinner. It is extremely delicate and flexible; far more sensitively flexible in the transverse than in the longitudinal direction and the readiness with which it bends when touched is beyond description. It is ectodermal in origin. It consists of fine colorless fibers embedded in a transparent matrix, of a soft collagenous, semisolid character with marked adhesiveness. The general transverse direction of the fibers inclines from the radius of the cochlea toward the apex.

The acoustic nerve (also designated as the auditory nerve or nerve of hearing) divides near the bottom of the internal acoustic meatus into an anterior or cochlear and a posterior or vestibular branch.

The vestibular nerve supplies the utricle, the saccule, and the ampullae of the semicircular ducts. On the trunk of the nerve, within the internal acoustic meatus, is a ganglion, the vestibular ganglion; the fibers of the nerve arise from the cells of this ganglion. On the distal side of the ganglion the nerve splits into a superior, an inferior, and a posterior branch. The filaments of the superior branch are transmitted through the foramina in the area vestibularis superior, and end in the macula of the utricle and in the ampullae of the superior and lateral semicircular ducts; those of the inferior branch traverse the foramina in the area vestibularis inferior, and end in the macula of the saccule. The posterior branch runs through the foramen singulare at the postero-inferior part of the bottom of the meatus and divides into filaments for the supply of the ampulla of the posterior semicircular duct.

The cochlear nerve divides into numerous filaments at the base of the modiolus; those for the basal and middle coils pass through the foramina in the tractus spiralis foraminosus, those for the apical coil through the canalis centralis, and the nerves bend outward to pass between the lamellae of the osseous spiral lamina. Occupying the spiral canal of the modiolus is the spiral ganglion of the cochlea, consisting of bipolar nerve cells, which constitute the cells of origin of this nerve. Reaching the outer edge of the osseous spiral lamina, the fibers of the nerve pass through the foramina in the tympanic lip; some end by arborizing around the bases of the inner hair cells, while others pass between Corti's rods and across the tunnel, to end in a similar manner in relation to the outer hair cells. The cochlear nerve gives off a vestibular branch to supply the vestibular end of the cochlear duct; the filaments of this branch pass through the foramina in the fossa cochlearis.

BLOOD VESSELS AND NERVES OF THE INTERNAL EAR.— The arteries of the labyrinth are the internal auditory, from the basilar, and the stylomastoid, from the posterior auricular. The internal auditory artery divides at the bottom of the internal acoustic meatus into two branches: cochlear and vestibular. The cochlear branch subdivides into twelve (12) or fourteen (14) twigs, which traverse the canals in the modiolus, and are distributed, in the form of a capillary network, in the lamina spiralis and basilar membrane. The vestibular branches are distributed to the utricle, saccule, and semicircular ducts.

The veins of the vestibule and semicircular canals accompany the arteries, and, receiving those of the cochlea at the base of the modiolus, unite to form the internal auditory veins which end in the posterior part of the superior petrosal sinus or in the transverse sinus.

THE COMMON INTEGUMENT

It is the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Tegumentary Structure” that will allow the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to collect tactile signals emitted by the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, external and immediate, around the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Tactile signals, including those resulting from variations in pressure and temperature, will be detected by neural receptors built in the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Tegumentary Structure”, including hair follicles, tongue, throat, and mucosa.

The common integument comprises the set of structures of tissue that forms the external covering this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and protecting the deeper tissues from injury, from drying and from invasion by foreign organisms. It contains the peripheral endings of many of the sensory nerves; it plays an important part in the regulation of the body temperature, and has also limited excretory and absorbing powers.

The common integument consists principally of a layer of (1) a vascular connective tissue designated as the corium or “Cutis Vera”, and (2) an external covering of epithelium, termed the epidermis or cuticle. On the surface of the former layer are sensitive and vascular papillae, and within, or beneath it, are certain organs with special functions: namely, the sudoriferous and sebaceous glands, and the hair follicles.

THE EPIDERMIS, cuticle, or scarf skin, is composed of keratinized, stratified squamous epithelium. It is made of four or five layers of epithelial cells, depending on its location in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It does not have any blood vessels within it (i.e., it is non-vascular). The integument that has four layers of cells will be referred to as “thin skin”. From deep to superficial, these layers are: the stratum basale, the stratum spinosum, the stratum granulosum, and the stratum corneum. Most of the integument can be classified as thin skin. “Thick skin” will be found only on the palms of the hands and the soles of the feet. It has a fifth layer, designated as the stratum lucidum, located between the stratum corneum and the stratum granulosum.

The more superficial layers of cells, designated as the horny layer (stratum corneum), may be separated by maceration from a deeper stratum, which is called the stratum mucosum, and which consists of several layers of differently shaped cells. The free surface of the epidermis is marked by a network of linear furrows of variable size, dividing the surface into a number of polygonal or lozenge-shaped areas. Some of these furrows are large, as opposite the flexures of the joints, and correspond to the folds in the corium produced by movements. In other situations, as upon the back of the hand, they are exceedingly fine, and intersect one another at various angles.

Upon the palmar surfaces of the hands and fingers, and upon the soles of the feet, the epidermal ridges are very distinct, and are disposed in curves; they depend upon the large size and peculiar arrangements of the papillæ upon which the epidermis is placed. The function of these ridges is primarily to increase resistance between contact surfaces for the purpose of preventing slipping whether in walking or prehension. The direction of the ridges is at right angles with the force that tends to produce slipping or to the resultant of such forces when these forces vary in direction. The deep surface of the epidermis is accurately moulded upon the papillary layer of the corium, the papillae being covered by a basement membrane; so that when the epidermis is removed by maceration, it presents on its under surface a number of pits or depressions corresponding to the papillae, and ridges corresponding to the intervals between them. Fine tubular prolongations are continued from this layer into the ducts of the sudoriferous and sebaceous glands.

1. THE HORNY LAYER (stratum corneum) consists of several layers of horny epithelial scales in which no nuclei are discernible, and which are unaffected by acetic acid, the protoplasm having become changed into horny material or keratin. The stratum corneum is the most superficial layer of the epidermis and is the layer exposed to the outside environment. The increased keratinization (also called cornification) of the cells in this layer gives it its name. There will be 15 to 30 layers of cells in the stratum corneum. This dry layer will help prevent the penetration of microbes and the dehydration of underlying tissues, and it will also provide a mechanical protection against abrasion for the more delicate, underlying layers. Cells in this layer will be shed periodically and will be replaced by cells pushed up from the stratum granulosum (or stratum lucidum in the case of the palms and soles of feet). The entire layer will be replaced during a period of 30 days.⁷⁷⁶

⁷⁷⁶ As you would have understood by now, NOTHING in the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was done at

2. THE LUCID LAYER (stratum lucidum) is a smooth, seemingly translucent layer of the epidermis located just above the stratum granulosum and below the stratum corneum. This thin layer of cells will be found only in the thick skin of the palms, soles, and digits. The keratinocytes that compose the stratum lucidum are traces of flattened nuclei. These cells are densely packed with eleiden, a clear protein rich in lipids, derived from keratohyalin, which will give these cells their transparent (i.e., lucid) appearance and provides a barrier to water.

3. THE GRANULOUS LAYER (stratum granulosum) comprises two or three layers of flattened cells which contain granules of eleidin, a substance readily stained by hematoxylin or carmine, and probably an intermediate substance in the formation of keratin. They are supposed to be cells in a transitional stage between the protoplasmic cells of the stratum mucosum and the horny cells of the superficial layers.

4. THE SPINOUS LAYER (stratum spinosum), as the name suggests, is spiny in appearance due to the protruding cell processes that join the cells via a structure designated as a desmosome. The desmosomes interlock with each other and strengthen the bond between the cells. The stratum spinosum is composed of eight to 10 layers of keratinocytes, formed as a result of cell division in the stratum basale. Interspersed among the keratinocytes of this layer is a type of dendritic cell, which will function as a macrophage by engulfing bacteria, foreign particles, and damaged cells that may occur in this layer.

5. THE MUCOUS LAYER (stratum mucosum) is composed of several layers of cells; those of the deepest layer are columnar in shape and placed perpendicularly on the surface of the basement membrane, to which they are attached by toothed extremities. This deepest layer is sometimes termed the stratum germinativum; the succeeding strata consist of cells of a more rounded or polyhedral form, the contents of which are soft, opaque, granular, and soluble in acetic acid. These are known as prickly cells because of the bridges by which they are connected to one another. They contain fine fibrils which are continuous across the connecting processes with corresponding fibrils in adjacent cells. Between the bridges are fine inter-cellular clefts serving for the passage of lymph, and in these lymph corpuscles or pigment granules may be found.

random. Those numbers are indicative of the courses of events taking place in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

THE GERMINATIVE LAYER (stratum basale or stratum germinativum) is the innermost layer of cells of the mucous layer. It is comprised of (1) keratinocytes capable of proliferating by mitosis, (2) melanocytes, and (3) other supporting cells. The keratinocytes cells will actively divide to provide new cells to replenish lost skin from normal shedding. Thus, they will provide the keratinocytes (prickle cells) of the stratum spinosum, which later migrate through the other layers to the topmost layer (stratum corneum) of the skin. Other cellular elements found in the stratum germinativum are melanocytes (pigment-producing cells), dendritic cells (immune cells), and tactile cells (touch receptor cells).

Melanocytes are irregularly shaped cells that produce and store a family of pigments designated as the “melanin” through multistage chemical process designated as melanogenesis, where the oxidation of the amino acid tyrosine is followed by polymerization. Tyrosine, or 4-hydroxyphenylalanine, is one of the 20 standard amino acids that are used by cells to synthesize proteins. Melanins are polymorphous and multifunctional biopolymers, which include eumelanin, pheomelanin, mixed melanins (a combination of the two), and neuromelanin.

Melanin chemical formula is $C_{18}H_{10}N_2O_4$, giving it a molecular weight, or molar mass, of 318 grams per mole (g/mol). It consists of three six-membered rings (six atoms arranged around a central point) in a line, each with a five-membered ring nestled in one of the angles between itself and its neighbor. These five-membered rings each contain one of the two nitrogen atoms in melanin, and sit on opposite sides of the molecule. The four oxygen atoms in melanin are bound to carbons on the six-atom ring at each end, two to each ring. These are double bonded, and the C=O arrangements lie on opposite sides of the ring from where the five-membered rings are attached.

The melanocytes cells produce two chemically distinct types of melanin pigments: eumelanin, which is of brown color, and which derived primarily from tyrosine (Tyr) residues, and phaeomelanin, which confers red-yellow pigmentation and which is formed from Tyr and cystine (Cys). Although they contain a common arrangement of repeating units linked by carbon-carbon bonds, melanin pigments differ from each other with respect to their chemical, structural, and physical properties. Eumelanin is a highly heterogeneous polymer consisting of 5,6-dihydroxyindole and 5,6-dihydroxyindole-2-carboxylic acid units in reduced or oxidized states; pheomelanin consists mainly of sulfur containing benzothiazine derivatives. These two pigments, eumelanin and phaeomelanin, are polymeric and are derived via a series of redox reactions from a common precursor, dopaquinone, which is formed by the action of the enzyme tyrosinase on Tyr residues. Melanocytes can form both eumelanin and pheomelanin, and production of eumelanin is controlled by α -melanocyte stimulating hormone (α -MSH).

As we have indicated in one previous chapter, with the announcement of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, several programs were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” to further the education of the Archangel MICHAEL, of the “ADONA’IM”, and the remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” cascading down the hierarchy of communication of the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”, and concerning the basic aspects of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. At the core of those programs, is a tool designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and which was intended to make sensitive what is not naturally visible to the perception and to reveal the qualities of the manifested metaphor of the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, from which arises “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, which a manifested assembled structure of “created energy” inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” returns and which allows to perceive, to discern, and to distinguish “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” from other assembled structures of “created energy”, regardless of the type and shape of the assembled structure of “created energy”. That tool is that, which is designated as: “THE COLOR”.

As we have also indicated already, the concept of “THE COLOR” is one of the many concepts that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established in the same way as HE has established the concept of “THE REASON”, from “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, and which will be imprinted and manifested in everything that “THE DIVINE FORCE” will bring forth into existence, and which reveals the qualities of the “GLORY”⁷⁷⁷ of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

With the three “Core COLORS” and from the “movement” of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has also designed and established that, which will be designated as the “Palette of COLORS” and which is a very complex

⁷⁷⁷ The “GLORY” is the word used symbolically to refer to the luminous radiation that characterizes the attribute “LIGHT” which describes the second attribute of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” and highlights the distinctive feature of the “divine energy” that emanates from “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” and makes it “ALIVE”.

color-coded mapping, or color-coded labelling, of the happenings taking place inside “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE” has consolidated in Himself and that HE chose to share with the attribute “NON DIVINE”. To each color identified in the “Palette of COLORS”, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has assigned a unique attribute and its significance, as well as the “unique word” which is a designation of that attribute.

Using the manifestation of the metaphor of the “Palette of COLORS” which was also provided to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their obscurity, in their blatant absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, the Archangel MICHAEL, of the “ADONA’IM”, and the remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” cascading down the hierarchy of communication of the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”, were given a “free hand” in order to paint their 3D-modelling/shaping/forming of the contours of their identity. It is those painting colors that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has manifested on the assembled structure of “created energy” that SHE has produced into existence with the achievement of the previous decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

For the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in all its forms (including those of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” of the “FAUNA”) and through the synthesis of melanin by melanocytes cells built by “THE DIVINE FORCE” using “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has implemented the manifestation of those painting colors chosen by those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” during the assigned task to choose a “Character” for oneself and the 3D-modelling/shaping/forming of the contours of their identity.

It is so that, cutaneous pigmentation will occur as the result of the synthesis of melanin by melanocytes — melanin-producing cells found in skin, hair follicles, eyes, inner ear, bones, heart and brain of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and which arise from pluripotent neural crest cells and differentiate in response to a complex network of interacting regulatory pathways — and the transfer of melanosomes to surrounding keratinocytes. Melanosomes, the pigment granules that provide tissues with colour and photoprotection, are the cellular site of synthesis, storage and transport of melanin pigments. Melanosomes will be transferred via dendrites to surrounding keratinocytes, where they will play a critical role in photoprotection.

The anatomical relationship between keratinocytes and melanocytes will be referred to as “the epidermal melanin unit” and each melanocyte will be in contact with 40 keratinocytes in the basal and suprabasal layers.

Melanin will be produced in response to the effects of the rays emitted by the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” (commonly designated as the “Sun”). The light absorption of melanin in skin and hair will lead to photoreceptor shielding, thermoregulation, photoprotection, camouflage and a display of coloring. Melanin will also facilitate the protection of the common integument of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from the harmful effects of the sun’s burn.

The color of the external appearance of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will thus be a manifestation of the quantity of melanin pigments that its melanocytes cells produce. An elevated production of eumelanin pigment will be manifested by a dark brown-colored external appearance and a production of eumelanin pigment below the skin will be manifested by a light brown-colored external appearance. The “benchmark color” that was assigned to the “Plane Below” is the color whose manifestation is designated as “brown”, the “color of the ground”. That is why this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” under production by “THE DIVINE FORCE” will have the “benchmark color”, or the brown-colored, external appearance.

As we have indicated, the colors of the manifestation of the “Palette of COLORS”, which were used to express the appearance of each “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” associated with a chosen “Character” were interpreted by “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the “MALAK” instance, according to their understanding of the “world” in which they inhabited, from the teachings of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in order to manifest the emotional tones of affection and of the “HARMONY” that each “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had towards “THE DIVINE”, and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who chose “Characters” could freely express their emotional tones and their perceptions with those colors. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” of the “MALAK” instance had interpreted the brown color as to be, according to their understanding of the “world” in which they inhabited, expressions in all its forms, of that, which is unknown, that, which is foreign to them.

Besides melanin, other factors will play a role in general or local manifestation of cutaneous pigmentation. These include: the presence of carotene, the availability of oxygenated hemoglobin, the status of local blood flow, and the external environmental conditions. Carotene found in subcutaneous fat tissue will contribute to the yellowish color of the skin. This substance will be especially concentrated in the palms of the hands and soles of the feet. Lastly, the normal reddish color of skin will be attributed to the presence of oxygenated blood being transported through the arteries and capillaries.

The main purpose served by the epidermis is that of protection, as the surface is worn away new cells are supplied and thus the true skin, the vessels and nerves which it contains are defended from damage.

THE CORIUM, also designated as “Cutis Vera”, dermis, or true skin is tough, flexible, and highly elastic. It varies in thickness in different parts of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Thus it is very thick in the palms of the hands and soles of the feet; thicker on the posterior aspect of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” than on the front, and on the lateral than on the medial sides of the limbs.

It consists of felted connective tissue, with a varying amount of elastic fibers and numerous bloodvessels, lymphatics, and nerves. The connective tissue is arranged in two layers: a deeper or reticular, and a superficial or papillary. Unstriped muscular fibers are found in the superficial layers of the corium, wherever hairs are present, and in the subcutaneous areolar tissue of the scrotum, penis, labia majora, and nipples. In the nipples the fibers are disposed in bands, closely reticulated and arranged in superimposed laminae.

- The reticular layer (deep layer) consists of strong interlacing bands, composed chiefly of white fibrous tissue, but containing some fibers of yellow elastic tissue, which vary in number in different parts; and connective-tissue corpuscles, which are often to be found flattened against the white fibrous tissue bundles. Toward the attached surface the fasciculi are large and coarse, and the areolæ left by their interlacement are large, and occupied by adipose tissue and sweat glands. Below the reticular layer is the subcutaneous areolar tissue, which, except in a few situations, contains fat.
- The papillary layer (stratum papillare; superficial layer; corpus papillare of the corium) consists of numerous small, highly sensitive, and vascular eminences, the papillae, which rise perpendicularly from its surface. The papillae are minute conical eminences, having rounded or blunted extremities, occasionally divided into two or more parts, and are received into corresponding pits on the under surface of the cuticle. On the general surface of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, more especially in parts endowed with slight sensibility, there will be few in number, and exceedingly minute; but in some situations, as upon the palmar surfaces of the hands and fingers, and upon the plantar surfaces of the feet and toes, they will be long, of large size, closely aggregated together, and arranged in parallel curved lines, forming the elevated ridges seen on the free surface of the epidermis. Each ridge contains two rows of papillae, between which the ducts of the sudoriferous glands pass outward to open on the summit of the ridge. Each papilla consists of very small and closely interlacing bundles of finely fibrillated tissue, with a few elastic fibers; within this tissue is a capillary loop, and in some papillæ, especially in the palms of the hands and the fingers, there are tactile corpuscles.

THE APPENDAGES OF THE SKIN

The appendages of the skin are the nails, the hairs, and the sudoriferous and sebaceous glands with their ducts.

THE NAILS are flattened, elastic structures of a horny texture, placed upon the dorsal surfaces of the terminal phalanges of the fingers and toes. Each nail is convex on its outer surface, concave within, and is implanted by a portion, called the root, into a groove in the skin; the exposed portion is called the body of the nail, and the distal extremity the free edge.

The nail is firmly adherent to the corium, being accurately moulded upon its surface; the part beneath the body of the nail and root of the nail is called the nail matrix, because from it the nail is produced. Under the greater part of the body of the nail, the matrix is thick, and raised into a series of longitudinal ridges which are very vascular, and the color is seen through the transparent tissue. Near the root of the nail, the papillae are smaller, less vascular, and have no regular arrangement, and here the tissue of the nail is not firmly adherent to the connective-tissue stratum but only in contact with it; hence this portion is of a whiter color, and is called the lunula on account of its shape.

The cuticle as it passes forward on the dorsal surface of the finger or toe is attached to the surface of the nail a little in advance of its root; at the extremity of the finger it is connected with the under surface of the nail a little behind its free edge. The cuticle and the horny substance of the nail (both epidermic structures) are thus directly continuous with each other. The superficial, horny part of the nail consists of a greatly thickened stratum lucidum, the stratum corneum forming merely the thin cuticular fold (eponychium) which overlaps the lunula; the deeper part consists of the stratum mucosum. The cells in contact with the papillae of the matrix are columnar in form and arranged perpendicularly to the surface; those which succeed them are of a rounded or polygonal form, the more superficial ones becoming broad, thin, and flattened, and so closely packed as to make the limits of the cells very indistinct. The nails grow in length by the proliferation of the cells of the stratum mucosum at the root of the nail, and in thickness from that part of the stratum mucosum which underlies the lunula.

HAIRS will be found on nearly every part of the surface of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, but they will be absent from the palms of the hands, the soles of the feet, the dorsal surfaces of the terminal phalanges, the glans penis, the inner surface of the prepuce, and the inner surfaces of the labia. A hair consists of a root, the part implanted in the skin; and a shaft or scapus, the portion projecting from the surface.

The root of the hair ends in an enlargement, the hair bulb, which is whiter in color and softer in texture than the shaft, and is lodged in a follicular involution of the epidermis designated as the hair follicle. When the hair is of considerable length the follicle extends into the subcutaneous cellular tissue. The hair follicle commences on the surface of the skin with a funnel-shaped opening, and passes inward in an oblique or curved direction to become dilated at its deep extremity, where it corresponds with the hair bulb.

Opening into the follicle, near its free extremity, are the ducts of one or more sebaceous glands. At the bottom of each hair follicle is a small conical, vascular eminence or papilla, similar in every respect to those found upon the surface of the skin; it is continuous with the dermic layer of the follicle, and is supplied with nerve fibrils.

The hair follicle consists of two coats: an outer or dermic, and an inner or epidermic.

- The outer or dermic coat is formed mainly of fibrous tissue; it is continuous with the corium, is highly vascular, and supplied by numerous minute nervous filaments. It consists of three layers. The most internal is a hyaline basement membrane, which is well-marked in the larger hair follicles, but is not very distinct in the follicles of minute hairs; it is limited to the deeper part of the follicle. Outside this is a compact layer of fibers and spindle-shaped cells arranged circularly around the follicle; this layer extends from the bottom of the follicle as high as the entrance of the ducts of the sebaceous glands. Externally is a thick layer of connective tissue, arranged in longitudinal bundles, forming a more open texture and corresponding to the reticular part of the corium; in this are contained the bloodvessels and nerves.

- The inner or epidermic coat is closely adherent to the root of the hair, and consists of two strata named respectively the outer and inner root sheaths; the former of these corresponds with the stratum mucosum of the epidermis, and resembles it in the rounded form and soft character of its cells; at the bottom of the hair follicle these cells become continuous with those of the root of the hair. The inner root sheath consists of: (1) a delicate cuticle next the hair, composed of a single layer of imbricated scales with atrophied nuclei; (2) one or two layers of horny, flattened, nucleated cells, known as Huxley's layer; and (3) a single layer of cubical cells with clear flattened nuclei.

The hair bulb is moulded over the papilla and composed of polyhedral epithelial cells, which as they pass upward into the root of the hair become elongated and spindle-shaped, except some in the center which remain polyhedral. Some of these latter cells contain pigment granules which give rise to the color of the hair. It occasionally happens that these pigment granules completely fill the cells in the center of the bulb; this gives rise to the dark tract of pigment often found, of greater or less length, in the axis of the hair.

The shaft of the hair consists, from within outward, of three parts, the medulla, the cortex, and the cuticle. The medulla is usually wanting in the fine hairs covering the surface of the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment", and commonly in those of the head. It is more opaque and deeper colored than the cortex when viewed by transmitted light; but when viewed by reflected light it is white. It is composed of rows of polyhedral cells, containing granules of eleidin and frequently air spaces. The cortex constitutes the chief part of the shaft; its cells are elongated and united to form flattened fusiform fibers which contain pigment granules in dark hair, and air in white hair. The cuticle consists of a single layer of flat scales which overlap one another from below upward.

Connected with the hair follicles are minute bundles of involuntary muscular fibers, termed the arrectores pilorum. They arise from the superficial layer of the corium, and are inserted into the hair follicle, below the entrance of the duct of the sebaceous gland. They are placed on the side toward which the hair slopes, and by their action diminish the obliquity of the follicle and elevate the hair. The sebaceous gland is situated in the angle which the arrector muscle forms with the superficial portion of the hair follicle, and contraction of the muscle thus will tend to squeeze the sebaceous secretion out from the duct of the gland.

THE SEBACEOUS GLANDS are small (microscopic), sacculated, glandular organs, lodged in the substance of the corium. They are found in most parts of the skin, but are especially abundant in the scalp and face; they are also very numerous around the apertures of the anus, nose, mouth, and external ear, but are wanting in the palms of the hands and soles of the feet.

Each gland consists of a single duct, more or less capacious, which emerges from a cluster of oval or flask-shaped alveoli which vary from two to five in number, but in some instances there may be as many as twenty. Each alveolus is composed of a transparent basement membrane, enclosing a number of epithelial cells. The outer or marginal cells are small and polyhedral, and are continuous with the cells lining the duct. The remainder of the alveolus is filled with larger cells, containing fat, except in the center, where the cells have become broken up, leaving a cavity filled with their debris and a mass of fatty matter, which constitutes the sebum cutaneum. The ducts open most frequently into the hair follicles, but occasionally upon the general surface, as in the labia minora and the free margin of the lips. On the nose and face the glands are of large size, distinctly lobulated, and often become much enlarged from the accumulation of pent-up secretion. The tarsal

Sebaceous glands will secrete the oily, waxy substance of pH equal to 3.5 and designated as sebum, which is produced in a holocrine process, in which cells within the sebaceous gland rupture and disintegrate as they release the sebum and the cell remnants are secreted together with the sebum. The cells are constantly replaced by mitosis at the base of the duct.

Sebum is an essentially lipidic compound, produced by the sebaceous glands under hormonal control, which will provide a protective film on the surface of the epidermis. The excess production of sebum will qualify as hyperseborrhea. It will be one of the factors involved in the formation of retentional and inflammatory lesions in acne. Sebum is made up of lipids, mainly triglycerides, waxes which are esters of fatty acids and alcohols, and to a lesser extent squalene and cholesterol. The relative proportion of the different constituents is very variable, in particular depending on the size of the sebaceous glands and the age of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

The sebum will be excreted in the pilosebaceous duct. It will coat the hair stems (oily hair), spread over the surface of the stratum corneum. In association with the other surface lipids originating from the keratinocytes, and an aqueous phase consisting of extracellular fluid and sweat, it will constitute the surface hydro-lipid film. The role of this film will be to oppose the loss of transepidermal water. It will therefore play a role of “anti-dehydration” of the epidermis, participates through its presence in the microbial ecosystem and fights the impression of the epidermis dryness. An excess of sebum production will give an appearance of “oily skin” or hyperseborrheic. The control of sebum production will be essentially hormonal.

THE SUDORIFEROUS OR SWEAT GLANDS are found in almost every part of the skin, and are situated in small pits on the under surface of the corium, or, more frequently, in the subcutaneous areolar tissue, surrounded by a quantity of adipose tissue.

Each consists of a single tube, the deep part of which is rolled into an oval or spherical ball, named the body of the gland, while the superficial part, or duct, traverses the corium and cuticle and opens on the surface of the skin by a funnel-shaped aperture.

In the superficial layers of the corium the duct is straight, but in the deeper layers it is convoluted or even twisted; where the epidermis is thick, as in the palms of the hands and soles of the feet, the part of the duct which passes through it is spirally coiled. The size of the glands varies. They are especially large in those regions where the amount of perspiration is great, as in the axillæ, where they form a thin, mammillated layer of a reddish color, which corresponds exactly to the situation of the hair in this region; they are large also in the groin. Their number varies. They are very plentiful on the palms of the hands, and on the soles of the feet, where the orifices of the ducts are exceedingly regular, and open on the curved ridges; they are least numerous in the neck and back. On the palm there are about 370 per square centimeter; on the back of the hand about 200; forehead 175, breast, abdomen and forearm 155, and on the leg and back from 60 to 80 per square centimeter. They are absent in the deeper portion of the external auditory meatus, the prepuce and the glans penis. The tube, both in the body of the gland and in the duct consists of two layers: an outer, of fine areolar tissue, and an inner of epithelium. The outer layer is thin and is continuous with the superficial stratum of the corium. In body of the gland, the epithelium consists of a single layer of cubical cells, between the deep ends of which and the basement membrane is a layer of longitudinally or obliquely arranged non-striped muscular fibers. The ducts are destitute of muscular fibers and are composed of a basement membrane lined by two or three layers of polyhedral cells; the lumen of the duct is coated by a thin cuticle. When the cuticle is carefully removed from the surface of the corium, the ducts may be drawn out in the form of short, thread-like processes on its under surface. The ceruminous glands of the external acoustic meatus and the ciliary glands at the margins of the eyelids are modified sudoriferous glands.

Sudoriferous glands are either of two types of secretory skin glands, eccrine or apocrine. Eccrine and apocrine glands reside within the dermis and consist of secretory cells and a central lumen into which material will be secreted. Typically, eccrine glands will open directly onto the skin surface whereas apocrine glands open onto associated hair follicles. As such, eccrine glands will be found almost anywhere on the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, with the highest concentration found on the palms and soles. Apocrine glands are found in more restricted areas of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” including the axilla, anogenital region, external ear canal, and areola.

Eccrine glands consist of a tube-shaped duct that ends in a coiled, secretory unit. This secretory unit is made up of cuboidal cells that surround a central lumen. Myoepithelial cells form around the cuboidal cells and contract in response to stimuli to assist with secretion.

Apocrine glands have a similar structure to eccrine glands but have a larger secretory component that is lined by either cuboidal or columnar epithelium and associated myoepithelial cells.

Both eccrine and apocrine glands secrete in a merocrine manner such that substances are released by exocytosis without damage or loss of the secreting cell.

THE DEFENSE AND IMMUNE SYSTEM

THE DEFENSE AND IMMUNE SYSTEM DESCRIPTION

All systems of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” were designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” to work in an interconnected manner controlled by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” to maintain the internal conditions essential to the function of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The immune and defense system, which has been defined throughout the previously described systems, comprises many biological structures and processes within the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and which were designed to protect the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” both externally and internally against any element distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to the proper functioning of the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

THE EXTERNAL FOREFRONT PROTECTION — “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH”

Externally, as we have indicated already, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has delineated the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole”, placed at the edge of the volume of the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘EARTHLY’” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. As the we have also indicated already, it is the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, as a concrete and living image to express a metaphor of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” that exists already within “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”, which will make the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” akin of “THE SHEKINAH”. As such, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has also designed and established the autonome function similar to the task of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH” for the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. The main function of this “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” and its contained volume of the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘EARTHLY’” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is to provide that autonome function of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”.⁷⁷⁸ In other words, to provide the ⁷⁷⁸ Remember what we have indicated concerning the task of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH”? After the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, AZAZEL requested to be entrusted the task of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH” which will be expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. Such a task would have allowed him to take control of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH”; that is, the control of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against both the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and the “Specific ‘NON-SPIRITUAL’ Environment” defined by the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, and maintaining the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in “PURITY” inside a sane environment, which is defined by the volume of the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘EARTHLY’” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. When the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” is in “PURITY” and hence in “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, nothing else that is “IMPURE” can penetrate that “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole”.⁷⁷⁹

This external forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” was designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and it was implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to manifest the tasks of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH”; that is to say, the tasks of “THE GUARDIANSHIP” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that is akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

Creature”. His request was rejected and the Archangel MICHAEL had explained to him that such a task for “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE NEW SHEKINAH” will not be necessary, because the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will be created with its own functionalities. This external forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is part of those functionalities.

⁷⁷⁹ The Archangel MICHAEL, in his “obscurity” and “JEALOUSY”, which arose from his own a lack of “PLENTITUDE”, as well as other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, will feed the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” with their “obscurity”, hence “IMPURITIES”, and in so doing, they will impair the conditions, which are internal to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” for the manifestation of this external and forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. Subsequently, the Archangel MICHAEL, from the knowledge that he had gained from his office and “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH” will manage to destroy the functioning of the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. From that destruction, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will be left without external and forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. We will describe all this in the chapters below.

It is so that, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has implemented in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the autonomous tasks of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH” that had been assigned to the seven firsts foremost “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” (the “ADONA’IM”). As we have indicated already, the names of these seven firsts foremost “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to whom “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, were:

- The Archangel MICHAEL.
- “ZAHEERIEL”, the first manifestation of the “IKARI” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.
- “AZAZEL”, the first manifestation of the “QUERUB” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.
- “URIEL”, the first manifestation of the “OPHAN” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.
- “SARAÏEL” which means “Eye of ‘GOD’ Divine State” or simply “Eye of ‘GOD’”, and which is the first manifestation of the “SERAPH” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.
- “RAPHAEL”, the first manifestation of the “MALAK” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.
- “CAMAEL” which means “Eye of ‘DIVINE’ Divine State” or simply “Eye of ‘DIVINE’”, and which is the first manifestation of the “KO’ACH” instance, having the “MALE” adjective.

Consider the illustration below, which we have already indicated in previous annotations. It is a gross sketch of the outside of “THE SHEKINAH” inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE”, and, yet sufficient to bring you to “get the picture” concerning that, which we have designated as the external forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

In this illustration, the illuminated portal represents the entry to “THE SHEKINAH”. Inside “THE SHEKINAH”, you have the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”. The “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” — the First Begotten of “THE DIVINE FORCE” — is behind the “Specific ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Frontier” which is manifested inside “THE SHEKINAH” as an impenetrable wall of “PURE FIRE”. All the figures around and outside of “THE SHEKINAH” would be the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their true external appearances (which is not the winged human appearance that they take when they manifest in front of human creatures) and, when they gather every seven day to celebrate “THE PRAISE” and to receive each, seven times their daily quantity of raw “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” so that they can carry out the weekly tasks that will be entrusted to them.

In this illustration, those seven (7) lit flames and those calabashes in front of the illuminated portal are representation of the seven firsts foremost “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, before the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and to whom “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted the task of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”; those “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” are the ones, which we have listed hereabove. After the “CELESTIAL WAR”, only four amongst those seven will remain; these are the four winged creatures that are represented there in the middle of the artwork. They are: URIEL, represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the LION; RAPHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the BULL; MICHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the human, and CAMAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the EAGLE.

Observe attentively the illuminated portal and the manifestation of “PURE” “LIGHT” coming out of it; it is a representation of the First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”, seen from the outside. The “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, which will wear the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” is in the process of producing into existence, is akin to that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” and NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” is. NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” has that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”, but the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” possess that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”.

Now, observe attentively the layers (colored in green) of manifested radiation of that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” and coming out of that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”; those layers (colored in green) of manifested radiation form a protective shield for that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” against the external environment. The equivalent of that protective shield “was manifested”⁷⁸⁰ in this expression of the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by that, which we have designated as the external forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

All the individual tasks of “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”, which were entrusted to these seven first foremost “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and through which they indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and from which they have attributed themselves grandeur through their names of grandeur that adorn them, have been implemented in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by “THE DIVINE FORCE”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, disciples of obscurity, who declared themselves to be “gods” and who were present and watching the accomplishment of this work of “divine surgery”, had already understood that their individual assigned tasks were been symbolically implemented directly in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, placing as such the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” above all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” including above the Archangel MICHAEL.

THE INTERNAL DEFENSE SYSTEM – “THE IMMUNE SYSTEM”

Internally, inside the forefront protection of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and through the many biological structures and “specific processes” within the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND ⁷⁸⁰ Keep on reading! In a subsequent chapter, we will reveal how those disciples of obscurity, who were present and were observing the work of “divine surgery” performed by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will destroy this work and that manifestation of this protective shield in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

PROJECT MASTER” has also designed the internal line of defense to protect the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissues and which is detrimental to its proper functioning, and to restore through the “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING”, the tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to their proper functioning when they have been damaged.

The set of all those “specific processes” and “specific cells” that endow those “specific cells” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with the capacity to recognize deleterious foreign structure from healthy tissues of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and to neutralize, eliminate, or metabolize them with or without injury to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissues is designated as the “internal defense system” or the “immune system”.

This internal defense system, also designated as the immune system, of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is a complex fighting system powered by the five liters of blood and lymph of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and “dedicated to defend” against anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed it, the internal defense system of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” is able to distinguish an internal tissue of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” from a deleterious foreign structure and it is also able to distinguish dead and faulty cells and cleared them away. It does this distinction by detecting the mark of IHVH that has been implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in every cell of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This ability to differentiate a “healthy tissue” from a “non healthy tissue” constitutes the basic hallmark of the response (also designated as the immune response) that will be given to the presence of a deleterious foreign structure in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. At the basis of this ability to differentiate a “healthy tissue” from a “non healthy tissue” is the “cellular communication”.

As we have indicated, cells typically will communicate using “specific chemical signals” transmitted and received through the cell membrane. These “specific chemical signals”, which are proteins or other molecules produced by a sending cell, will be secreted from the cell and released into the extracellular fluid. There, they will be able to float — like messages in a bottle — over to neighboring recipient cells to which they will be addressed to. It is so that, a “cell” has also been equipped with “specific receptors” for those predefined “specific signals” that it will be able to receive. Such “specific receptors” are “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” of the cell and which are tasked to receive first and foremost external signals.

Furthermore, for effective and efficient cell communication to take place, hence for an effective and efficient immune response to take place, the microenvironment both inside and outside of each cell must be kept in “PURITY”, cleared out of deleterious foreign structures and detectable trace of anything other than the nutrients and oxygen required for the proper functioning of the cell. The external measures taken to ensure that the microenvironment both inside and outside of each cell is kept in “PURITY” will help keep the “immune system” fully functional as it was designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.⁷⁸¹

A deleterious foreign structure of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” that distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissues and which is detrimental to its proper functionin can enter the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through the natural portals of entry, that is to say, the skin, respiratory, the gastrointestinal, or genitourinary tracts, and it will encounter components of the immune system found in collections of lymphoid elements found at these natural portals entry sites. Since most of these organ systems are lined by mucosa, this system will be referred to as the mucosa-associated lymphoid tissues (MALT).

Foreign structures that will penetrate these mucosal and skin-site barriers will enter the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” through the blood or through the lymphatics and they will encounter components of the immune system found in the lymph nodes, thymus, and spleen.

These components of the immune system, which spread throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, involve many types of cells, organs, proteins, and tissues which take part in the “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING”, and make it possible.

Whenever the internal defense system will detect a deleterious foreign structure — that is to say, anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning —, it will mount a complex response: a “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING”. In this response, the ⁷⁸¹ See conversation of July 01, 2005, Aristide with the Archangel RAPHAEL, on how to cleanse an organ; to rid it of impurities, rid it of everything which, like bacteria, infectious particle, etc ..., is detrimental to its proper functioning.

“fighters” designated as white blood cells will charge into battle to perform their predefined “specific tasks” and following well predefined scenarios⁷⁸²: a manifestation of the “INTELLIGENCE” designed for these “fighters” by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “programmed” and embedded into them by “THE DIVINE FORCE” to mimic the purifying properties and effects of the “Formative Divine Particles” inside the manifestation by the metaphor of the “Divine Septenary Equilibrium Zone” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. It is a demonstration of “intelligent behaviour” inside a marvel of miniaturization and compressed complexity; it is a demonstration of “THE SCIENCE”, which is found in any structure of “created energy”. It is thereby a demonstration of “THE INTELLIGENCE” of “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

WHITE BLOOD CELLS, also designated as leukocytes, will circulate in the blood vessels and the lymphatic vessels that parallel the veins and arteries of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. White blood cells will be constantly on patrol and looking for deleterious foreign structures. When they will find a target, they will begin to multiply and send signals out to other cell types so that these cells start performing their defined “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”. The white blood cells will be stored in different places, which will be referred to as lymphoid organs in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. These lymphoid organs include the following:

- Thymus — a gland which is found between the lungs and just below the neck.
- Spleen — an organ that will filter the blood. It sits in the upper left of the abdomen.
- Bone marrow — found in the center of the bones, it will also produce red blood cells.
- Lymph nodes — small glands positioned throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, linked by lymphatic vessels.

There are two main types of leukocyte: Phagocytes and Lymphocytes.

⁷⁸² Think of these as algorithms, which you are already familiar with in artificial intelligence and through which a controlled environment is analyzed and predefined actions are defined or induced and to be taken accordingly while maximizing their chance of success.

PHAGOCYTES.— These are the cells that will surround and absorb deleterious foreign structures and break them down, effectively consuming them. Phagocytes can move through the blood vessels and tissue of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to ingest or consume deleterious foreign structures; they will target organisms, which are detrimental to the proper functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. When a phagocyte has consumed a deleterious foreign structure, it will send out a chemical signal through cellular communication and that helps lymphocytes to identify what kind of deleterious foreign structure it is. Each deleterious foreign structure will carry a specific type of antigen, and each lymphocyte in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will carry antibodies⁷⁸³ meant to fight the antigens carried by the deleterious foreign structures. There are several types of phagocytes, including:

- Neutrophils.— As we have indicated already in descriptions of the cardiovascular system, neutrophils (also known as neutrocytes or heterophils) are the most abundant type of granulocytes and make up 50% to 80% of all white blood cells in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. They are formed from stem cells in the bone marrow and differentiated into subpopulations of neutrophil-killers and neutrophil-cagers. They are short-lived and highly motile as they can enter parts of tissue where other cells/molecules cannot. Neutrophils may be subdivided into segmented neutrophils and banded neutrophils (or bands). They form part of the polymorphonuclear cells family (PMNs) together with basophils and eosinophils. The designation “neutrophil” derives from staining characteristics on hematoxylin and eosin (H&E) histological or cytological preparations. Whereas basophilic white blood cells stain dark blue and eosinophilic white blood cells stain bright red, neutrophils stain a neutral pink. Normally, neutrophils contain a nucleus divided into 2–5 lobes.
- Monocytes.— These will be the largest type and will have several roles. Monocytes are the largest cells of the blood (averaging 15–18 μm in diameter), and they make up about 7 percent of the leukocytes. The nucleus is relatively big and tends to be indented or folded rather than multilobed. The cytoplasm contains large numbers of fine granules, which often appear to be more numerous near the cell membrane. Monocytes are actively motile and phagocytic. They are capable of ingesting infectious foreign structures as well as red cells and other large particles, but they cannot replace the function of the neutrophils in the removal and destruction of bacteria. Monocytes will generally enter areas of inflamed tissue later than the granulocytes. They will also be found at sites of chronic infections. In the bone marrow, granulocytes and monocytes will arise from a common precursor under the influence of the granulocyte-macrophage colony-stimulating factor. Monocytes will leave the bone marrow and circulate in the blood. After a period of hours, the monocytes will enter the tissues, where they will develop into macrophages, the tissue phagocytes that constitute the reticuloendothelial system (or macrophage system).

- Macrophages.— Macrophages are specialised cells involved in the detection, phagocytosis and destruction of deleterious foreign structures. Macrophages originate from blood monocytes that leave the circulation to differentiate in different tissues of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. There is a substantial heterogeneity among each macrophage population, which most probably reflects the required level of specialisation within the micro environment of any given tissue. This heterogeneity is reflected in their morphology, the type of deleterious foreign structures, which they can recognise, as well as the levels of inflammatory cytokines they produce (i.e. IL-1, IL-6, tumour necrosis factor alpha). Macrophages will migrate to and circulate within almost every tissue, patrolling for pathogens or eliminating dead cells. The table below describes the location and function of a few different macrophage populations. They have been endowed with the capacity to detect products of deleterious foreign structures. They can also present antigens to T cells and initiate inflammation by releasing cytokines molecules. Macrophages will patrol for deleterious foreign structures and also remove dead and dying cells.

Type	Location	Function
Alveolar macrophage	Lung alveoli	Phagocytosis of small particles, dead cells or bacteria. Initiation and control of immunity to respiratory pathogens.

Kupffer cells	Liver	Initiate immune responses and hepatic tissue remodelling.
Microglia	Central nervous system	Elimination of old or dead neurons and control of immunity in the brain.
Splenic macrophages	Spleen marginal zone, red and white pulp	Elimination of dysfunctional or old red blood cells.

- Mast cells.— Mast cells (also designated as mastocytes or labrocyte) are resident cells of connective tissue, which contain many granules rich in histamine and heparin. Mast cells are very similar to basophil granulocytes in blood. Both are granulated cells that contain histamine and heparin, an anticoagulant. Their nuclei differ in that the basophil nucleus is lobated while the mast cell nucleus is round. Mast cells arise in the bone marrow where maturation is influenced by stem cell factor binding to the receptor c-kit and by other cytokines such as interleukin (IL)-3, IL-4, IL-9, and IL-10, which promote differentiation and proliferation of mast cells. Mast cells will play a key role in the inflammatory process. When activated, a mast cell will either selectively release (piecemeal degranulation) or rapidly release (anaphylactic degranulation) “mediators”, or compounds that induce inflammation, from storage granules into the local microenvironment. Mast cells can be stimulated to degranulate by allergens through cross-linking with immunoglobulin E receptors, physical injury through pattern recognition receptors for damage-associated molecular patterns (DAMPs), microbial pathogens through pattern recognition receptors for pathogen-associated molecular patterns (PAMPs), and various compounds through their associated G-protein coupled receptors (e.g., morphine through opioid receptors) or ligand-gated ion channels. Complement proteins can activate membrane receptors on mast cells to exert various functions as well.
- Eosinophils.— Eosinophils, like other granulocytes, will be produced in the bone marrow until they are released into the circulation. Although about the same size as neutrophils, the eosinophil will contain larger granules, and the chromatin will be generally concentrated in only two nonsegmented lobes. Eosinophils will leave the circulation within hours of release from the marrow and will migrate into the tissues (usually those of the skin, lung, and respiratory tract) through the lymphatic channels. Like neutrophils, eosinophils will respond to chemotactic signals released at the site of cell destruction. They will be actively motile and related to the phagocytosis. Eosinophils will be involved in defense of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against parasites, and they will participate in hypersensitivity and inflammatory reactions, primarily by dampening their destructive effects.

- Basophils.— Basophils are the least numerous of the granulocytes, and their large granules almost will completely obscure the underlying double-lobed nucleus. Within hours of their release from the bone marrow, basophils will migrate from the circulation to the barrier tissues (e.g., the skin and mucosa), where they will synthesize and will store histamine, a natural modulator of the inflammatory response. When aggravated, basophils will release, along with histamine and other substances, leukotrienes, which will cause bronchoconstriction during anaphylaxis (a hypersensitivity reaction). Basophils will incite immediate hypersensitivity reactions in association with platelets, macrophages, and neutrophils.

LYMPHOCYTES.— Lymphocytes represent approximately 20 to 30% of the leukocytes in the blood, that is to say, 1000 to 4000/mm³. They are distinguished by their small size (between 7 and 9 micrometers in diameter), by their nucleus, rounded or ovoid, as well as by their cytoplasm, which is scarce and poor in granulations. Lymphocytes will help the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” with recollection data of previous deleterious foreign structures and recognize them if they come back to attack again. Lymphocytes will begin their life in the bone marrow. Some will stay in the marrow and develop into B lymphocytes (B cells), others will head to the thymus and become T lymphocytes (T cells). B lymphocytes have a medullary maturation where they acquire their immune specificity, this maturation was first described in “birds” where it takes place in a specific lymphoid organ designated as the “Bursa of Fabricius”⁷⁸⁴, hence their name of B Lymphocytes. The T stands for thymus-derived, referring to the fact that these cells mature in the thymus. There are several types of lymphocyte, defined both by their functions and their membrane markers, designated according to the CD nomenclature (cluster of differentiation, or differentiation class) followed by a number. These markers are molecules defining a group of lymphocytes with common properties. These different types derive from the same precursors, the lymphoid stem cells of the hematopoietic bone marrow.

⁷⁸⁴ The bursa of Fabricius is a primary lymphoid organ in birds that is responsible for the amplification and differentiation of B lymphoid progenitors within its follicular micro environment. In the chicken, the bursa of Fabricius is a chestnut-size, sac-like organ located dorsal to the rectum, anterior to the sacrum communicating with the posterior portion of the cloaca by a short duct. Its inner surface contains 12 to 20 longitudinal folds

tightly packed with lymphoid follicles and is covered by interfollicular and follicle-associated epithelium.

The chicken bursa of Fabricius consists of around 12000 follicles, composed of an outer cortical part of mesodermal origin and a medullary part of ectodermal origin. Individual follicles are separated from one another by a collagen type I positive connective tissue layer. Each follicle contains about 2 to 4×10^5 cells (immunoglobulin expressing B lymphocytes, dendritic cells, macrophages and epithelial cells). During ontogeny of the bursa of Fabricius, extensive interactions between two embryologically different compartments (ectodermal epithelium of the anal invagination and mesenchyme of the tail bud) lead to the formation of the bursal follicles into which, as a third player, dendritic cell and B cell precursors immigrate.

- B lymphocytes.— These cells represent about 10% of lymphocytes circulating in the blood and they develop in the bone marrow. B lymphocytes are used for the humoral immune response: they are specialized in the production of antibodies, which they secrete after being transformed into plasma cells and which diffuse in the “humors” (liquids) of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

B lymphocytes are the support of humoral immunity and act indirectly by the synthesis, followed by secretion, of antibodies in the form of immunoglobulins (Ig). The activation of B lymphocytes takes place in several stages: B lymphocytes carry immunoglobulins — or antigen receptors — on their cytoplasmic membrane, each lymphocyte having its own type of immunoglobulin. When one of them will encounter a circulating antigen carried by deleterious foreign structures that will enter the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, complementary to its immunoglobulin, it will be for it the signal to produce antibodies (immunoglobulins identical to those of its membrane but in soluble form) in order to perform its defined “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”. All lymphocytes resulting from divisions of such a B lymphocyte form a group called a clone and are endowed with the same specificity and the same mission as the mother cell. The B lymphocytes will also help alert the T lymphocytes.

- T lymphocytes.— T lymphocytes support cellular immunity and act directly (primary response defined in their “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”) against the cellular antigen. They have specific differentiation antigens (CD2, CD3) on their surface. T lymphocytes represent more than 60% of lymphocytes in the blood, mainly in the form of memory lymphocytes. In order to perform their defined “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”, T lymphocytes, like B lymphocytes, have membrane molecules — or antigen receptors — adapted to recognize the cellular antigen carried by deleterious foreign structures that will enter the cells of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. Those cellular antigens must be presented to the T lymphocytes by a specialized cell such as a macrophage, which degrades the antigen and prepares its debris by associating them with so-called presentation molecules, the molecules of the major histocompatibility complex (C.M.H.). The latter, which will vary from one copy of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to another, also determine the possibilities of grafting between two subjects (hence, histocompatibility). The T lymphocytes have as “specific tasks” to destroy cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which have been invaded by the deleterious foreign structures and they will help alert other leukocytes through cellular communication. There are distinct types of T lymphocytes:

- Helper T cells (Th cells).— They will coordinate the immune response. Some will communicate with other cells, and some will stimulate B cells to produce more antibodies. Others will attract more T cells or cell-consuming phagocytes.
- Destroyer (or Killer) T cells (cytotoxic T lymphocytes).— Destroyer (or Killer) T cells are cells related to T lymphocytes, with which they share certain membrane markers. These cells are endowed with a natural cytotoxic activity, which they exercise spontaneously to destroy cells infected with any deleterious foreign structure. Their properties can be enhanced by interleukins secreted by T lymphocytes; we then speak of LAK cells (lymphokine activated killer, a killer activated by lymphokines).

While performing their defined “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”, instead of producing antibodies, Destroyer (or Killer) T cells will make a special enzyme, or chemical, that will destroy the cells. These destroyer (or Killer) T cells will be particularly useful for fighting anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy tissue and that is detrimental to its proper functioning.

All lymphocytes will begin their development in the bone marrow. The B lymphocytes will mature partly in the bone marrow until they are released into the circulation. Further differentiation of B lymphocytes occurs in lymphoid tissues (spleen or lymph glands), most notably on stimulation by a foreign antigen. The precursors of the T lymphocytes will migrate from the marrow to the thymus, where they will differentiate under the influence of a hormone-like substance.

In the thymus, T cells multiply and differentiate into helper, regulatory, or cytotoxic T cells or become memory T cells. Once they will have matured, the T lymphocytes will leave the thymus and circulate through the blood to the lymph glands and the spleen. Once stimulated by the appropriate antigen, helper T cells will secrete chemical messengers designated as cytokines, which stimulate the differentiation of B cells into plasma cells, thereby promoting antibody production. Regulatory T cells will act in the control immune reactions, hence their designation. Cytotoxic T cells, which are activated by various cytokines, bind to and destroy infected cells.

In the schematic representation of the two compartments of lymphoid differentiation, the first panel (A) is a sketch of the development of the immune system from stem cells originating in bone marrow or liver, and differentiating in central lymphoid tissues, i.e., bone marrow and thymus independent of antigen contact. The second panel (B) is a sketch of the migration of cells into peripheral lymphoid tissues in lymph nodes, spleen, and mucosa-associated lymphoid tissues at sites where these cells can react with antigen (i.e., antigen-dependent differentiation). B cells migrate to outer regions of lymph nodes in germinal centers; T cells migrate in inner paracortical areas; B and T cells are found in medullary cords. The insets show the location of the various subsets of T cells in the paracortical areas (upper inset) and B cells in the germinal centers of a lymph node. B cells respond to polysaccharides with the production of Immunoglobulin M (IgM) antibodies, and B2 lymphocytes respond to protein antigens and with the help of Th2 lymphocytes lead to the sequential production of IgM, IgG, IgA, and IgE antibody. Immunoglobulins are isotypes of antibodies that will be produced by this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

All immunoglobulins belong to a family of glycoproteins, and have the same basic molecular structure, consisting of four polypeptide chains. Two of the chains, which are identical in any given immunoglobulin molecule, are heavy (H) chains or larger chains of amino acid sequences (molecular weight of 55 kD); the other two are identical light (L) chains or smaller chains of amino acid sequences (molecular weight of 22 kD). The heavy and light chains that make up each arm of an immunoglobulin molecule are composed of two regions, called constant (C) and variable (V). These regions are distinguished on the basis of amino acid similarity — that is to say, constant regions have essentially the same amino acid sequence in all immunoglobulin molecules of the same class (IgG, IgM, IgA, IgD, or IgE), but the amino acid sequences of the variable regions differ quite a lot from one to another.

The variable and constant regions of both the light and the heavy chains are structurally folded into functional units called domains. Each light chain consists of one variable domain (VL) and one constant domain (CL). Each heavy chain has one variable domain (VH) and three or four constant domains (CH1, CH2, CH3, CH4) depending on the immunoglobulin isotype. The constant region of the IgG, IgA, and IgD HCs contain three domains and the constant regions of IgM and IgE have an extra domain resulting in four domains. Those domains that make up the “tail” of the basic Y-shaped molecule (in other words, all the Heavy-chain constant domains except CH1) are responsible for the special biological properties of immunoglobulins — except for the capacity to bind to a specific antigenic determinant.

The upper two arms of an immunoglobulin molecule perform an antigen-recognition function, which is referred to as the antigen-binding fragment (Fab). The lower stem of the molecule displays an effector function and interacts with other components of the immune system such as complement and cell receptors specific for this part of the molecule, which is referred to as the crystallizable fragment (Fc). The tail of the molecule, which does not bind to antigens, is composed entirely of the constant regions of heavy chains. It determines the fate of the antigen once it becomes bound to the immunoglobulin molecule. Another fragment of immunoglobulin, referred to as the variable fragment (Fv), retains the complete antibody-binding sites and consists of the variable regions of both heavy and light chains containing the N-terminal half of the antigen-binding fragment (Fab).

Figure: Structure of a typical immunoglobulin molecule. (A) The immunoglobulin molecule is a Y-shaped protein, which consists of four polypeptide chains. Two heavy chains (blue) are joined to two light chains (green) by disulfide bonds. Blue squares represent intrachain S—S bonds; blue bars indicate interchain S—S bonds. The heavy chains extend from the stem of the Y into the arm; the two light chains are confined to the arms. Each polypeptide has regions whose amino acid sequences are constant (white and yellow) and variable (red). The variable regions also contain hypervariable regions. All antibodies of a given type have the same constant regions, but the variable regions differ from one clone of a B cell to another. The heavy- and light-chain variable regions fold to create an antigen-binding site. (B) Schematic model of the domain structure of an antibody molecule. The domains have a characteristic folding pattern, which is also seen in the T cell receptor and proteins of the major histocompatibility complex.

Each chain of an immunoglobulin is manufactured separately and is encoded by different genes. The four chains are joined in the final immunoglobulin molecule to form a flexible Y shape, which is the simplest form an antibody can take.

In the Y-shaped immunoglobulin molecule, there is a proline-rich region between the first (CH1) and second (CH2) domains of the HC called the hinge region. This region contains cysteine residues, which allow linkage of the heavy chain polypeptides to each other by S—S bonds. It opens and closes to allow better binding between the immunoglobulin molecule and antigenic determinants on the surface of an antigen. This hinge region confers flexibility to the molecule by providing mobility of the two upper arms of the molecule, thus enhancing their antigen-binding potential. Two immunoglobulin isotypes, IgM and IgE, do not have hinge regions; however, their CH2 regions perform a hinge-like function. Immunoglobulin isotypes are named by their heavy chains of amino acids (γ , α , μ , δ , and ϵ) and contain two types of light chains. There are two different types of light chains in each of the isotypes, kappa (κ) and lambda (λ). In contrast to the kappa isotype, which is of only one type, there are four slightly different constant region sequences of the lambda (λ) light chains, forming four subclasses (subtypes).

Immunoglobulin A (IgA) will be found in the linings of the respiratory tract and digestive system, as well as in saliva (spit), tears, and breast milk. Immunoglobulin G (IgG) will be the most common antibody. It will be found in blood and other body fluids, and will facilitate protection against bacterial and viral infections. IgG can take time to form after an infection or immunization. Immunoglobulin M (IgM) will be found mainly in blood and lymph fluid, this will be the first antibody that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will produce when it will fight a new infection. Immunoglobulin E (IgE) will be found in small amounts in the blood. Immunoglobulin D (IgD) is a monomeric antibody isotype that will be expressed in the plasma membranes of immature B-lymphocytes. IgD will also be produced in a secreted form that will be found in small amounts in blood serum. The secreted IgD will be made up of two heavy chains of the delta class, and two light chains.

Immunoglobulins M (IgM) will be generated at the early stage of an adaptive immune response and will then gradually be replaced by immunoglobulins G (IgG). Both will circulate primarily in the blood. Moreover, although some of the immunoglobulins A (IgA), which are found in the linings of the respiratory tract and digestive system, as well as in saliva (sputum), tears and breast milk, also circulate in the blood, their major part will be secreted by the mucous membranes of the airways and digestive tract which they cover and protect.

When the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be confronted with a deleterious foreign structure, the predominant type of antibody it will produce will depend on where it entered the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the location of this deleterious foreign structure in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. If this deleterious foreign structure is encountered in the blood or within a tissue (such as a muscle) of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, then the immune system will mainly produce immunoglobulins G (IgG), which will build up in the blood. But if the deleterious foreign structure enters through the respiratory tract (such as the nostrils), then the immune system will mainly produce immunoglobulins A (IgA), more precisely secretory immunoglobulins A (IgAs). While secretory immunoglobulins A (IgAs) will be predominant in the upper airways, immunoglobulins G (IgG) will be found with immunoglobulins A (IgA) in the lower airways (bronchi and alveoli).

In addition to immunoglobulins A (IgA), an immune response to an intrusion of a deleterious foreign structure into the airways will also generate immunoglobulins G (IgG) and immunoglobulins A (IgA) in the bloodstream, which will provide a protection in case of rupture of the mucous barrier and passage of the deleterious foreign structure into the tissues.

In short, at the level of the upper airways, secretory immunoglobulins A (IgAs) will be the main antibodies that the immune system will implement and they will form the first internal line of defense against deleterious foreign structures that can damage the respiratory system; for, secretory immunoglobulins A (IgAs) do not promote inflammation. Binding of secretory immunoglobulins A (IgAs) to an antigen will lead to a “quiet” expulsion of these deleterious foreign structures annihilated from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” without inducing an additional detrimental immune response. Whereas, an immune response based on immunoglobulin G (IgG) will be followed by an inflammatory immune response. This is triggered by the change in shape of the Fc portion (the free end which does not bind to the antigen) of the IgG antibody, which then makes it capable of activating the inflammatory cells as well as the “complement system”, which is a group of enzymes that stimulate inflammation, destroy pathogenic cells and recruit B lymphocytes and macrophages (which phagocytose pathogens). It is thus that immunoglobulins G (IgG) will not be used in the internal line of defense against deleterious foreign structures which may damage the respiratory system.

Since the airways will constantly encounter deleterious foreign structures in the inhaled air, immune responses based on secretory immunoglobulin A (IgAs) will prevent unnecessary recurrent inflammation at this level. Immunoglobulins A (IgA) in the respiratory mucous membranes will be able to suppress infections and safely stop transmission of these deleterious foreign structures, without causing direct damage to the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

A primary function of lymphocytes is to facilitate the protection the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” against deleterious foreign structures. This essential task will be carried out by both T lymphocytes and B lymphocytes, which will act in concert. The T lymphocytes have been endowed with the ability to recognize and respond only to antigens that appear on cell membranes in association with other molecules designated as Major Histocompatibility Complex (MHC) antigens. The latter are glycoproteins that present the antigen in a form that can be recognized by T lymphocytes. In effect, T lymphocytes will be responsible for continuous surveillance of cell surfaces for the presence of foreign antigens. By contrast, the antibodies produced by B lymphocytes will not be confined to recognizing antigens on cell membranes; they can bind to soluble antigens in the blood or in extravascular fluids. T lymphocytes typically will recognize antigens of infectious organisms or deleterious foreign structures that will penetrate cells in order to multiply, such as infectious particles. During their intracellular life cycle, infectious particles will produce antigens that will appear on the cell membrane. Two classes of T lymphocytes can be involved in the response to those cell-associated viral antigens: cytotoxic T lymphocytes, which will destroy the cells by a “lytic cycle”⁷⁸⁵, and helper T lymphocytes, which will assist B cells to produce ⁷⁸⁵ All infectious particles depend on cells for reproduction and metabolic processes. By themselves, infectious particles do not encode for all of the enzymes necessary for viral replication. But within a host cell that is unable to carry out its assigned “specific tasks” for “COMBAT” for any motive, an infectious particle can take over the cellular machinery and start replicating, producing more viral and deleterious particles. Bacteriophages replicate only in the cytoplasm, since prokaryotic cells do not have a nucleus or organelles. In eukaryotic cells, most DNA infectious particles will attempt to replicate inside the nucleus, with an exception observed in the large DNA infectious particles, such as the pox-infectious particles, that can replicate in the cytoplasm. RNA infectious particles that infect cells often replicate in the cytoplasm.

The lytic cycle is one of the two cycles of viral reproduction (referring to bacterial infectious particles or bacteriophages), the other being the lysogenic cycle. The lytic cycle is named for the process of lysis, which occurs when an infectious particle has infected a cell, replicated new infectious particle particles, and bursts through the cell membrane, destroying the cell antibodies against the microbial antigens. Helper T lymphocytes will exert their influence on B lymphocytes through several hormone-like peptides termed interleukins (IL) — a term that derives from (inter-) “as a means of communication”, and (-leukin) “deriving from the fact that many of these proteins are produced by leukocytes and act on leukocytes”.

During a “COMBAT”, the process of “HEALING”, the cells involved will communicate with each other through “specific processes” performs by molecules designated as cytokines. As we have indicated already, cytokines (meaning “cell movement”) are a group of small proteins used as signaling molecules of the immune system, with a primary paracrine or juxtacrine role. They will be produced by a wide range of cells, which will be designated as macrophages, lymphocytes, mast cells, endothelial cells and fibroblasts, and they will be responsible for producing some of the cardinal signs of inflammation. An inflammation will be a result of exposure of a healthy cell to harmful stimuli produced by anything distinguished from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” healthy cells and which is detrimental to its proper functioning. Cytokines will be key modulators of cell inflammation. Cytokines are pleiotropic — that is to say, a particular cytokine can act on a number of different types of cells rather than a single cell type —, redundant — refers to the ability of a number of different cytokines to carry out the same function —, and multifunctional — that is to say, the same cytokine is able to regulate a number of different functions —. Some cytokines are antagonistic in that one cytokine stimulates a particular defense function while another cytokine inhibits that function. Other cytokines are synergistic wherein two different cytokines have a greater effect in combination than either of the two would by themselves. As there are many types of cytokines, they have been placed into different classes including: chemokines, interferons, interleukins, lymphokines and tumour necrosis factors. The downstream effects of a particular cytokine will occur through its high-affinity binding of its receptor expressed on the surface of a target cell. This action may occur in an autocrine (acts on same cell), paracrine (acts on nearby cell) or endocrine (acts on distant cell; not the normal manner for cytokine responses) manner. Receptor engagement will trigger intracellular signalling cascades, which will lead to altered as such. This leads to the release of new virions, or infectious particle complexes, which will subsequently propagate and infect more cells. The lytic cycle results in the destruction of the infected cell and its membrane. In the lytic cycle, the viral DNA exists as a separate free floating molecule within the bacterial cell, and replicates separately from the host bacterial DNA, whereas in the lysogenic cycle, the viral DNA is located within the host DNA.

gene expression in the target cell, and to an expression of a biological “specific effect”.

While performing their assigned “specific tasks” for “COMBAT” to destroy cells in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which have been invaded by the deleterious foreign structures, lymphocytes will also send “specific signals” for “COMBAT” to neighbouring cells. Those neighbouring cells in turn will perform their predefined and assigned “specific tasks” for “COMBAT” — for example, such as the production of “specific proteins”, which will prevent deleterious foreign structures from replicating within them — and will adopt their also predefined “specific behaviors” for “COMBAT” and associated “specific effects” in response to the “specific signals” for “COMBAT”, following well predefined scenarios⁷⁸⁶. The resulting synergetic “specific behavior” and associated “specific effect” will be manifested into existence, both in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” containing “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” defined by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to reveal, to manifest a state of affairs, to indicate that an undesirable situation has occurred inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” — “cells”, which present one or more malfunctions; that is to say, “cells”, which are in a state of “CHAOS” — and a “COMBAT” is taking place. Such manifestations of the resulting synergetic “specific behavior” and associated “specific effect” are designated as “specific symptoms”; these are also “distress signals” calling for an “external intervention”⁷⁸⁷ or a “transfer of forces” and requesting additional “‘EARTHLY’ specific supply of subsistence” and/or additional “‘SPIRITUAL’ specific supply of subsistence” in order to sustain the “COMBAT” and to restore the state of “HARMONY” of those cells with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. The ⁷⁸⁶ As we have already indicated, think of these as algorithms, which you are already familiar with in artificial intelligence and through which a controlled environment is analyzed and predefined actions are defined or induced and to be taken accordingly while maximizing their chance of success. NOTHING in the anatomy of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was done at random.

⁷⁸⁷ To support your immune system, you must continuously rid your internal organs of any impurity and deleterious foreign structures which, like parasites, bacteria, infectious particle, etc..., are detrimental to the proper functioning of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you are wearing.

See conversation of July 01, 2005, Aristide with the Archangel RAPHAEL, on how to cleanse an organ.

requested “‘EARTHLY’ specific supply of subsistence” will include the nutrients (including essential vitamins) and oxygen required for the proper functioning of cells, and also the appropriate minerals, which will facilitate the healthy cells survival and “COMBAT” — the process of “HEALING” in order to annihilate any cause of cells malfunction.

To every “COMBAT” carried out by lymphocytes, are associated “specific symptoms” (or “distress signals”) calling for “external interventions” or “transfer of forces”; and, the higher the intensity of the “COMBAT” carried out by lymphocytes, the more noticeable and higher the intensity of those “specific symptoms”. There are no “COMBAT” carried out by lymphocytes without that the associated “specific symptoms” be manifested into existence either in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” containing the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” or in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment” defined by the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The reverse implication also holds true: when “specific symptoms” are not manifested into existence, the intensity of the “COMBAT” carried out by lymphocytes is equal to “ZERO”, that is to say, the lymphocytes are not performing the “specific tasks” for “COMBAT”; they will be, however, on “combat duty”, waiting for their call to “COMBAT”.

Cells, which have been infected by deleterious foreign structures, will produce interferons, which also will send “specific signals” for “COMBAT” to neighbouring cells. These neighbouring cells in turn will perform their predefined and assigned “specific tasks” for “COMBAT” — such as the production of “specific proteins”, which will prevent deleterious foreign structures from replicating within them — and will adopt their also predefined “specific behaviors” for “COMBAT” and associated “specific effects” in response to the “specific signals” for “COMBAT”, following well predefined scenarios. A produced interferon does not directly inhibit the multiplication of deleterious foreign structures; rather, it will stimulate the infected cells and those nearby to produce proteins, which will prevent the identified deleterious foreign structures from replicating within those cells.

As we have already indicated, interferons are members of a larger class of proteins called cytokines (proteins that carry signals between cells). Most interferons are classified as alpha, beta, or gamma interferons, depending on their molecular structure. There are two other classes of interferons: omega and tau.

Interferons are differentiated primarily through their amino acid sequence. Interferon-alpha, -beta, -tau, and -omega, which have relatively similar amino acid sequences, are classified as type I interferons. Type I interferons are known primarily for their ability to make cells resistant to infections from deleterious foreign structures. Interferon-gamma is the only type II interferon, classified as such because of its unique amino acid sequence. This interferon has the ability to facilitate the regulation of the overall immune system functioning.

In addition to their structural makeup, type I and type II interferons have other differences. Type I interferons will be produced by almost every cell in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, while the type II interferon-gamma will be produced only by T lymphocytes and natural killer cells. The two classes will also bind to different kinds of receptors, which lie on the surface of cells and attract and combine with “Specific Molecule ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

Interferons do not directly protect cells against infection by deleterious foreign structures, but rather render cells less suitable as an environment for replication of deleterious foreign structures. Interferons will work to stop a cell malfunction when they will be released into the blood stream and then bind to cell receptors. After binding, they will be drawn inside the cytoplasm of the cell, where they will perform their assigned and predefined “specific tasks” for the production of “specific proteins” for “COMBAT”.

In contrast to antibodies, interferons are not specific to deleterious foreign structures, but they are specific of cells hosts, which produce the considered interferons. Thus, infections of cells of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be inhibited only by interferons of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. The genome of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will contain 14 “non allelic⁷⁸⁸” and 9 allelic genes of alpha-interferon (macrophage interferon), as well as a single gene for beta-interferon (fibroblast interferon). Genes for any two or more variants of interferon, which have originated from the same wild-type gene are designated as “allelic genes” and will occupy the same chromosomal location (locus). Variants originating from different standard genes will be designated as “non allelic”. Alpha- and beta-interferons are structurally related glycoproteins of 166 and 169 amino acid residues. In contrast, gamma-interferon (also designated as immune interferon) is not closely related to the other two and is not induced by deleterious foreign structures infection. It will be produced by T lymphocytes cells after stimulation with the cytokine interleukin-2. It will enhance the cytotoxic activity of T lymphocytes cells, macrophages and natural killer cells and thus has antiproliferative effects. It will also increase the production of antibodies in response to antigens administered simultaneously with alpha-interferon, by enhancing the antigen-presenting function of macrophages.

Interferons will bind to “specific receptors” on the cell surface, and once inside the cell, they will induce a “specific signal” inside the cell. There are two induction mechanisms. One mechanism involves the induction of protein kinase by interferon, which, in the presence of double-stranded RNA, will phosphorylate one subunit of an initiation factor of protein synthesis (eIF-2B), causing the factor to be inactivated by sequestration in a complex. The second mechanism involves the induction of the enzyme 2',5'-oligoadenylate synthetase (2',5'-oligo A synthetase). In the presence of double-stranded RNA, this enzyme will catalyse the polymerisation of ATP into oligomers of 2 to 15 adenosine monophosphate residues, which are linked by phosphodiester bonds between the position 2' of one ribose and the position 5' of the next. These 2',5'-oligoadenylates will activate an interferon specific RNAase, a latent endonuclease designated as RNAase L, which will always be present but not normally active. RNAase will cleave both viral and cellular single stranded mRNA.

As we have already explained in the chapter concerning the functioning of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” and the transfer of forces from one structure to another during the “COMBAT”, “HEALING” comes as a last resort from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER through His “ALTAR”.

As we have indicated, we have added here a set of brief description of the systems concerning the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in the non-spiritual “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Environment”, leaving aside the description of their attachments to the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, so that you wake up from your sleep in the dusty soil, and so that through those brief descriptions:

- You get a good impression about the massive amount of considerations, reflections, and intellectual work that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has unfolded in the design of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”;
- You get a good impression about the work of “divine surgery” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has performed in producing this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” into existence;
- You get a good impression of whom “THE DIVINE FORCE” is, “THE SCIENCE”, which is found in any structure of “created energy”, and keep that knowledge in mind at all time: write it on the tables of your heart; and that
- You get a good impression of the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has accomplished with the achievement of the previous decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”; all the information (including the information stored in the DNAs and the signature of IHVH inside each of the several trillion cells) that SHE has written in the countless assembled structures of “created energy” – including: the manifestations of the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model (“THE FLORA” in all its magnificence vegetal) as well as the manifestations of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model

(“THE FAUNA”) — that SHE has produced into existence with the achievement of those previous decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Consider and meditate on these things from the perspective of “THE ONE” building a scientific model, a scientific representation of concepts of an object, or even a scientific representation of processes, which are used to describe and explain something that cannot be experienced directly inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

Once you have pictured in your mind the scientific model that has been conceived and established, consider and meditate on the tasks of actually producing a sample of that model into existence. Consider and meditate on the extent of details, the scientific knowledge, computing capacity, the speed of execution, the memory, etc... of “HE WHO” possesses “THE SCIENCE”, which is found in any structure of “created energy”, consider and meditate on the capacity of “SHE WHO” actually manifested, produced into existence, a sample of such conceived scientific model.

You are the manifested sample: meditate on your behaviour towards “HE WHO” possesses that “SCIENCE” and towards “SHE WHO” manifested you into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, as a product of an established scientific model, a scientific representation of concepts of an object, or even a scientific representation of processes, which are used to describe and explain something that cannot be experienced directly inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, but through the use of images or metaphors. Once you have considered and meditated on these things, then stop being stupid, stop walking in obscurity, wake up from your sleep in the dusty soil and write down your praise to such work, and by which you will live on from now onwards.

Be praised and glorified O DIVINE, my FATHER, for this magnificent PROJECT that you had designed and undertook to implement.

But how can I speak of you, when there are no words, no matter how profound the wisdom, capable of magnifying you with dignity, nor of a heart which can hope to rise, however ardent his aspiration may be to you, to the heights of your SCIENCE and of your MAJESTY?

You have knowledge of all things inside this attribute “NON DIVINE” and you are not known to any. You wanted to make yourself known to this attribute “NON DIVINE” and all that it contains; that is why, with a word from your mouth, “THE DIVINE FORCE”, you brought this Earthly World into existence and shaped it.

With a word out of your mouth, and by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and throughout the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “SPIRIT—LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, you wrote down the sentence of annihilation of ignorance and obscurity.

In front of “THE DIVINE FORCE” in whom you have placed your WISDOM, the wise is taken aback and falls short; in front of “THE DIVINE FORCE” in whom you have placed the knowledge of yourself, the scholar confesses his ignorance.

In front of your power, the strong becomes weak and inexistent; in the face of the abundance of your goods, the rich one affirms his poverty; in front of your LIGHT, the enlightened one is lost in the darkness.

Towards “THE DIVINE FORCE”, the TABERNACLE of your KNOWLEDGE, turns the essence of all understanding, and around the sanctuary of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, your PRESENCE, gravitate the souls of all humanity.

All praise and glory be with you, O FATHER, from whom all things that have been manifested by “THE DIVINE FORCE” have testified that You are the absolute ONE, who, from all eternity, has been sanctified from all equivalence or likeness and will remain so forever.

These systems of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, outlined hereabove, and many others, were designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, and through manifestations of metaphors, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was implementing them in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. As we have indicated, bear in mind that the organs represented in these systems of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” are projections into a two-dimensional “flatness”, and with appropriate linkages between them as projected elements, of aspects of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that is found in a seven-dimensional domain, including manifestations of metaphors of the products that are formed and those which are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

At the scale of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was implementing all the miniaturized wonders of that, which is designated as “THE SOLAR SYSTEM”, itself being a living manifestation of metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and that SHE had implemented two days earlier by accomplishing the fourth decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and which all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have miserably failed to understand in their obscurity: they “could not see an elephant” displayed in front of them. At the scale of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and throughout this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” was writing and producing an “IMAGE” of “THE BOOK OF CREATION”. This “IMAGE” of HERSELF has nothing to do with the morphology of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. “THE DIVINE FORCE” has adapted this “IMAGE” of HERSELF, as “THE BOOK OF CREATION”, to the morphology of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. A REMARKABLE MASTERPIECE OF DIVINE WORK!!! INCREDIBLE!!!⁷⁸⁹ All the seemingly scattered knowledge of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had poured abundantly on the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, before the announcement of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, all the key tasks of the rational activities that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had assigned to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’

⁷⁸⁹ Had “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, not shown it to me in display in “VISION”, I would have seen all these as a fiction. But, it is no fiction.

‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and which they had failed to understand the purposes, were now been packed together and represented through symbols in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

In “slow motion”, and to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” disciples of obscurity, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” was revealing the “LIGHT” that is hidden in the “LIGHT”, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in those rational activities that SHE had assigned to each of them.

All the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present, even those that had been intentionally pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, were able to see how the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” (among others, Oxygen, Hydrogen, Carbon, Nitrogen, Potassium, Chlorine, Sodium, Calcium, Phosphorus, Magnesium, Iron, Zinc, Manganese, Copper, Iodine, Chromium, Molybdenum, Selenium, etc... those chemical elements that you now have listed in the periodic table of chemical elements) were selected by “THE DIVINE FORCE” at “lightning speed” for those who were watching, but in “slow motion” for “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE” and for “THE DIVINE FORCE” Herself, to form the cells of the layers of structures of all the organs of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Suspended in “THE AIRS” and well far enough above the ground, as if it was laid on a very high and invisible surgical table, and all around the “specific effects” associated with the movement of “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and of “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRITUAL’ Substances”, throughout the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, as a result of atmospheric electricity in movement, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was taking form, with all the details of its systems, among which are those that we have outlined above.

In “slow motion”, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” was writing the different aspects and details of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has consolidated in Himself; expressing them through the production of the rigid structure (the skeleton) in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, in the same way as someone would project the features of an object of a seven dimensional domain, onto a two dimensional plane.

In “slow motion”, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” constructed the core muscle that will fulfill an essential function in the mechanism of the expression of the metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. In “slow motion”, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” has built this inverted cone-shaped red viscera, and has endowed it with an autonomous nervous network that will ensure its automatic functioning, and will thus indicate the essential characteristic of the “ABSOLUTE MOVEMENT” of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

In “slow motion”, in a work of “divine surgery” — the finest and most detailed demonstration of the application, to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement” —, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” constructed the expressions of the twelve redundant “Divine Equilibrium Regions” — the thorax composed of 12 dorsal vertebrae and 12 pairs of ribs — and also those of the fifty-two non-redundant “Divine Equilibrium Regions” of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, throughout this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; in all the details, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” has expressed the aspects and peculiarities of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” had conceived and established, and thus demonstrating the massive amount of considerations, reflections, and intellectual work that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has unfolded in the design, not only of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, but of all “THE HOLY PROJECT”; from the basic element designated as “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” to the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” (the spiritual atom), to more complex elements.

All the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present, saw how, suspended in “THE AIRS” and well far enough above the ground, the heart and the organs were built and encased in the network built of nerves and vessels; they saw how the bones were built and strengthened and put in place, they saw how muscles tightened and were built on the bones, and finally they saw how the skin was built and moulded on this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

In “slow motion”, through all the aspects of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” manifested by metaphors in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” was thus writing the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and of the “nefarious and despicable shadow schemings” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, each one in itself. This sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” is “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” manifested in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and which will be completed by the addition of the appropriate “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”: it is “THE IMAGE OF THE DIVINE” transported by the specifications contained in “THE WORD OF THE DIVINE” in this seventh decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and expressed into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and in a metaphor of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

It is for the purpose to lead the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to understand how each of them was created into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has allowed that “THE CELESTIAL HOST” gathered could follow this achievement.

Even at that moment when “THE DIVINE FORCE” was sewing into existence this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the first manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” as well as several of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” gathered already knew in themselves that they were going to destroy all this work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” was performing.⁷⁹⁰ Since the announcement of the implementation of the

⁷⁹⁰ You can also discern this from their own sayings, as reported in the chronicles of the conflict of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and in which they describe their prowess of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and their works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”. Some of

“Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when the “floor had vanished underneath their feet” in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, they “lost their mind”, in the sense that, they became insane, mentally unsound, and extremely foolish. They had already set for themselves the goal to demonstrate to “THE CELESTIAL HOST” the concept of “DEATH” by using that ““SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, whom they had already labelled as “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, as a “scapegoat” in their “HUBRIS CONFLICT”. They have already embraced “obscurity” to the point of becoming disciples, and they have also already proclaimed themselves to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, the seven dimensions totality. And therefore, they “did not give a damn” about all what “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” was thus writing and which is the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

From the perspective of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” which has been created into existence, is and remain an “INDISTINCT FORM OF THE SPECIFIC ENERGY ‘EARTHLY’ SUBSTANCE”; that is, a cohesive subset carved in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

Once “THE DIVINE FORCE” had finished sculpting this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, SHE placed it gently on the surface of “THE SOLID MATTER” outside “THE WATERS”.

Consequently, “THE DIVINE FORCE” invited the Archangel MICHAEL to descend in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” so that can be completed the process of the creation of the ““SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Once the Archangel MICHAEL was out of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and on the way to the place in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first these chronicles (which are incomplete) have already been delivered to the human by the name of David Aguilar, and are available online on the Internet.

These ““SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” often reveal their own premeditated crimes by using sayings such as: “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...”, or even “... it is THE ETERNAL who wanted that it be so ...”.

“Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and where was laid on the ground the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had carved, then, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has continued Her work, this time inside of “THE SHEKINAH”.

From the “Specific Atomic ‘LIGHT’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and from the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” which covers “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has built the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, with all its structures, according to the model that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established, and that we have already described.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, it is from the “Specific Atomic ‘LIGHT’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has also built “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

“The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model is also an “INDISTINCT FORM” of the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and will thus inherit some of its properties; notably, particular elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” from “THE SHEKINAH”.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, it is also from the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” which covers “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has also built the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” with which SHE has covered “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

This “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has produced into existence, is an “INDISTINCT FORM” of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” which covers “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

Just as the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” which covers “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model will thus inherit properties which are at the limit of “proximity” of the most potent properties that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has fixed for the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

To lead you (human creature reading these scriptures) to “get the picture” about this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, consider the illustration below and which you know already about, and which we have already indicated in previous annotations. It is a gross sketch of the outside of “THE SHEKINAH” inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE”. Inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE” where “THE SHEKINAH” is placed, everything is very bright, very illuminated, and as such, the illustration below is approximative, yet sufficient to bring you to “get the picture”.

In this illustration, the illuminated portal represents the entry to “THE SHEKINAH”. Inside “THE SHEKINAH”, you have the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”. The “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” — the First Begotten of “THE DIVINE FORCE” — is behind the “Specific ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Frontier” which is manifested inside “THE SHEKINAH” as an impenetrable wall of “PURE FIRE”. All the figures around and outside of “THE SHEKINAH” would be the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their true external appearances (which is not the winged human appearance that they take when they manifest in front of human creatures) and, when they gather every seven day to celebrate “THE PRAISE” and to receive each, seven times their daily quantity of raw “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” so that they can carry out the weekly tasks that will be entrusted to them.

In this illustration, those seven (7) lited flames and those calabashes in front of the illuminated portal are representation of the seven firsts foremost “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, before the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. After the “CELESTIAL WAR”, only four amongst those seven will remain; these are the four winged creatures that are represented there in the middle of the artwork. They are: URIEL, represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the LION; RAPHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the BULL; MICHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the human, and CAMAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the EAGLE.

Observe attentively the illuminated portal and the manifestation of “PURE” “LIGHT” coming out of it; it is a representation of the First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”, seen from the outside. The “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” has just built into existence, there inside “THE SHEKINAH”, is akin to that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” and NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” is. NONE of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” has that “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”, but this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” possess that “Specific Energy

‘LIGHT’ Substance”. This “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” has just built into existence, there inside “THE SHEKINAH”, is a living manifestation of that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge”; it is a living manifestation of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.⁷⁹¹

This “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” thus produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE” is a veritable “seed” of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —. It is the smallest “specific energy substance” construct build by “THE DIVINE FORCE” using “Specific Atomic ‘LIGHT’ Substances” and “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” constituents of “THE SHEKINAH”, which contains all the features of “THE SHEKINAH”, and to which an appropriate autonomous “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, as well as appropriate temperature and enlightenment intensity provided by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will be applied, so that it develops with the passage of time and reaches a well-defined state of equilibrium where it will consolidate into a reproduced and fully functional “SHEKINAH”. This development will always go through predefined stages of growth and which are in all respect analogues of the growth stages from the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” to the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”.⁷⁹² This “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, in its quality of a “seed” of “THE ⁷⁹¹ REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE, YOU, HUMAN CREATURE, READING THESE WRITINGS. REMEMBER YOUR ROOT! REMEMBER YOUR “PLENITUDE”! WRITE IT ON THE TABLE OF YOUR HEART!

During your prayers, during your meditation sessions, and also with respect to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, regardless of who that “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” is, keep that illustrated picture in mind. NEVER ANYMORE FORGET WHO YOU ARE!

⁷⁹² CHRIST had already explained this to humans when HE told them the parable of a grain of mustard seed. As answer to the question “Tell us, to what the Work of GOD is comparable to?” that his disciples had asked him, CHRIST, when he lived in this Earthly world, had explained this, saying:

The Work of GOD is like a grain of mustard seed. It is the smallest among all the seeds, but when it falls on the tilled ground, it produces a large tree and becomes a shelter for the birds of the heaven.

SHEKINAH”, and which has been produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will also be the “cause” of reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” at very remote locations from “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, which has been placed in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”. The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model does not have such feature of being a living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” as it is the case with the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

As we have explained already regarding the functioning of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” gather around “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, which has been placed in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, to celebrate and emit “THE PRAISE” — the “specific signals” requesting the sending of external supply of subsistence in order to remain into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” — to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in order to receive their crude “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” through the first non-reversible energy osmosis in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model. In much the same, when the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will be in the “vicinity” of this living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH”, which is this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, they MUST celebrate and emit “THE PRAISE” — the “specific signals” requesting the sending of external supply of subsistence in order to remain into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” — to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through this living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” (that is, through the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”) in order to receive their crude “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” coming out of this living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH”.⁷⁹³

⁷⁹³ We add such details and as much as possible, so that you (human creature, as a living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”), who is reading this writings, truly grasp and understand who you are, and why you were created, and so that you STAND YOUR GROUND IN PURITY for who you are and reach your “PLENITUDE”: remember that you are prone to the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”. As a living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, you are classified on a scale above all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” without exceptions, and

Once the Archangel MICHAEL arrived at the place in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, where was laid on the ground the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul, at the sight of all the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present and anxious to see the outcome of this work, then, he stood beside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, as undecided on the next step from which was to be completed the process of creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, because no “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” can give the existence, can give life, so as to produce a living creature.

Having comfortably settled himself atop the perch of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, that was a very anguishing moment for a self declared “god”, not to have a clue what to do next, and in front of all others self declared “gods” and all those who have declared themselves to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

Subsequently, as time was running out, “THE DIVINE FORCE”, omnipresent in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, and invisible of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” watching, gave to the Archangel MICHAEL — self declared “god”, who knew not his own roots — the “unique word” by which this first manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model will be designated, and invited the Archangel MICHAEL to call this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and to breathe into the nostrils of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul, and beside him on the surface of “THE SOLID MATTER” outside “THE WATERS”.

The Archangel MICHAEL proceeded, believing that he was doing all this by himself; “ADAM”, he said, and then, breathed out gently into the nostrils of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without you have authority on all of them, including the Archangel MICHAEL, as long as you STAND YOUR GROUND IN PURITY. This is the knowledge that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had provided to the first human creature who was called “ADAM” — the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective —, and the knowledge for which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will destroy “ADAM” and humanity, to prevent human creatures from knowing who they are and why they are into existence. We will come to that destruction in a following chapter.

a soul. That breath in itself was already carrying “IMPURITIES”⁷⁹⁴, since the Archangel MICHAEL himself was already standing in “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”, the evidence of which was the “BETRAYAL” he perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and since that dreadful afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, it was already too late for “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER to change the process of creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and there was no contingency plan. Much more, to stop the process of creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, at that time, would have meant endorsing ignorance, the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had locked themselves. It is so that, the process went forward in these disastrous conditions produced by these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

Instantly, in the breath, out of the Archangel MICHAEL, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has joined the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that SHE had produced inside of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.⁷⁹⁵

⁷⁹⁴ Just like the breath of a subject carrying severe diseases contains “IMPURITIES” to some extents.

⁷⁹⁵ Roughly seventy billion years later, a similar situation will occur this time between the Archangel MICHAEL through MOSES, he who received the Tablets of the Decalogue when he still lived on Earth hier below, and the people in front of the Red Sea.

This time, it is the Archangel MICHAEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present who will be invisible to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, just as “THE DIVINE FORCE”, omnipresent in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, was invisible of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who watched the Archangel MICHAEL standing and undecided alongside of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

MOSES stood on the very bank, where the water just met the land, and he stretched out his staff. At a word from the Archangel MICHAEL, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the “HASHMALL” instance descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and using the working tools called “WINDS”, they will separate into two parts the subset of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” which has been called “THE WATERS” and which were constituents of the Red Sea; holding “THE WATERS” of the two sides and establishing the passage through which MOSES and the people continued their walk.

Just as MOSES and the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” would not understand at that moment, the events which were invisible to them and that were taking place around

Through this, “THE DIVINE FORCE” had planned to lead the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to understand the order of the realisation of events in “THE ABSOLUTE FRAME OF REFERENCE” defined by “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE” — that is, to lead them to understand the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE CREATION’”.

The “unique word” by which this first manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model was designated is: “ADAM”, and meaning “The Eye of The ‘LIGHT’”, because being bearer of the “‘LIGHT’ Specific State” in “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”.

As we have already indicated, when “THE DIVINE FORCE” had planned all this, it was for the purpose to rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and the sentence of annihilation of that “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” would be the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is so that, in the breath, out of the Archangel MICHAEL, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has joined the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that SHE had produced inside of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and which thus entered in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul.

It is so that, the seed of “THE SHEKINAH” was placed in “the tilled ground” for the purposes that this seed can also sprout and bring forth by itself products in the likeness of “THE SHEKINAH” in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; that is, produces a progeny of the “TREE OF LIFE” in the them, likewise the Archangel MICHAEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present during this first manifestation of a product of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, understood not the events that were invisible to them and were executed and accomplished by “THE DIVINE FORCE” all along the production of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and of the transmission of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has joined to the breath emitted by the Archangel MICHAEL into the nostrils of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul.

first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, and so that the creatures into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” can understand that “THE DIVINE” is produced by Himself.⁷⁹⁶

By entering the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model carried by this breath emitted by the Archangel MICHAEL, also came into contact with impure “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” as consequence of the presence of the filth that had been immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and in addition, those “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” in their manner of being are not in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” used for the construction of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

It is so that, at the moment when the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was manifested into existence in the “Plane Below”, in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which was “PURE” at its creation inside of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” — and at exit of “THE SHEKINAH”, will lose its “HOMOGENEITY” and was rendered “IMPURE” immediately at the entrance of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; because it got mixed with those impure “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances”.

⁷⁹⁶ As we have already indicated in a previous annotation, CHRIST had already explained this to humans when HE told them the parable of a grain of mustard seed. As answer to the question “Tell us, to what the Work of GOD is comparable to?” that his disciples had asked him, CHRIST, when he lived in this Earthly world, had explained this, saying:

As for the development of this grain of mustard, as a plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and in relation to that of its groundwork through the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” and the “Specific Elementary ‘LIGHT’ Particle”, we explained it in the previous section and CHRIST had already explained this to humans when HE told them about the parable of the growing seed.

Therefore, the “HARMONY” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, was affected from that moment, although this will be noticeable until later.

It is so that, through the recursive transformations, which we described in a previous section, every “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” as a “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” offspring from the firsts two will be forever in a precursor state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, and it will not function anymore as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed it.⁷⁹⁷

Nevertheless, that state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” was not yet perceptible to the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

Once the breath emitted by the Archangel MICHAEL and to which was added the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model has entered into the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” inanimate, lifeless, without movement, without a soul, then, this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” activated and gave life and animated the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” in which it was contained.

The lungs drew “THE LIGHTWEIGHT MATTER” and the organ called the heart, inside of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, started to function, and the eyes of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” opened: the functionalities of the ⁷⁹⁷ Later during the course of the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when a second seed of “THE SHEKINAH” will be transported in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and will be placed in the “Earthly Tabernacle”, that second seed of “THE SHEKINAH” will be rather placed in a pure “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” and worked specifically and free from any contact with the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” in order to protect this second seed of “THE SHEKINAH” and without however that this second seed of “THE SHEKINAH” sprouts and grows from the perspective of acquiring and developing in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

“‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” inside of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” were active as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established them.

The “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” was activated and has covered this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, with a radiation similar to that of “THE SHEKINAH” and indicating the presence of a unique expression of “THE UNION” in this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Whereas the luminous radiation of the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” which covered the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of this first manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model was due to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is contained inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, a similar radiation which was covering the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment” of the Archangel MICHAEL was due to its numerous entries/exits in “THE SHEKINAH” and not due to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the Archangel MICHAEL. As we have already indicated, at the level of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘EARTHLY’” is also the result of internal luminescence processes taking place inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” contained in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. This “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘EARTHLY’”, however, is different from the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘CELESTIAL’” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, due to the presence of the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”, which is the manifestation of the metaphor of that “LIGHT”, which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD”, in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” had designed it, it is the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, as a concrete and living image allowing to express a metaphor of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” that exists already inside of “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”, that has made the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

It is so that, by working in “slow motion” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has produced into existence the first manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model which has been called by the “unique word” “ADAM”, in order to rectify the deficiency of

“THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and that this manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model be the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which had strong roots in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

By working in “slow motion” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has written into existence the second chapter of the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. You will certainly ask to know how can you (reading these writings) “read” this “DISCOURSE”? Here is a hint: Look at the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creature”, wear. It has four limbs (two upper and two lower) of mobility articulated and maintained together and it has a part, which presents the characters of a protuberance, and which is designated as the “head”. Thus, what you “perceive” immediately from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear are the “FIVE” components: four limbs plus one head. Those “FIVE” components taken together form symbolically a “pentagram” and it was intended to represent an “image” of that, which is “PERFECT”, as the Archangel MICHAEL understood it, from the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had poured on these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in an attempt to remedy the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that is seated in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each of them. That, which is “PERFECT”, is “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, from the perspective of indivisibility, and it is as well “THE DIVINE FORCE” from the perspective of divisibility into “FIVE” components taken together. It is so that, the living “picture” of you, as “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creature” in the “IMAGE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, as well as of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, wearing that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is a living “written message”, a “living message”, which was written by “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE”. The living message reads: “... “HE, WHO IS ‘PERFECT’” EXISTS AND IS ALIVE ...” or “... “HE WHO IS” EXISTS AND IS ALIVE ...”, as answer to the quest of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to know “THE ONE” from whom they originate and who they have all failed to recognize through such “living messages” written on them by “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE”. Other living messages are described by the “specific movements” that you perform, other living messages are describes directly from the “specific movements” of the systems of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear. That part of the ⁷⁹⁸ As you already know, “to say nothing is to communicate.” While communication is readily associated with words and verb, it is not just about the art of speaking and writing. Non-verbal communication is the fact of sending and receiving messages without going through the verb — to be considered in its semantic sense, that is to say, speech, language, words —, by means of bodily expressions. From the handshake to the hairstyle, the dress style, and even the tattoos are also integral to non-verbal communication. Those non-verbal details reveal who we are and impact our relationships with others. Verbal communication is the first form of communication that we learn to master, on the one hand to share our experiences with other creatures, on the other hand to establish intelligible relationships with them. The screams, cries and sounds made by young children are the most obvious examples of this. Later, this communication of an almost innate nature gradually evolves and is enriched by the teachings acquired through experience and education.

“Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which presents the characters of a protuberance, and which is designated as the “head”, tells you immediately, at first glance, about the existence of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE”: At first glance, you “see” that this organ, which is designated as the “head”, is located at the top, above the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and you also “see” that it has: two eyes, two nostrils, two ears and a mouth. The fact that it is located at the top, above the rest of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, tells you that the “written message” that is represented by the “head” is about “HE WHO IS ABOVE”; that is to say, about “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. The two eyes, two nostrils, and one mouth tell you about “THE DIVINE FORCE”, adding the two ears to this, tell you about “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. It is a living “written message” about the key aspect that “HE, WHO IS ‘PERFECT’” has consolidated in HIMSELF and presented directly to anyone who “sees” you in front. Just like the title of a work is the first element, which must be seen and which, through metadata, highlights the content of the work. The “living message” presented at first glance by the “head” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” reads: “... This chapter of the ‘DISCOURSE’ of ‘THE DIVINE’, IHVH, our FATHER, is about that, which is prominent in ‘HE, WHO IS ‘PERFECT’” ...”. That, which is prominent and which “HE, WHO IS ‘PERFECT’” has consolidated in HIMSELF, and which has been displayed by manifestation of metaphors on the “head” in the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, is “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”. Do you get the point? It is just as when a keen observer will read the “nonverbal communication”⁷⁹⁸ signals — emotional expressions, facial expressions, gestures, paralinguistics (it includes factors such as tone of voice, loudness, inflection, and pitch), or body language and posture, proxemics, eye

gaze (or lack thereof), haptics, appearances, artifacts — in context and which are manifested on the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” or around it by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creature” wearing it. Among other things, such were also the “living messages”, which “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” wrote on those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in the first chapter of the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, from the perspective of the manifestation by metaphors of the “‘SPIRIT’ Divine State”, during the “First Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. As we have indicated already, “THE DIVINE FORCE” had sowed and deployed abundantly such “KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” like a great LIGHT inside of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and throughout those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. NONE of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had succeeded in reading those “living messages”, written on them. They are all blinded by their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”. Exercise and you will understand this second chapter of the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and which you are. It is the path to the perfection of discernment.

Once the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” was activated and has covered this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, with a radiation similar to that of “THE SHEKINAH” and indicating the presence of a unique expression of “THE UNION” in this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “ADAM” opened his eyes, and beheld the Archangel MICHAEL and the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” all around.

As we have already indicated, when the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model was created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, as an expression of the external structure of a metaphor of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM”, it did not have the same freshness and the same brightness than those of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” which is within “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”.

It is so that, as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed it, the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model which was created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, had withered and “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, inside of this “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, had fallen asleep in the oblivion (or the ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which that “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” covers.

Similarly, when the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model was created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, as an expression of the external structure of a metaphor of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM”, it did not have the same freshness and the same brightness than those of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” which is within “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”.

It is so that, as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed it, and as it will be the case for all the living creatures that will come into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model which has been created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, has withered and “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, inside of this “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, has fallen in the oblivion (or the ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which that “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” covers.

It is so that, the living creatures that come into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” are called upon to grow in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and it is “THE SPECIFIC SPIRITUAL FORCE OF LIFE” who will work in “PURITY”, “HOLINESS” and “RIGHTEOUSNESS” (that is, according to the elements of “THE REASON”) in all creatures that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed, to provide illumination, “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; SHE is the whole existing in every “PURE” creature.

It is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who will provide the temperature and the enlightenment intensity, that is, the illumination — “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined — and rouse “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, inside of this “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, out of the oblivion (or ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which that “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” covers.

Although the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that has been produced corresponded to that, which will acquire the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when they approach the end of physical adolescence, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” covers, was not yet at the threshold of the stage of the “spiritual awakening”; that is, from the spiritual perspective, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was similar to a newborn that is perceived in the hours which come just after childbirth.

Having not grown in them “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” from which they would have understood that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has established “THE ABSOLUTE FRAME OF REFERENCE” defined by “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE”, none of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had understood the teaching that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested through this production into existence of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

The Archangel MICHAEL believed that it was himself who had achieved this production, not knowing his own root and the place where he had sprouted, having also not understood that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted them the particular task, to each of them, to choose a “Character” for oneself, so that each of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” can reflect on itself, describing through the chosen “Character”, its own vision of existence and also its own vision of “THE DIVINE”.

All the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, without exception, including the Archangel MICHAEL:

- Have not developed their knowledge on the nature of “THE DIVINE” and in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that HE has consolidated in Himself;
- Were unaware of the existence of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and of its components that are invisible to their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure” and is located inside of their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”;
- Have not understood the difference between the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State” and the “EPHEMERAL GLOW ‘CELESTIAL’” that covered all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to the point of doubting the existence of this “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, and which is the child of the “‘GOD’ Divine State”;

Then, how could the Archangel MICHAEL have created the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model?

The task that was assigned to him was to choose for himself a unique external morphology, which will be applied on the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (which itself is a model conceived and developed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”) of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” (which is also a model conceived and developed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”), resulting as such in the shape of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, and with which he, the Archangel MICHAEL, will identify himself by manifestation of the metaphor in the new “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”. Furthermore, in achieving that task, he was guided by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, through the process of education through enlightenment, which we have described already, and through which SHE used to fulfil all their “Wishes”, their “Desires”, without him been aware of it. Has it not been so, then his chosen “Character” would have been that imperfect “two faces” illusion on one head and with eyes lighting up like a fire, and which he had produced in himself as being a representation of that “LIGHT” which is the child of the “‘GOD’ Divine State”, just like the seven-heads “Character” that had produced his then deputy, the one who has self-proclaimed himself to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. Thus, the Archangel MICHAEL kept thinking that it was him who was achieving those tasks, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” was actually performing.

It is so that, all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, will also believe that it is the Archangel MICHAEL, who has created the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. And the “ADONA’IM” as to them, they were waiting to see the “DEATH” of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that for them had already been designated as being a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”.

Just as the Archangel MICHAEL had named himself “god” over the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and had explained to them that he was their father and that there was no other “god” besides him, and had thus demonstrated his lack of knowledge towards his own origin and the lack of knowledge about the nature of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” and in front of which he came to receive from “THE DIVINE FORCE” the instructions of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, it is so that once again, the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” will speak from inside in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the Archangel MICHAEL.

From that moment when “ADAM” opened his eyes, and beheld the Archangel MICHAEL and the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” all around, the “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and that the “ADONA’IM” had matured in them, will pass to the second step.

The first step was crowned by the “BETRAYAL” of the “ADONA’IM” towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and by which the “ADONA’IM” had intentionally pulled, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

The second step of this “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, will aim to conceal the “BETRAYAL” of the “ADONA’IM” towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and divert this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and consequently divert all his descendants, from “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

It is so that, once “ADAM” opened his eyes, and beheld the Archangel MICHAEL and the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” all around, then, he spoke to them in their own “‘CELESTIAL’ Language”; and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were all astonished.

Not having knowledge of the existence of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, nor the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model from which they had all been “spoken” into existence in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” astonished had no knowledge of the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

“THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model with elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” which are in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and HE has endowed “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is covered by the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model with elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON”.

It is from the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” and by the “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will communicate in “THE SILENCE”, through the “telepathic wavelength”, with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

It is the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” which allow making manifest, to “give body” through “THE WORD” which resides in “THE SILENCE”, and to produce audible “SOUNDS” outside of the “SILENCE”.

It is so that, “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were called to understand the need to complete “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” that they had all been endowed with, in order to get the elements of answers to their quest to seek to know “THE ONE” from whom they originate and who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”.

It is so that, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have expressed great astonishment to see the sculpture of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” talk to them in their own “‘CELESTIAL’ Language”.

“ADAM” also spoke to the Archangel MICHAEL, then, this last, taking for him the honours of the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had accomplished, will present himself to “ADAM”, as his creator and then, telling him:

All that you see is yours, “ADAM”. You and your descendants⁷⁹⁹ will fill the earth, and subdue it.

⁷⁹⁹ Before the creation of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, the Archangel MICHAEL had already concluded the “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL, and through which AZAZEL was given as new home, this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” has now been created into existence. All the “ADONA’IM” knew about that “HUBRIS COVENANT”. He had honoured that “HUBRIS COVENANT” and betrayed “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER”. Now, he tells “ADAM” that “All that you see is yours”. What was this all about? This was about the second step of his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” being set in motion, in order to conceal their “HUBRIS COVENANT”.

You will have authority over the living creatures in “THE WATERS”, the living creatures in “THE AIRS”, and all that moves over the surface of this world.⁸⁰⁰

From the teachings that they had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE” during the design of the morphological particulars of this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” had understood that the basic inheritance qualities legacy of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be transmitted from offspring in descent through the recursive transformations, without any interference with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

It is so that, in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and taking themselves to be “gods”, by using the knowledge that they had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, these elders of the creation will decide otherwise.

In their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”, they planned the destruction of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective and also that of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective, and through these recursive transformations, it is the destruction of mankind that will ensue.

The seed of “DEATH” which is the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and that the elders of the creation will sow in the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective and also in the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective, will spread through these recursive transformations.

It is so that, the elders of the creation had planned to maintain forever that seed of “DEATH” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

⁸⁰⁰ That was thus his view of the existence, how he perceived himself to be in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and amongst the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and he transferred unconsciously his view of the existence, on to his chosen “Character”. This is part of the narrative value carried by the “Character” that he has chosen.

This is also the deceptive narrative that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will propagate throughout all descendants of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and what you have recorded in the writings that humans possess, saying in the genesis:

And God said: Let us make mankind in our image, in our likeness, so that they may rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky, over the livestock and all the wild animals, and over all the creatures that move along the ground.

...

God blessed them and said to them, "Be fruitful and increase in number; fill the earth and subdue it. Rule over the fish in the sea and the birds in the sky and over every living creature that moves on the ground."

... And there was evening, and there was morning—the sixth day.

...

All these "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" knew very well the main purpose for which the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" was created into existence and which is:

He, the Archangel MICHAEL knew very well that the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" in the quality of a living reproduction (replication) of "THE SHEKINAH" — "THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE 'NON DIVINE'" — has authority over him and over all "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creatures". In their logic distorted by the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH", the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" was to put him, the Archangel MICHAEL, "out of business" and he chose to cheat and deceive humanity. All these "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" without exception, from both sides of their ongoing "CELESTIAL WAR", have signed in and "toed the line" to deceive humanity. None of them stood up and asked: "Why are we planning to do such evil things against our neighbour?" As we move forward in the text, we will reveal all those acts concerning these wolfs in sheep's clothing. What has been decreed by FATHER, will be accomplished!

Why is the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" and its descendants to "rule" over the "recordings" and "books" of the living and interactive library that was produced by "THE DIVINE FORCE" and for the purposes of the education of this "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" and of all its descendants, instead of performing the main purpose for which the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creature" was created into existence?

This notion of authority is what kept these "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" at the top of their perch of the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH", to the detriment of "PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF 'THE DIVINE'". And unconsciously, he was revealing his vision of existence, and his true intentions towards the "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' Creatures".

As we have already indicated, the attributes of that information which is kept in "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" in the "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" Body" of any "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creature", whomever it is, are contained and transported in the "unique words", and their tones, of the "Specific 'SPIRIT' Language", and which are emitted into existence by that "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creature".

Behold, I have given you every herb bearing seed, that is upon the face of all the earth, and every tree bearing fruits; and it will be your food.⁸⁰¹ So it is also with every living creature in “THE AIRS”, Thus, unconsciously, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will reveal all their misdeeds. Be only “PURE” and walk with “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and when such a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” will come before you, you will read all that is contained in him, just like an open book.

⁸⁰¹ He was thus taking the honors of all the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had accomplished, having not been able to know “THE DIVINE FORCE” through the education that SHE provided them through the process of education through enlightenment, and thus he demonstrated that he had understood nothing of all the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had deployed in front of all “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, on the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. He had no knowledge of the existence of his own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, hence he had no knowledge of its functioning, and consequently he had no knowledge of the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. The real food for the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is that which makes the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” grow, and such food is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who provides it.

He had no knowledge and he has no knowledge about the living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” wrote in “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. He had no knowledge about the work that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has accomplished with the achievement of the previous decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”; all the information (including the information stored in the DNAs and the signature of IHVH inside each of the several trillion cells) that SHE has written in the countless assembled structures of “created energy” — including: the manifestations of the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model (“THE FLORA” in all its magnificence vegetal) as well as the manifestations of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model (“THE FAUNA”) — that SHE has produced into existence with the achievement of those previous decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

But, he presented himself (and also in these days of today, he present himself) as the one who has produced all those things (including the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”) into existence and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” believe that. NONE of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew that the signature of “THE TRUE OWNER” of all what “THE DIVINE FORCE” has produced into existence inside this attribute “NON DIVINE”, has been written several trillion times inside each of those things.

and all that moves over the surface of this world, to them also have I given the plant life for food.⁸⁰²

...”

All this speech was dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and for a specific purpose: turn this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” towards the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and so before that it enters the stage of “spiritual awakening”, keep it away from the origin which is his; that is, keep it away of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — from which the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” as “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model was produced into existence. Moreover, the Archangel MICHAEL did not know that unconsciously, through this speech, he was revealing his vision of existence; that vision of existence that did not appear in the “Character” that he chose, but which is part of the narrative value carried by the “Character” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” has chosen.

The Archangel MICHAEL, like the others “ADONA’IM”, knew very well the main purpose for which the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was created into existence, that is:

“CARRY THE PRESENCE OF ‘THE SHEKINAH’ — THE PURE LIGHT OF ‘THE ALTAR OF THE DIVINE’ WHICH IS INSIDE ‘THE SHEKINAH’, AND WHICH IS SOURCE OF LIFE PURE AND HOLY — IN VERY REMOTE PLACES FROM ‘THE SHEKINAH’”.

It is to prevent the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” from fulfilling this goal, that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have triggered this “CELESTIAL WAR”.

The first words of the Archangel MICHAEL, addressed to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, are carriers of his own intentions towards this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all his descendants; these ⁸⁰² He thus demonstrated that he did not know why these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” were produced in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; thus he did not know why the task of choosing a “Character” for oneself had been entrusted to them. He further demonstrated that he is not the creator of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

intentions that he had developed at “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in his “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and had kept hidden until now: divert the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” as well as all its descendants of their main purpose. For, if these “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” came to understand who they are, why they were created into existence, and to realize their “PLENITUDE”, then, in the twisted logic of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, these “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” will be placed “above” all “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including above himself, and all shall then receive the instructions of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, from of these “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”. It is for this that the one who himself self-proclaimed to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, had said openly and aloud, what all the others “ADONA’IM” hid in them and have been quietly thinking, saying:

“... ”

Shall I tell you what I know? These “humans” that He proposes to create — we are to be their servants!

I have learned the Elohim’s purpose for these angels of water and dirt. It is they, and not we, He proposes to make the heirs of all that is.

I for one will never bow to serve a physical being!

“... ”

For these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, no longer able to climb down of the perch of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, it was imperative to prevent as soon as possible that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” awaken spiritually and becomes aware of its true status, who he is, and reaches its “PLENITUDE”, since the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” has now been produced into existence.

Those who hid their intentions in relation to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, were now using their malicious intent and deceit, to realize the continuation of their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” in relation to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Why is it that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” should “subjugate” — submit, enslave, place under his dominion, place under his will — what has been created into existence for his upbringing? Every atom of this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” was created for the education of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, just as it had been of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” for the education of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; Every “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” of the flora, as well as every “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” of the fauna, was produced in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” for a specific purpose: the education of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” through discernment of the celestial truths found in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” at the origin of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” considered; these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, which are truly images in characters of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, are the “recordings” and “books” of the living and interactive library that was produced by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and for the purposes of the education of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and of all its descendants.

It is so that, from his first words addressed to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the Archangel MICHAEL was already in the process of putting into motion the sequel of his own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” with regard to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and of all his descendants.

Seeing this, then, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has invited the Archangel MICHAEL to return to the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” to resume his function in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”, so that be completed the seventh decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” which had been emitted for the creation of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL returned to the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” with the majority of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, leaving a minority alongside of “ADAM” and in the shadow of the filth and of the mark of “DEATH” which were already present and spread already in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” from the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and had been immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Back in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, the remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” went back to work on the reconstruction of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” which had been destroyed, by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Those remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” completed the work on the reconstruction of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” just before the end of this sixth day.

It is then, that, “THE DIVINE FORCE” who, during all this time and even while SHE was achieving the previous decrees, protected at the same time always “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” since that “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” had exploded in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” has once again return to work; this time, inside of that, which had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” shook the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, so as to separate and to release this “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” which had been constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, itself constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which had flowed through it in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Once these “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” that are also lighter than the “Specific Atomic ‘CELESTIAL’ Substances”, were instantly detached of this “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” with a rumble, then, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has gathered them all together towards the top of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” in a shiny layer of “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and with a luminous radiation identical to the one which is emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”.

Subsequently, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has poured all that “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” again inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and covering “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’”, and SHE has rebuilt the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRITUAL’ Envelope” and the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH”.

None of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining had seen “THE DIVINE FORCE”, or recognize that it was HER who had worked so.

In the “Plane Below”, in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, just as the living “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had created during the two previous days, the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” had manifested its “NEED” (or the “DEFICIT”) of “‘EARTHLY’ specific supply of subsistence”: he was “HUNGRY”, and it also fed on “fruits” produced by the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” were feeding themselves.

The “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” was burdened, and all that it contains, including the new “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that had been created on this this Sixth Day, as well as all his “future” progeny, will be contaminated and destroyed by the filth that had been intentionally pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

Indeed, as we have already shown, and it is important to always remind it so that you come to understand why this world in which live the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” is ill and in agony, from the perspective of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” which had been produced into existence through the emission of “THE WORD OF THE DIVINE” the previous days, as well as this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” which was carved into existence in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” in this seventh decree of the implementation of the

From the immersion in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, both the following were contaminated and turned in the state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, both:

- It is so that, from the perspective of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, it was just a matter of time before that the intensity of the state of “CHAOS” of the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, be made manifest on scales larger than that of the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, and both in all these living “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had created during the previous two days, and in this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all his offspring in this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE “SECOND PHASE” OF THE HOLY PROJECT — THE SEVENTH DECREE

It is so that, this Sixth Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” will also come to an end.

EXTENDED ANNOTATION ON THE USE OF HEXAGONAL FORMS

Why polygons or hexagons, rather than squares or even triangles, you will ask? As you would know already, it is because these forms and especially the use of regular hexagonal forms provide the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter.

In a two dimensional Euclidean space, regular hexagonal forms are geometrical projections of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, one “Generative Divine Particle” and six “Formative Divine Particles”, in the form of a six-sided polygon or 6-gon. It is a closed plane figure with six edges and six vertices (six angular points) around a center point. It is a convex figure with sides of the same length, and internal angles of 120 degrees. It has six rotational symmetries and six reflection symmetries, making up the dihedral group D₆; that is to say, the group of symmetries of the regular hexagon, which includes rotations and reflections.

The total of the internal angles of any simple (non-self-intersecting) hexagon is 720°. All six exterior angles are equal and measuring 60 degrees each. A regular hexagon is defined as a hexagon that is both equilateral and equiangular. It is bicentric, meaning that it is both cyclic (has a circumscribed circle) and tangential (has an inscribed circle). All internal angles are 120 degrees. A regular hexagon has six rotational symmetries (rotational symmetry of order six) and six reflection symmetries (six lines of symmetry), making up the dihedral group D_6 . The longest diagonals of a regular hexagon, connecting diametrically opposite vertices, are twice the length of one side. From this, it can be seen that a triangle with a vertex at the center of the regular hexagon and sharing one side with the hexagon is equilateral, and that the regular hexagon can be partitioned into six equilateral triangles. There are three dihedral subgroups, which are defined through the first, the second and the third angular points, and four cyclic subgroups, which are defined through the first, the second, the third, and the sixth angular points. These symmetries express nine distinct symmetries (through nine diagonals) of a regular hexagon.

The properties of hexagons are numerous and interesting. At first glance, several facts about them, which are familiar to you, include the following:

- Regular hexagons are one of only three regular polygons to tessellate the Euclidean plane (along with squares and triangles).
- The hexagonal tessellation is combinatorially identical to the close packing of circles on a plane.
- Hexagons are the only regular polygons that can be subdivided into another regular polygon.
- In a related fact, regular hexagons are the unique regular polygon such that the distance between the center and each vertex is equal to the length of each side (sharing this property with the cuboctahedron in a 3 dimensional space).
- Regular hexagons are the first polygons — when ascending by number of sides — that do not form the faces of a regular convex polyhedron in Euclidean space. The three polygons with fewer sides compose the surfaces of the five platonic solids, but no polygon with six or more sides can be employed for this purpose. A consequence of this is that no regular polytope, in any dimension, has hexagonal faces — though many have hexagon-like or hexagonally-symmetric vertices or other elements.
- Regular hexagons are third-order permutohedra, meaning each vertex of a hexagon can be described with Cartesian coordinates using one of six permutations of the numbers 1, 2, and 3. Such a hexagon would lie on a plane consisting of all points with coordinates that add up to 6, and would bisect a cube of unit length 2 between coordinates 1 and 3.

Regular hexagons provide the best way to divide a surface into regions of equal area with the least total perimeter. Indeed, Regular hexagons can be tessellated in a regular pattern on a flat two-dimensional plane. That is to say, a regular hexagon can be bordered by six other regular hexagons, which can themselves be bordered by six regular hexagons (including each other), and so on, indefinitely in any direction, with no empty space left over. Note that although there are numbers of potential tilings consisting of two or more types of polygons, only hexagons, squares, and triangles can form such regular tilings by themselves. Likewise, in three dimensions, among uniform polyhedra, only the six-sided cube and the hexagonally-analogous truncated octahedron can form space-filling tessellations by themselves.

The regular hexagon is the highest-sided tessellable regular polygon. This will make it uniquely important in a variety of fields, since it has the advantage of spacing out each constituent hexagon more or less evenly from its neighbors. That is, any given point inside a hexagon (whether in a tiling of hexagons or not) is closer to the center of that hexagon than any given point in an equal-area square or triangle would be.

Since squares and triangles have more acute angles, points near their corners are further away from points elsewhere in their area than they would be at similar locations in a hexagon. Now, the same would be true for any higher-sided polygon as well—the ideal efficiency for enclosure of a given area being, ultimately, a circle. But again, hexagons have the tessellation advantage. Thus, for any task that requires both a regular grid of cells or elements, and the efficient enclosure of the area of that cell, a hexagonal tessellation is the logical and necessary choice.

Space-efficiency is not the only benefit of using regular hexagons. Another very interesting property of hexagonal tessellation or hexagonal lattices is its compressive and tensile strength and efficiency when compared to other tessellatory options. If we consider an abstract physical “structure” formed of the line segments between vertices of a regular polygonal tessellation, it is demonstrated that such a structure formed into a hexagonal lattice will provide the ideal blend of efficiency and strength over similar regular polygonal structures. Stacked together, regular hexagons fill spans in an offset arrangement with six short walls around each “tube”, giving high compression strength to the resulting structures. The regular hexagon is the base shape for a matrix that minimized the used of construction material while at the same time maximizing the strength and reducing the weight of the final product.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” has incorporated the regular hexagon lattice structure into the properties of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”. Many “Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” are represented in their skeletal structure by hexagonal shapes due to their covalent bonds. The application of the concept of the “movement”, considered in its manifestations under all its forms and all scales, and the state of equilibrium expected from the “movement”, to the “Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of a delimited part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, will converge to a regular hexagon form – a geometrical projections of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, one “Generative Divine Particle” and six “Formative Divine Particles”, in the form of a six-sided polygon or 6-gon – energy structure associated with that delimited part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, with increasing speed of the considered “movement”. The understanding of such convergence properties from new “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substances” put at their disposal by “THE DIVINE FORCE” Herself, was part of the purposes of those “specific tasks”, which were assigned to some of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and in relation with the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. From such converged regular hexagon form energy structures, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were called to discern that, which belongs to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

To understand such things, from the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the take a look at the tiny droplets of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”-water, which are frozen in midair and which are designated as snowflake in their simplest form.

Snowflakes come in different shapes and sizes, but one of the most predominant shape is the hexagon. The reason for the shape is the orientation of water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” themselves. Water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” is composed of two hydrogens-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” and one oxygen-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”. Water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” change orientation depending upon the temperature. This is the reason why they can exist in three forms as water, ice, and steam. When a water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” undergoes a phase change to ice, two water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” come together to form a hexagon. Since there are an enormous amount of “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” present, the continuous chains of water-“Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” will form a large hexagon. This same convergence property also applies to other “Specific Molecular ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” has also applied the regular hexagon form on the manifestations of the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” of “THE FLORA”, due to its simplicity, strength, and durability. All vascular manifestations of the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” maintain a water-transporting tissue structure designated as “xylem”. This tissue structure is designed to move water and dissolved nutrients upwards from the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” roots to the leaves where they will be used in the process of photosynthesis to build the glucose molecule, and also helps to form the woody element in the stem. Water from the soil and carbon dioxide from the atmosphere combine to build plant sugars in a process known as carbon fixation.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” has also incorporated the regular hexagon lattice structure into many tissue structures of manifestations of the different “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garments” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” of “THE FAUNA”. The hexagonal matrix of tissue structures provides strength but also gives those tissue structures a lightweight quality. This enhances mobility without creating undue stress on skeletal muscle groups.

Such observations MUST lead you to reflect on the vast amount of work that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “THE DIVINE FORCE” have deployed in order to bring you forth into existence. You must also reflect on the vast amount of learning material that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has embedded in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and for your education.

Take a look at the work accomplished by a “bee” in the production of “honey” and understand, through that, what “THE DIVINE FORCE” has accomplished in this process of “sewing” the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you wear, into existence, as integral and delineated part of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which you live currently.

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE “SECOND PHASE” OF THE HOLY PROJECT – THE SEVENTH DECREE

EXCERPT FROM THE CONVERSATION OF JULY 08,
2006, ARISTIDE WITH THE ARCHANGEL MICHAEL CONCERNING THE FIRST “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”.

At the time of this conversation, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, had not yet awaken in the Tree that interprets and translates, the details of what had happen in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, although HE had already placed the knowledge of those events, in this Tree which interprets and translates the work accomplished by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

“..

Aristide:

Can you tell me something concerning the first creature that was called “ADAM”, if it is possible?

Archangel MICHAEL:

“ADAM” is the first creature that has been created on Earth. He was created as an adult; barely seventeen, eighteen years.

He served THE ETERNAL his GOD and he had the possibility to come to us. Without the wings, he was moving; until that he met the enemy⁸⁰³, because until then, he had been protected by THE ETERNAL⁸⁰⁴.

But by curiosity, he wanted to learn more about your world and not ours.⁸⁰⁵ If he had asked questions about our world, it would have been different, but he was much more interested in the world in which he was created.⁸⁰⁶

⁸⁰³ "... the enemy ..." refers to the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH" that the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" have grown in their "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' Body" and which is born from the absence of "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE".

⁸⁰⁴ To lead to understand that "THE DIVINE FORCE" protected "ADAM" as long as he was "PURE".

⁸⁰⁵ Even the Archangel MICHAEL knew not and had now understood that it was for the purpose to rectify the deficiency of "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE" that had taken place in "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" both in his "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' Body" and in that of all the others "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures", that the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" has been created into existence.

As "THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER" had designed and established it, it is in the "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Substance" constituent of the first "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Habitation Domain" that the dwelling place of the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" has been established.

For the purpose that this "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" can grow in "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE", then, "THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER" has also designed and established a true living library and that "THE DIVINE FORCE" created into existence in this "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Substance".

In this true living library, the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" had themselves placed their self-portraits, and they didn't know that as such they had put at the disposal of their following, who is the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature", the celestial truths which are in their "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' Body" as "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creature" at the origin of their own "Characters" that "THE DIVINE FORCE" has reproduced on the considered "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'EARTHLY' Creatures" and created in the "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Substance" — the dwelling place of the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature".

⁸⁰⁶ Every atom of this "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Substance" constituent of the first "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Habitation Domain", to which was added a living and interactive library, were produced by "THE DIVINE FORCE" and for the purposes of education of "ADAM" as well as of all its descendants. Why would "ADAM" not be interested in the world in which he was created? The truth is that, all these

*He was also deceived by the enemy.⁸⁰⁷ I think that for humans, he was a good person, but for us others, he was a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”.*⁸⁰⁸

“SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their thirst for honors, taking themselves for “gods” and in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, did not even understand why “ADAM” was created into existence. Even the tasks that were entrusted to them, they did not understand why.

⁸⁰⁷ That is what these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have always told human creatures, since the first days after that they had destroyed “ADAM”, and in order to deflect questions about themselves deceiving “ADAM”. And, human creatures having no knowledge of the disastrous events that took place in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and from which their fate had been sealed, will swallow these statements as such, without asking questions, recording them in their history and transmitting them from generations to generations, as being sacred and not to be questioned. But, we will come to that deception in a following chapter, and remove all those masks of convenience (masks of sanity).

⁸⁰⁸ There you have it, his own confession coming out of his own “mouth”. He is not speaking only about those “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, but by “for us others” he is referring to all the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including their fallen nemesis who are locked underground in “THE DEPTHS OF THE WATERS” (inside in this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which you human creatures are living); for, they had made that decision before the actual creation into existence of the “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and in those days right after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they came to understand that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”, and they “lost their mind”, in the sense that, they became insane, mentally unsound, and extremely foolish. They had declared their neighbour, the new creature, right away to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, and they have subsequently condemned him to be erased from existence (to be put to “DEATH”). Remember that conversation between the Archangel MICHAEL and the Archangel ZA’AFIEL, extracted from the archives on the unfolding of the open conflict in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in which he had said:

I cannot explain it too directly to you at this time, for the Host will not be able to fully understand it until they see Sin demonstrated.

...”

At that time, back then, the “new creature” (the “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature), which he, the Archangel MICHAEL, had already declared to be a “MISTAKE OF THE

*It was what had to happen, what had been written.*⁸⁰⁹

CREATION”, and cascaded his decision down to the “ADONA’IM”, who in their turn had cascaded it down to the archangels, etc..., had not even been produced into existence.

“...I think that for humans, he was a good person, but for us others, he was a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”...” is an indication of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” among the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”. They do not have any clue about the “SCIENCE” that is behind the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and less behind themselves. They claim to be the “gods” who have created the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, yet, not even knowing the meaning of the word “GOD”, in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that they have grown in their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, they fight between themselves to take possession of the portion of those elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that have been attributed to “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. What kind of “LIGHT”, product of the attribute “GOD” that they claim to be instantiations, do they have in them to the point of having declared their neighbor to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, to have subsequently condemned him to be erased from existence (to be put to “DEATH”) and to tear each other apart in order to take possession of the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that have been attributed to their neighbour? The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” do not acknowledge that they are the root cause at the origin of the disaster in which the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” has been plunged into. Soon, very soon, things will change, and they will be placed in front of their own mirror.

⁸⁰⁹ It is for the purpose to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and conceal the fact that they are the ones who had decided to suppress that, which they had called a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, that had received the new unique expression of “THE UNION”, which represented to them a threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” say such things, not taking their responsibilities, but pinning the consequence of their actions on “THE DIVINE”.

It is roughly that, the enemy has destroyed the most part of the things that THE FATHER has created.⁸¹⁰

⁸¹⁰ He is speaking about his own crime, which he has perpetrated, he is speaking about what he himself has destroyed of what “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, has produced into existence in this attribute “NON DIVINE” and as regards to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. He will not tell you directly that on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, he is the one who has “BETRAYED” “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and he has derailed the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, sending it into a quagmire. That is how these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have kept misleading human creatures, who did not know what or who that “ennemy” is. They always proceed on the assumption that human creatures are asleep in the bed of ignorance, not knowing about the iniquities that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have perpetrated before that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was produced into existence. As such, they will confess their own crimes in front of you and you will give them your blessings for those crimes that they have perpetrated, and when you eventually wake up from your sleep and sober up from that ignorance, it might be too late: you have approved those crimes and in so doing, turning yourself into their accomplice and furthering the destruction that they have started. They will not take the responsibility of their own actions; they will not acknowledge that it is them “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” with him himself, the Archangel MICHAEL at their helm, who have destroyed the work of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in order to preserve their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that they have grown and have consolidated in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”. They use words such as the “ennemy”, to generate ambiguities and keep you in the darkness about their own crimes and iniquities.

All those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” have sworn allegiance to their leader, the Archangel MICHAEL, to whom they all report to and take orders. Standing in their own “IMPURITIES” and “LIES”, it is so that they have set in place a vast system of imposture and deception, starting with the Archangel MICHAEL at their helm, with highly fortified walls of darkness, to purposefully keep the CREATION in obscurity, trying to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. They have been quite successful so far in transferring their deceptive narratives to human creatures and keeping them in obscurity.

Thanks to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, those walls of darkness have been toppled and the locks of the fortified gates of the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” covering these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have been broken, and their masks of convenience (masks of sanity) have been torn down. Stand in “PURITY” and talk to “THE DIVINE FORCE” and you will learn things concerning all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

Aristide:

(I am thinking to myself, saying: but ADAM did not ask to be created!⁸¹¹ and inside of myself, I began to be irritated, then, I talked openly and says) MICHAEL, why did you hurled Azazel and all his cronies in this earthly world?

Archangel MICHAEL:

It was the only habitable place outside the heavenly realm. You want to know why I did not destroyed him during the fight in the heavenly realm?

Aristide:

Because that you do not kill?

Archangel MICHAEL:

In part, Yes! ... but it was so that...

Aristide:

(Interrupting the Archangel MICHAEL, and spontaneously and my mouth opened and without thinking I said) Do not ⁸¹¹ Inside this attribute “NON DIVINE”, nothing is without cause! From the principle of causality: what is the preceding motive (in the temporal order of things) associated with the “raison d’être” of ADAM into existence and for him to be designated as a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”? Given that ADAM was an expression of “THE SHEKINAH”, and an expression of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, had “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER erred to the point of having consolidated a “MISTAKE” in HIMSELF? Why have these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” designated ADAM as a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, before that ADAM was even created into existence? (we have already gave the answer to that question) Why have they not designated as “MISTAKES OF THE CREATION”, all of their fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have sworn to destroy everything that belongs to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and who they have pulled out of the destruction in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and have immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”? We also have given already the answer to this question: their fellow fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were and have never been a threat to their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

*soak me into that story. That matter is between “THE DIVINE” and you, leave me out of it.*⁸¹²

...”

Whether it is the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” that live inside the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” in the “Plane Above”, or the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have been immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and locked underground in “THE DEPTHS OF THE WATERS” of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, they point the finger to the first manifestation into existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model and which was called “ADAM”, as a “scapegoat” to justify the presence of filth and the mark of “DEATH” in this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” do not acknowledge that it is because of their own ignorance, that they have destroyed the work accomplished by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. They never say: “You know, human, we have screwed up badly, beyond repair, ⁸¹² It is only few years later that I understood that it was “THE DIVINE FORCE” who had intervened and had thus spoken through me, pulling me out of a likely trap.

Such a situation also recurred, a few years later and this time against some of those who have been immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, and their leader was also there. At that moment, their leader, disguised in a human creature, told me:

“... If you want to build the Temple of your GOD then, you have to kneel in front of me! ...”

The crowd of people was waiting to see what would happen. I was in “THE PRAISE” and I did not answer, all who were disguised knew not that I could see them inside their disguise.

The minutes elapsed and another human creature with whom I came at that place said: “... What are you going to do? You should kneel if you want to proceed with the work ...”; he could not see the minefield in which we were standing.

Then, spontaneously and my mouth opened and I said to him:

“Have you lost your mind or what? I kneel before one BEING: “THE DIVINE” Himself and nobody else. Even if it would happen that CHRIST comes here in front of me and ask such thing, I will tell him to take a hike!”

On that, they stepped back and started to insult me, then, I left that place, and on the way, I understood what had happen.

and we take the responsibility for our disastrous actions and their consequences.”

For these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, whenever they are at fault, either they point the finger to the human creature (the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” or his following, the model of which we will describe in a following chapter) and often, since they chose from the very beginning to place the human under their yoke, they will also ask the victim human creature to apologize to them for their wrongdoing that they have perpetrated against the victim human creature, or when they have failed to blame the human, then they point the finger to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. They do not seem to realise that such behaviour speaks loudly about all what had taken place and hid in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, and became part of their “nature”.

In the same line of sayings of the kind “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...”, or even “... it is THE ETERNAL who wanted that it be so ...”, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will emit into existence another statement to justify the harm that they have caused to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and trying to justify the disaster in which they have plunged “THE HOLY PROJECT”. That deceit, which is an argument of “THE DARKNESS”, is expressed in the form: “... THE ETERNAL is a jealous GOD ...”

Those who issue such statements are not aware that where “JEALOUSY” is present, discord (lack of Unity) and the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” are also present; they never developed in them the knowledge of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, and therefore they never developed in them the knowledge of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, the Governing Law of the Behavior of any manifested product of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”. Those who have issued and who emit such declarations, such as “... THE ETERNAL is a jealous GOD ...”, have stood and they stand thus in “IMPURITY”, “LIES” and “DISGRACE”.

These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, self-declared “gods”, having no elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” in them, were thus revealing all what they have developed and hid in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, and now became part of their “nature”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, self-declared “gods”, had not understood that they were into existence attached in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, that they were thus prone to the laws which make the attribute “NON DIVINE” to be “NON DIVINE”, nor did they know the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

In “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE” in which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is, HE is always at the maximum of His particulars, HE has permanently and eternally all His intensity — (1) “GRACE”, and associated “PURITY”, and “TRUTH”, (2) “COMPREHENSION”, and associated “LIGHT”, and “LOVE”, as well as (3) “PERCEPTION”, and associated “SCIENCE”, and “MEMORY”, and (4) “INTELLIGENCE”, and associated “PERFECTION”, and “HARMONY”, all these attributes which HE has assigned to “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, “THE DIVINE ATOM”; the infinitely small, unbreakable and homogeneous, alive, and which constitutes, with other elements of the same type and with which it comes into combination, that, which is called: the “DIVINE SUBSTANCE” —, HE has permanently and eternally all His density, His “DIVINE WEALTH”, His UNITY — all His attributes are permanently and eternally present in Himself and are “ONE” which cannot be separated one attribute from another.

In that “SUPREME PLENITUDE”, the “Realm of the Divine ‘THOUGHTS’” is a whole, and is not interpreted, there are no residuals as it is the case with the “Realm of the Interpreted ‘THOUGHTS’” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established for the attribute “NON DIVINE” and of which portions are shared as domain of definition of the function “To ‘THINK’” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has implemented in the creatures that SHE has created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”. The “Realm of the Divine ‘THOUGHTS’” is “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, the conjoint of “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

“JEALOUSY” derives from the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, which derives from the residuals of “Interpreted THOUGHTS” and which are in fact alternatives to “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that is contained in the “Optimal Interpreted THOUGHTS”. In the absence of “PLENITUDE”, “JEALOUSY”, in all its forms, is defined as the desire for exclusive possession of the other; the envy, the spite that is experienced with regard to what other than oneself obtains or possesses; the very exclusive attachment that takes the shadow of any attachment of the other than oneself to a new object and its old attachments. It is manifested into existence by the feeling of fear of having to lose or share with others an advantage which one would like to keep exclusive property, etc... Where “JEALOUSY” is present, there too are “ANXIETY”, “ENVY”, “RIVALRY”, “HATRED”, “WICKEDNESS”, “SPITE”, “DOUBT”, etc..., all these emotions that are related to the “HUBRIS CONFLICT”.

“JEALOUSY” is thus a manifestation of the absence of “PLENITUDE”. By the inverse implication of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, it is thus that where there is “JEALOUSY”, there also are “IMPURITY”, “LIES” and “DISGRACE”.

The “jealous god” in the statements such as “... THE ETERNAL is a jealous GOD ...”, is the Archangel MICHAEL, self-declared “god”, not knowing the meaning of the unique word “GOD”. Through the “alter ego of the names”, these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will let the impression and indirectly imply that it is about “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER; but that is not correct.⁸¹³

“THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” without any interpretation. What “JEALOUSY” can exist of the part of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, towards metaphors of His own “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that HE has chosen to manifest into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” and with the proportionality factors which are of the order of ten billion? The fact of sharing the metaphors of His own “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” with the attribute “NON DIVINE” does not affect the qualities and values of His “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” as they are in “THE DIVINE DOMAIN”, that is, as they are in “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER: these metaphors remain “metaphors”. As we have indicated already, a metaphor is a figure of expression resulting from an analogical substitution and by which a conceptual entity is designated by means of a term which, in language, signifies another by virtue of an analogy between the two entities that are, as such, brought close together, although in reality they are distant from each other. The use of metaphor makes it possible to examine what is distant and inaccessible, and the metaphor is distinguished from the similarity or comparison by the fact that no formal element of comparison is present in the metaphor. Not one of these metaphors manifested in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, in whatever form whatsoever, not even the most phenomenal of these metaphors manifested, is suitable for “THE DIVINE” Himself as HE is, as HE exists. No “unique word”, no “unique attribute”, expressed in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, not even that “unique word” “THE DIVINE” that we use throughout this “BOOK”, is not enough

⁸¹³ They will let human creatures record it as such in the chronicles of their own history, which they have in their possession and which they call “Holy Scriptures”; and human creatures will feed on such “IMPURITIES” and “LIES”, and like cymbals that reverberate, they will pass them on to their offspring, carelessly, from generation to generations.

to describe or to qualify “HE WHO IS”; HE is truly the absolute “ONE”. As we have already indicated, the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” (that is, “THE REASON of the First Order”), which have been shared by manifestations of metaphors with the attribute “NON DIVINE” are not sufficient to describe the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ REASON” (that is, “THE REASON of the Second Order”), which have also been shared by manifestations of metaphors with the attribute “NON DIVINE”, and even by far much more less in order to describe the elements of “THE ‘DIVINE’ REASON” (that is, “THE REASON of the Seventh Order”), which are not and will not be shared with the attribute “NON DIVINE”.⁸¹⁴

Think for a moment: What “JEALOUSY” can exist of the part of a water fountain towards dry land? Would you, as human creature, be “JEALOUS” of the products of your own work?

“THE LIGHT” is eternal, IT has always existed at all times, IT has no beginning and IT has no end. It is from “THE LIGHT” and through “THE ECLIPSE” of “THE LIGHT” that “THE DARKNESS” (the opposite of “THE LIGHT”) was created so that “THE LIGHT” be revealed to any manifestation of metaphor that will be in “THE DARKNESS” and that any manifestation of metaphor that will be in “THE DARKNESS” can access its origin which is “THE LIGHT”. Why then, would “THE LIGHT” be “JEALOUS” of “THE DARKNESS”?

In Himself and by Himself, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is the whole of all His own “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

Just as the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, in whichever forms, do not exist in “THE DIVINE”, likewise, “JEALOUSY” which ensues from the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, in whichever forms, do not exist in “THE DIVINE” who is and remains in the “SUPREME ‘PURITY’”, “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE”.

And there is no “JEALOUSY” of the part of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, towards His creatures that have all been beforehand created by Him, and are all manifestations of Himself through the metaphors of His own “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that HE has placed in his creatures.

⁸¹⁴ From now on, if a creature (whether a celestial creature or a human creature) shows up before you and tells you statements like “... THE ETERNAL is a jealous GOD ...”, to keep you locked in ignorance and in “IMPURITY”, then do not hesitate to respond to such a creature and tell him to “take a hike”.

In the absence of “THE LIGHT OF THE DIVINE”, inside of the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil”, the darkness will prevail and those kinds of sayings, which ensue from the works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” among the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, will find place in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is thus also that through such sayings which ensue from the works of their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” through “alter ego of names”, will describe to “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” the disastrous events where in reality, the Archangel MICHAEL is the acting creature, and they will pin those events on “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

It is so that, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will pin on “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, the impurities which ensue as unfortunate consequences of such events, and will propagate them in “THE HOLY PROJECT”, in the purpose of trying to justify the disaster in which they have plunge “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

If you do not have “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” or do not know that “THE DIVINE” is the “SUPREME ‘PURITY’”, then, when the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will present their sayings which ensue from the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, you will give them a place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside you. It is so that, the seed of “DEATH” will begin to sprout in you, to the detriment of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”.

If however, “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside you is “HOLY” and listens to “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” coming from its conjoint which is “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside you, then, you will reject such sayings; because the mechanisms of protection that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established for the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” will be active, without that you are aware of it, in the face of the impure external signals carried by impure statements which will have been presented to you.

It is so that, you could find yourself in confrontation with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” who would have presented such statements to you. Regardless of the threats that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” will subsequently utter against you, regardless of the strength of that “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, let not your trust in “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” falter, not even by one iota.

Do not let such “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” impress or intimidate you, regardless of who it is. Know that “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” surpasses everything in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

As long as you have in you “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, then, no “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, whether the ones that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” or so those who are locked underground in “THE DEPTHS OF THE WATERS” of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, can touch one of your hair; as “THE DIVINE FORCE” protects what is HERS.

With some of the elders of the creation, who dwell in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, be restrained and cautious, because with them and in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” on your part, you will be walking at the edge of your own destruction, with one foot resting on your own grave and the other foot resting on a banana peel.

Keep absolute trust in one being: “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and that neither the “CHARGES”, which will fly from all sides against you, nor the slights, shake you; “THE DIVINE FORCE” keeps guard alongside that, which is “PURE”.

“THE TRUTH” is the expression of the products of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established it, and IT cannot be altered in its stability; regardless of the metaphors used to express it, “THE TRUTH” is unperturbed and without deceit.

What comes into existence through “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, is “THE TRUTH”, “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” expressed by “THE DIVINE FORCE” through manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, the products of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

What comes into existence through “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, is “THE LIGHT OF THE DIVINE” to be used in the purpose of taking out of oblivion, “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” contained in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, and so that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, be known of the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

“THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is the “SUPREME ‘PURITY’”, and of all that HE showed me through “THE DIVINE FORCE” and that “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” taught me, I have scrutinized at great length, as well as “THE HOLY PROJECT” as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, and I have not found any impurity in Him.

I have looked at the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, as well as the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” as they are in their current state, and I came to one conclusion:

ONLY ONE IS HOLY,
ONLY ONE IS PURE AND RIGHTEOUS, AND ONLY ONE IS TRUSTWORTHY:
“THE DIVINE”, IHVH, OUR FATHER

CHAPTER 173

THE DAY AFTER — AFTER THE ACHIEVEMENT OF THE SEVENTH DECREE OF THE IMPLEMENTATION OF THE “SECOND PHASE” OF THE HOLY PROJECT

What had remained of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” was gathered a seventh time and on the instructions of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the same time that the rays emitted by the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” — that is, the Solar star — arrived at the place where the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was asleep.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is an expression of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — which had been placed in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

It is so that, when the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” is manifested in the “HOMOGENEITY”, the “PURITY” and the “HOLINESS”, through the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE PRAISE’” now taking into account the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, it is then, all around the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will emit “THE PRAISE” — the “specific signals” requesting the sending of external supply of subsistence in order to remain into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” — using the “‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ CORD OF PRAISE”, and of which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew not the existence.

It is so that, this external supply of subsistence, which will allow these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to remain into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State”, will be provided to them by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” as an expression of “THE SHEKINAH” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

The “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will also emit “THE PRAISE”, not towards any “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” whosoever, but towards any expression of the metaphor of “THE ‘LIGHT←GOD’ EON” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, or directly towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, using the “‘LIGHT→GOD’ CORD OF PRAISE”.

It is as a consequence of the continuous execution of this “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE PRAISE’” that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” whose “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” is sufficiently in the “HOMOGENEITY”, the “PURITY” and the “HOLINESS”, will bear abundant “fruits” of “THE TREE OF LIFE” as “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has intended when HE had decided to share His great “DIVINE WEALTH” with the attribute “NON DIVINE”, from eternity, before that the attribute “NON DIVINE” was manifested into existence.

It is so that, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, so that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” bear abundant “fruits” of “THE TREE OF LIFE” as “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has intended when HE had decided to share His great “DIVINE WEALTH” with the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” had planned to lead the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to understand this, and to understand the importance of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” in all its forms.

It was also to lead them to understand the orders of the realisation of events in “THE ABSOLUTE FRAME OF REFERENCE” defined by “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE” — that is, to lead them to understand the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE CREATION’” — that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted the Archangel MICHAEL, as “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model, the task to choose for himself a “Character” and which will be used as “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” for the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

It was still to lead them to understand the orders of the realisation of events in “THE ABSOLUTE FRAME OF REFERENCE” defined by “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” in “THE DIVINE” — that is, to lead them to understand the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE CREATION’” — that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had given to the Archangel MICHAEL, and consequently to all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, and who will descend in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the instruction to celebrate from now on, each Seventh Day, “THE PRAISE” around and through the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

As we have already indicated in previous annotations, consider the illustration below and which you know already about. It is a gross sketch of the outside of “THE SHEKINAH” inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE”. Inside “THE HEAVENLY TABERNACLE” where “THE SHEKINAH” is placed, everything is very bright, very illuminated, and as such, the illustration below is approximative, yet sufficient to bring you to “get the picture”.

In this illustration, the illuminated portal represents the entry to “THE SHEKINAH”. Inside “THE SHEKINAH”, you have the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH". The "Specific Energy 'LIGHT' Substance" — the First Begotten of "THE DIVINE FORCE" — is behind the "Specific 'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Frontier" which is manifested inside "THE SHEKINAH" as an impenetrable wall of "PURE FIRE". All the figures around and outside of "THE SHEKINAH" would be the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures", in their true external appearances (which is not the winged human appearance that they take when they manifest in front of human creatures) and, when they gather every seven day to celebrate "THE PRAISE" and to receive each, seven times their daily quantity of raw "'SPIRIT' specific supply of subsistence" so that they can carry out the weekly tasks that will be entrusted to them.

In this illustration, those seven (7) lit flames and those calabashes in front of the illuminated portal are representation of the seven firsts foremost "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" of "THE CELESTIAL HOST", before the announcement of the "Second Phase" of the implementation of "THE HOLY PROJECT". After the "CELESTIAL WAR", only four amongst those seven will remain; these are the four winged creatures that are represented there in the middle of the artwork. They are: URIEL, represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the LION; RAPHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the BULL; MICHAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the human, and CAMAEL represented by the winged creature with the appearance of the EAGLE.

Observe attentively the illuminated portal and the manifestation of "PURE" "LIGHT" coming out of it; it is a representation of the First "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Bridge", seen from the outside. You, as human creature and through your "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body", are akin to that First "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Bridge" and NONE of the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" is. NONE of the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" has that "Specific Energy 'LIGHT' Substance", but you as human creature and through your "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" possess that "Specific Energy 'LIGHT' Substance" manifested in you. You, as human creature and through your "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body", are a living manifestation of that First "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Bridge"; you are a living manifestation of "THE SHEKINAH" — "THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE 'NON DIVINE'".

It is those "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" who are required to send "THE PRAISE" — "specific signals" requesting the sending of external supply of subsistence in order to remain into existence in the "'SPIRIT' Specific State" — using their "'SPIRIT→LIGHT' CORD OF PRAISE" and connecting to your "'LIGHT' Internal Binding Sites", which are inside you, human creature, as a living manifestation of that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” standing “PURITY”, NOT THE REVERSE. Without that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will not subsist. When they are outside of the “Plane Above” and for a longer period of time (at least a period of 30 days), they can only subsist through you, as human creatures, as a living manifestation of that First “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Bridge” and from which they can regenerate and receive their daily quantity of raw “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”.

As we have already indicated, when “THE DIVINE FORCE” had planned all this, it was for the purpose to rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and the sentence of annihilation of that “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” would be the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

In “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” knew not that SHE would be betrayed by these very “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that SHE had educated.

After the “BETRAYAL” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had undergone, HE decided nevertheless to continue the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. Knowing already that the worst was yet to come, as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” are all prone to the Governing Law of the Behavior and cannot escape it, and they were all standing in their own “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER will combat in “ABSOLUTE ‘PURITY’” for the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” so it will be the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and of the “nefarious and despicable shadow schemings” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”.

So far, you have understood that the ongoing COMBAT, which is led in “ABSOLUTE PURITY” by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER in order to remedy the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place and had remained seated in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, IS NOT the “CELESTIAL WAR” which is also ongoing in “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES” and “LIES” between the two rival factions of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. The ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”, is the “OPEN CONFLICT” between the two rival factions of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who are all swallowed up by the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and in their internal struggles, their thirst for POWER (also designated as the “AUTHORITY”), their low blows and underhanded tricks, their palace intrigues, etc..., you name a progeny of “IMPURITY” and “LIE” and you will find its origin amongst those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and in that “CELESTIAL WAR”.

It is so that, when the Archangel MICHAEL and several of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” on this Seventh Day, the day after the creation into existence of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, then, the Archangel MICHAEL will keep them abreast and ask them to celebrate “THE PRAISE” all around “ADAM”, just as they have always celebrated it all around “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.⁸¹⁵

For the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, to emit (or to celebrate) “THE PRAISE”, it is to emit the “specific signals” requesting the sending of external supply of subsistence in order to remain into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State”. Those “specific signals” are emitted towards the closest expression

⁸¹⁵ It is of this that spoke AZAZEL whose “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” was fractured, cracked and broken, and in a very advanced state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, when he began to utter insulting accusations against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and in front of a crowd of elders of the creation delighted to listen to the “IMPURE” products of the work accomplished by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of AZAZEL, saying that he will never bow in front of a physical creature, and illustrating the depths of absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in “THE CELESTIAL HOST” and its extreme upheaval.

Looking in retrospective, it would have been very interesting to see the behaviors and the expressions on the faces of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, if “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had given an instruction to “THE SHEKINAH” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, to stand up and walk around and among these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, as would do a human creature.

Read more, with explanations, in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the extent of the scourge of absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” within “THE CELESTIAL HOST” and its extreme upheaval.

into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” of a metaphor of “THE ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ EON”. In this case, “ADAM” was the closest expression into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” of a metaphor of “THE ‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ EON”, in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” which is far enough from “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

After billions of years that they had spent into existence in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, all these elders of the creation, in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, were in the confusion because they had not developed in them “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”. Were they going to perform their ceremony of pledging of oaths of allegiance, the work of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, towards “ADAM” as they do to the Archangel MICHAEL?

It is so that, without still understanding the profound meaning of this manifestation into existence of the first “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” through the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, and reluctantly, because the “ADONA’IM” had already declared this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, and thus reluctant to see their arguments of “THE DARKNESS” evaporate in front of the arguments of “THE LIGHT” manifested, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining who descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” in this Seventh Day, will celebrate “THE PRAISE” around “ADAM”, who was still covered by his “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” and with a luminous radiation similar to that of “THE SHEKINAH” and indicating the presence of a unique expression of “THE UNION” in this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. While celebrating “THE PRAISE”, they did not perform their ceremony of pledging of oaths of allegiance towards “ADAM” as they do to the Archangel MICHAEL.

As we have mentioned previously, although the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that has been produced corresponded to that, which will acquire the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” when they will approach the end of physical adolescence, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” covers, was not yet at the threshold of the stage of the “spiritual awakening”; that is, from the spiritual perspective, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was similar to a newborn that is perceived in the hours which come just after childbirth.

After having celebrated “THE PRAISE” around “ADAM”, while the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were still in the stage of “spiritual childhood” were in joy, and conversing in front of the scene, each in turn, with “ADAM” during the rest of this Seventh Day, for the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” on the other hand it was a deceptive appearance of joy; because behind the scene, confusing dreams in the middle of which they had found themselves since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, had become a reality: the hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, the object from which they indulge themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, had escape from their hands.

Still asleep on the bed of negligence of all “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested through the accomplishment of all these decrees of the implementation of this “Second Phase”, and ignoring (because not being aware of) the mercy that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER granted them after the “BETRAYAL” that they had perpetrated in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, the “ADONA’IM” will rush in the implementation of the second stage of their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”.⁸¹⁶

⁸¹⁶ A replica of this situation in which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” celebrated “THE PRAISE” around “ADAM”, will be produced into existence roughly seventy billion years later with the birth of CHRIST, as it is reported in the scriptures (Matthew 2:1-13):

Now after CHRIST was born in Bethlehem of Judea in the days of Herod the king, behold, wise men from the East came to Jerusalem, and asked:

“...

Where is he who has been born king of the Jews? For we saw his star when it rose and have come to worship him.

...”

When Herod the king heard this, he was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him.

He assembled all the chief priests and scribes of the people, he inquired of them where CHRIST was to be born.

“THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER already knew that HE was not at the end of surprises and that the worst was yet to come of the part of the “ADONA’IM”, as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” are all prone to the Governing

They told him, “In Bethlehem of Judea”, for so it is written by the prophet:

“...

And you, O Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, are by no means least among the rulers of Judah; for from you shall come a ruler who will shepherd my people Israel.

...”

Then, Herod summoned the wise men secretly and ascertained from them what time the star had appeared. And he sent them to Bethlehem, saying:

“...

Go and search diligently for the child, and when you have found him, bring me word, that I too may come and worship him.

...”

After listening to the king, they went on their way. And behold, the star that they had seen when it rose went before them until it came to rest over the place where the child was.

When they saw the star, they rejoiced exceedingly with great joy.

And going into the house, they saw the child with MARY his mother, and they fell down and worshiped him. Then, opening their treasures, they offered him gifts, gold and frankincense and myrrh.

And being warned in a dream not to return to Herod, they departed to their own country by another way.

Now when they had departed, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream and said:

“...

Stand up, take the child and his mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the child, to destroy him.

That angel, which “appeared to Joseph in a dream”, was the Archangel GABRIEL. And he had said to Joseph: “Stand up, take the child and his mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the child, to destroy him.” It is not that he could “see” the future, but it is that he knew very well what they, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM”, have done to “ADAM”, who was a “newborn”, and he had seen over and over again all the replicas of that situation repeated amongs human creatures. Thus, by inference, he understood with certainty what was about to unfold on the “new born” child CHRIST if no action is taken.

Law of the Behavior and cannot escape it, and they were all standing in their own “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”.

CHAPTER 174

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

“...

“PREMEDITATED” is said about that, which has been prepared with calculation, by mature reflection; that, which was done with premeditation. Premeditation is a deliberate intention, a conception put together to do something, to commit a culpable or tortious act, before it is done. It consists in the intention formed, before the action, to attack the person of a determined individual, or even of the one who will be found or encountered, even when this intention would be dependent on some circumstance or some condition. In common parlance, premeditation is the deliberate intention to commit an offense or a crime and constituting an aggravating circumstance in matters of homicide — that is to say, that, which serves to cause death, which denotes the intention to kill, which causes great suffering or serious harm —. Homicide is the act of killing one’s neighbour, whether intentional or not. Homicide, murder, committed with premeditation is designated as “assassination”, in terms of intentional assault and injuries. Whatever the reason, homicide is considered one of the most serious crimes that can be committed. Homicide offenses require “planning” as an essential element.

The perpetrator of a premeditated offense, who necessarily knows certain habits of his victim, has therefore planned the modus operandi of his offense before it is actually carried out. The perpetrator is then considered to be fully aware of his actions before the crime or misdemeanor was committed.

After having celebrated “THE PRAISE” around “ADAM” the previous day, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” once again had seen and discovered by themselves, felt with their own hands the truths that are into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” and which were made manifest in another existence, this time outside of the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State”, by the work that had been accomplished by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were still in the stage of “spiritual childhood” and who had talked with “ADAM” during the remaining of the previous day, were in joy, and they were once again provided in abundance from these teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested by accomplishing all the decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

The “ADONA’IM” who, since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, had found themselves in the middle of confusing dreams, have seen their nightmare become a reality: the hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, the object from which they indulge themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, had escape from their hands.

In addition, the instruction that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had given to the Archangel MICHAEL, and consequently to all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, and who will descend in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, to celebrate from now on each Seventh Day, “THE PRAISE” around and through the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, was the drop that overflowed the vase of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

It is so that, on this first day of the first week after the creation of “ADAM”, the “ADONA’IM” decided once again to take action to put an end to what they had declared to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” before that its capabilities develop fully and before that:

- The plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” germinates and develops inside the one whom they had declared to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”;
- The one whom they had declared to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” becomes aware of his own “PLENITUDE”⁸¹⁷ in his status (that of his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is a unique expression of “THE UNION”) as truly a “CHILD” of “THE DIVINE”;
- The one whom they had declared to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” produces his own progeny akin to him, and consequently akin to “THE SHEKINAH”.

It is so that, in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, still burdened by the impurities of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that had been immersed in it, and where the Archangel MICHAEL and the others “ADONA’IM” and the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” were present on this day, AZAZEL took contact with the Archangel MICHAEL, and ask to talk to him, as to remind him of the covenant they had secretly (at least they believed) entered into.

As we mentioned in a previous section, in the days that followed the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, the “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” had made its way to the point of been much more stated in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the Archangel MICHAEL, and he concluded the “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL.

⁸¹⁷ Later during the course of the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” will show a manifestation which is associated with the “PLENITUDE” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to EZEKIEL.

Read more in the section concerning the details of the annotation — Annotation on the manifestation of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER to EZECHIEL.

This “HUBRIS COVENANT” gave to AZAZEL possession of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had planned to create into existence the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

By that, the “HUBRIS COVENANT” intended to give AZAZEL control of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, long before that the first manifestation of the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was produced.

As for the Archangel MICHAEL, through this “HUBRIS COVENANT”, he would keep control of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and thereby, control of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”.

In the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and in front of the entirety of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, the Archangel MICHAEL wanted to “have the last say”, the strongest argument in the “CONTROVERSY” between him and AZAZEL, and therefore he also chose to demonstrate his understanding of the concept of “DEATH” on the new “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, long before that this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was created into existence in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

They have decided so, because in their logic distorted by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, the new creature would call into question and make obsolete their functions in the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS”.

It is so that, in response to the request of AZAZEL to talk with the Archangel MICHAEL, this last will agree to meet him, not in this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” where was their future victim — “ADAM” — which, as they had all noticed, although “ADAM” was not yet aware of his own “PLENITUDE” in his status (that of his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is a unique expression of “THE UNION”) as truly a “CHILD” of “THE DIVINE”, he had been created with high capacities of perception and understanding and could ask them for explanations if he would come to understand that he was destined to be sacrificed as a “scapegoat”⁸¹⁸, but to meet him where?

Not in a lost corner of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” where he had pulled them out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, but the Archangel MICHAEL chose to meet him inside of what had been restored to the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”; that is, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”.

As to indicate directly and openly to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, that they had not digested that “THE DIVINE” has chosen to manifest an expression of “THE UNION” — the manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” — on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and not on them as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”; that, the choice of “THE DIVINE”, who chooses to share HIS own “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, as HE sees appropriate to do, got stuck in their throats.

“THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER already knew that HE was not at the end of the surprises and that the drama would now “take body” in front of HIM.

Keep in mind the thread of the course of events and do not forget that, by the “BETRAYAL” that he has perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, the Archangel MICHAEL has already honoured his “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL and given this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains to AZAZEL.⁸¹⁹

⁸¹⁸ The Archangel MICHAEL will say in response to AZAZEL and in return by the one who brought the request:

We shall not speak of such things here on earth, but I will grant Satan access to “HEAVEN”, and there we may speak.

...”

Through the honouring of his “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL, he had already sealed the fate of “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and the destruction of “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is a foregone conclusion. Everything was played out in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. It was now time for the Archangel MICHAEL to cover up his crimes. Thus, this request of

As we have pointed out already, later, during the course of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and during the course of the “PROJECT OF THE REDEMPTION” for which “THE DIVINE FORCE” will create CHRIST into existence among human creatures, AZAZEL will reveal the object of this “HUBRIS COVENANT”, when through the communication by “VISIONS” in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”, he was attempting to bring down CHRIST, by saying (Matthew 4:8-9):

Again, AZAZEL took CHRIST to a very high mountain and showed him all the kingdoms of the world and their splendour [this is about the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains]. “All this I will give you,” he said, “if you will bow down and worship me.”

...”

“... All this ...” refers to his “HUBRIS COVENANT”-“belongings”, that is to say, this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains, and which the Archangel MICHAEL gave him through their “HUBRIS COVENANT”. As such, he was also revealing the object of this “HUBRIS COVENANT”, which he had concluded with the Archangel MICHAEL: their “HUBRIS COVENANT” gave him possession of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, long before that the first manifestation of the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was produced into existence inside this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

In Luke 4:5-7, it is more explicitly recorded in these terms:

And, AZAZEL led CHRIST up to a very high place and showed him in an instant all the kingdoms of the world [this is about the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains] and said to CHRIST. “I will give you authority over all these kingdoms and all their glory, for it [this is about the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains] has been given to me, and I can give it to anyone I wish. If you bow down and worship me, it will all be yours.”

CHAPTER 174

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

AZAZEL to talk with the Archangel MICHAEL, and the meeting that will take place, is part of a well planned deceptive staging, their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, orchestrated by these two “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL, with the aim to “throw powder in the eyes” of the youngest low-ranking “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were still asleep, to formalize the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in front of the entire “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, to build the high walls of darkness and to lock the “CREATION” in the “Obscurity” of that deceptive staging.

By bringing AZAZEL and his cronies inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” — that is, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE” — the Archangel MICHAEL believed that it is so that they were going to pin on “THE DIVINE”, the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and by the same occasion, justify their real “ACCUSATION” that they had brought against “THE DIVINE” for not choosing to express on a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the new manifestation of metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which is an expression of “THE UNION” and that HE has expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Having seen by himself all the destruction that took place in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, due to the presence of filth and the mark of “DEATH” carried by AZAZEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who joined him, the Archangel MICHAEL knew very well that, when he had pulled them out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and had immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, then, it was at that very moment that he had himself destroyed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” before that this latter was created.

The Archangel MICHAEL and all the “ADONA’IM”, knew very well that all these filth and the mark of “DEATH” which they had themselves immersed in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, would spread throughout the whole “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, but with a slower propagation velocity than had been the case in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.⁸²⁰

Trying to pin on “THE DIVINE” that “BETRAYAL” and the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was part of the shenanigans (all kinds of monkey businesses) of their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” dictated by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and whose unique objective is to: conceal the goals to satisfy the “fame of oneself” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in themselves.

⁸²⁰ You can also discern this from their own sayings, as reported in the chronicles of the conflict of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and in which they describe their prowess of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and their works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”. Some of these chronicles (which are incomplete) have already been delivered to the human by the name of David Aguilar, and are available online on the Internet.

Archangel MICHAEL, (speaking to the Archangel ZA’AFIEL):

That is so, Za’afiel. “The energy there” [in reference to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, the Earthly world in which you, human creatures, currently live] is of a different kind than Heaven [in reference to the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance”].

In that place [in reference to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, the Earthly world in which you, human creatures, currently live], Azazel will be able to avoid mavet [DEATH] for a time.

These two excerpts of conversations, are illustrative of the multitude of such conversations that were under way among all these “ADONA’IM”, as many as they are, and which of “word of mouth”, descending in their hierarchy of communication, kept each other informed of the situation.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

Those shenanigans are alternatives to “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”; they have no base and no stability, they are without possible ins and outs, they do not have any place in “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and they are in all respects contrary to specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established for the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and are not to be added to this unique “SPECIFIC SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of the “Specific Generative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domain” and the six “Specific Formative Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Domains”.

Everything that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER undertakes to implement into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, as well as every decision that HE takes, is dictated by “THE TRUTH”; that is, the rules, laws, and “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, and that formalize and fully demonstrate the truth of formulas of relationships between its seven constituents “Divine Particles” and all the products that are formed and those that are consumed in this “DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

This is why “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has not interfered to thwart the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their shenanigans. Furthermore, as we have indicated in one previous chapter, on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had established a new project with the purposes:

- To observe, to study and record all the proceedings of each and all of these treacherous “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, unbeknownst to all of them, without exception, and in which these treacherous “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will reveal by themselves through their own proceedings, everything concerning their true “nature”;
- To record the accountability of each of them in this inevitable forthcoming destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”; much accurately, the inevitable forthcoming sacrifice of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in order to build the “case” for the pending judgment of these pampered “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and self-declared “gods” who have set themselves on the path to sabotage “THE HOLY PROJECT” and to destroy the manifested expression of “THE UNION” that they coveted but have not received as it has been given to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”;

- To record the accountability of each of them in the quagmire in which they have thrown the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”;
- To record all the temporal details of the life of each of them.

All the shenanigans of these treacherous “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” would later be revealed at the appropriate time following the appropriate convergence point in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE” has consolidated in Himself.

This appropriate time will come to pass roughly seventy billion years later, and all those shenanigans will be so disclosed by another creature of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, which will be associated with that appropriate convergence point in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, and who will wear the same “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that had worn the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. This other creature of “THE DIVINE”, having the “MALE” adjective, which will be produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, will not be called “The Eye of The ‘LIGHT’”, but he will be called “THE LIGHT”, or “THE CHRIST”, Jesus CHRIST.

Until that appropriate time comes to pass about seventy billion years later, the “ADONA’IM” had already sealed the fate of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, by the “BETRAYAL” that they had perpetrated in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and for “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, it was already late to intervene in order to thwart the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their shenanigans.

Let return to those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” standing inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” — that is, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE” — and preparing to issue their real “CHARGE”.

Because, having declared that a product of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, the manifestation of which they were appointed as “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”, was a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, was not a simple statement to be taken lightly, but it was a real “CHARGE” brought by the “ADONA’IM” against “THE DIVINE” for not choosing to express on a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the new manifestation of metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which will be an expression of “THE UNION”.

Once again, the Archangel MICHAEL considered himself to be smarter and wiser than “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and having decided in their “obscurity” and absence of “WISDOM” that the future “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, he has once again implemented the deceit he had prepared in his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” from what he had acquired from the teachings of “THE DIVINE FORCE” and which allowed him to keep intact and regulate the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH”.

With this deceit, the Archangel MICHAEL and the Archangel GABRIEL have blocked the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH”, preventing the surpluses of “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” which were produced and emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — to flow in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and to cleanse it from its filth, protecting once again from the immediate destruction, AZAZEL and his cronies who were present inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” — that is, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”.

Have the Archangel MICHAEL, the “ADONA’IM”, the Archangel and other high-ranking “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, understood anything at all from all the teaching that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had displayed during the fulfilment of those seven decrees of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”? What about the detailed living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and which “THE DIVINE FORCE” wrote down in slow motion by sewing the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” into existence? Have they understood something at all about that living “DISCOURSE” of “THE DIVINE”? They were now about to demonstrate what they have understood, and that is: “POVERTY”, they understood “NOTHING AT ALL”.

All the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested throughout the past week had fallen into deaf ears and the disaster and the destruction almost total of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” which had been going on and which they had caused was the least of their worries. For these “ADONA’IM”, it was imperative that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” be destroyed, even at the price of their own destruction.

Not been able to go directly after “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”, therefore they will write the terms of this “CHARGE” which they will afterwards go and present it to “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” who was not yet on the threshold of the stage of the “spiritual awakening”; that is, from the spiritual perspective, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was similar to a newborn that is perceived in the hours which come just after childbirth.

When AZAZEL arrived in front of the Archangel MICHAEL, he bowed on one knee and spoke, saying:

“Chief Prince”⁸²¹, we have decided... that we were mistaken in our course. If it be possible, Lord, we would like to return to our home; for, the Earth is not the place that was created for us, but this... our original estate.

...”

To which the Archangel MICHAEL responded and said:

“ ...

You speak truly, for the Earth is not your home — that was created for Adam;⁸²² but I say unto you that neither is Heaven any longer ⁸²¹ Those are parts of the qualifiers with which these most elders “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” adorn themselves. “Chief Prince” is the designation for the head of the “ADONA’IM”, themselves self-designated as “Princes” of their Kingdom, that is to say, the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”. As you would know already from feudal societies, there cannot be a noble class without a peasant class. The noble class here was formed by the Archangel MICHAEL or “Chief Prince”, the “ADONA’IM” or “Princes”, the high-ranking “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which include the archangels, the chiefs of Angelic orders, and the priests in “THE CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”. Can you guess in which class the remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were considered to be? They are designated as the “performers” (the ones who are actually performing the “tasks” at the bottom of their existing hierarchy of communication from “THE SHEKINAH”, those who are making the “tasks” into reality); the equivalent of the peasant class.

⁸²² He is revealing that he, the Archangel MICHAEL, understood very well that this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” was created for “ADAM”. Why then, did he pulled AZAZEL and those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried your home. The “Presence of IaH” could not long abide the “sin” which exists in your essence.⁸²³

AZAZEL spoke again, saying:

“...

Then heal the “sin”. We see all of your angels restored as they were before.⁸²⁴ Why are we not then also restored? Can this “sin” not be healed?⁸²⁵ with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and has immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”? He will subsequently, through his dealings, also reveal why.

⁸²³ But, it is “ADAM” and his future descendants, the living replications of “The Presence of IaH”, who will abide the “sin” which exists in the essence of AZAZEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”? Would that not mean the destruction of “ADAM” and his future descendants?

⁸²⁴ The restoration, to which he is referring to, is that of the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment” of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” whose “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” was not fractured, cracked and broken and which have not follow AZAZEL in his madness. Although their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment” was restored, the evil deeds, the acts of transgression and destruction, which are “SINS” in all their forms, which they have all perpetrated, however, cannot be “undo” and things have been sealed as part of their “nature”, inside their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, of which they knew not of the existence inside their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”.

*I began to test the limits of those things which we have never done before. They were small things at first, such as performing a task in a way which had not been specified, and then, eventually leaving things completely undone... but soon I decided to make one final test. Before the very Shekinah over which I have charge, I removed my veil.

None of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew about the existence of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” inside their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”; that is why, in their days, they often spoke about their “essence”. They were their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”, which was “visible to them. Thus, none of them knew that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each and of all those amongst them who have exposed their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure” unprotected against luminous radiation emanating directly from “THE SHEKINAH”, inside the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”, was badly damaged. It is the effects of those damages, which were affecting their functioning, that they referred to as being caused by that, which they were now designating as “sin” inside AZAZEL. All the transgressions of “THE FIRST RULE OF EXISTENCE”, the rejection of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, all the “BETRAYALS”, which all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and which have led them to that point in time, standing there inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” — that is, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE” —, they designate those crimes as “...MISUSE of the greatest gift [i.e. the ability to choose freely] that IHVH has given to the Host ...”; they do not designate those transgressions and crimes as “SINS”.

When I saw that no harm came to me, I perceived the great freedom of operating outside of the Throne's influence. Even in that most sacred spot, I was no longer a servant of Heaven. I was no longer an angel... I was something else. I saw that I was no longer Adonai, but EL.

No of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew about the existence of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” inside their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”. They knew not that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each and of all those amongst them who have exposed their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure” unprotected against luminous radiation emanating directly from “THE SHEKINAH”, inside the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”, was badly damaged to the point that they MUST be removed/erased from existence.

ONLY “THE DIVINE FORCE”, who, none of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew about, and who has produced the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each of them into existence can repair it.

It is thus that the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL, went on in a deceptive discourse about how that “sin”, which is inside AZAZEL and his followers could be healed. And the Archangel MICHAEL, just like the best “charlatans” in their show, after spouting pitches as if he was trying to transfer his own “healing energy” onto AZAZEL, to heal that “sin”, which is inside AZAZEL, as if he could undo as such all the “crimes”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, said afterwards that he cannot heal that “sin”, which is inside AZAZEL.

Subsequently, the Archangel MICHAEL has presented them the scene he had prepared long in advance and through which he had already stated the terms of the “DEATH CONTRACT”, the “HUBRIS CONFLICT”, by which he intended to pull the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which has been called “ADAM” and meaning “The Eye of The ‘LIGHT’”, away from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER; and by that, they would reclaim the hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, the object from which they indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and which was out of their hands. The Archangel MICHAEL spoke, to AZAZEL and the remaining of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present, saying:

You were created free, AZAZEL. You could have chosen good or evil; and you made your choice. “ADAM” also has been created free — I have not limited his power, but have loved him as I have loved you.

The beasts of the field are not like the man. They react, and they move about, but their powers are only a symbol of those possessed by the human creature.

“ADAM” also must choose.

...”

We add here some clarifications related to this opening speech, so that never again you (the human reading these writings) do not let yourself be fooled by such speeches, but rather that you get a clear vision of the ins and outs of the actors of these speeches and the hidden intentions of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” against their neighbour, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’

‘EARTHLY’ Creature”; for, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have “more than one trick under their sleeves”.

Think for a moment: as a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” drowned in the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, which has declared himself to be “god” above his fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and which has witness the ravage that he himself and his fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have unleashed in their own house, in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, would such a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” bring forth into existence a non-“‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, whose “power” is unlimited, and hence surpasses his?

ב
ר
י
ח

From the teachings of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, the Archangel MICHAEL had very well understood that the “new creature” will be akin to “THE SHEKINAH”, thus will be classified above all of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including above him, the Archangel MICHAEL, and the “power” of the “new creature” will not be limited to the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State”, as it is the case with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. Hence, the “... I have not limited his power...” and taking as such to him, the honours of the work, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” has performed.

None of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” had perceived “THE DIVINE FORCE” at work, because none of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had in itself “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL believed that it was himself who had achieved this production, not knowing his own root and the place where he had sprouted, having also not understood that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted them the particular task, to each of them, to choose a “Character” for oneself, so that each of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” can reflect on itself, describing through the chosen “Character”, its own vision of existence and also its own vision of “THE DIVINE”.

All the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, will also believe that it is the Archangel MICHAEL, who has created the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Even the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” — that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, had given them by the intermediary of “THE DIVINE FORCE” and asked them to observe, all have transgressed it, because they have had no regard for their neighbour. If they loved their neighbour — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” —, then, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” would not be trying to kill each other in the goal to corner the new manifestation of the metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which is the expression of “THE UNION” and that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

When we love our neighbour, we do not take the most poisonous snakes and scorpions into existence to place them in the bed sheets of our neighbour.

“...The beasts of the field are not like the man. They react, and they move about, but their powers are only a symbol of those possessed by the human creature. ...”

From the teachings that he had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, the Archangel MICHAEL had understood, to some extent, the notion of “strict inclusion” of “sets”, which we introduced at the onset and concerning the attributes of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’”; namely:

“...

All the unique particulars that are elements of the attribute “PURITY” (here the attribute “SPIRIT”), have epithet functions in the attribute “LIGHT”; and all the elements of the attribute “LIGHT”, each element in itself, carry in them the unique particulars that belong to the attribute “PURITY”, but no element of the attribute “PURITY” carries in it a determinant of the attribute “LIGHT”.

...”

This first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was a manifestation in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, of this notion of “strict inclusion” of “sets” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’”.

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had not either understood that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had entrusted them the particular task, to each of them, to choose a “Character” for oneself, so that each of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” can reflect on itself, describing through the chosen “Character”, its own vision of existence and also its own vision of “THE DIVINE”, in order to reflect thus the celestial truths that are in their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” at the origin of their own “Characters”.

You (reading these writings) must understand that, into the “beasts of the field” — that is, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” — “THE DIVINE FORCE” has transferred the characters of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; the “beasts of the field” are actually self-portraits of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, concrete “images” in characters of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; their “powers” have been made manifested in those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”. That is why those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will say and always like to say that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has glorified them (in the sense of manifested living “waxwork”, or, living “wax” sculptures, and NOT in the sense of the manifestation of the “GLORY” of “THE LIGHT”) through the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

Now then, that those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have understood that “their powers are only a symbol of those possessed by the human creature”, what does this tells you about the “human creature” — that is, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — with respect to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”?

Those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have understood that in terms of possession of the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON”, they as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were on a lower classification scale than the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. They have understood that their own elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” were only symbols of — that is, they have only epithet function in — the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” given to the “human creature” — that is, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, who is truly akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

That is what the Archangel MICHAEL and all those present at that gathering were talking about. So, pay attention when reading these writings!

“...“ADAM” also must choose. ...”

He, the Archangel MICHAEL, was especially tasked to facilitate the education of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, so that he, the Archangel MICHAEL, can understand the two causal precedence relations that govern everything which is created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”: the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE CREATION’” — which defines the order of events through which the creatures of “THE DIVINE” come into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” — and the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE PRAISE’” — which defines the sequence of events through which the creatures of “THE DIVINE” will receive the supply necessary to their continued existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

But driven by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, he threw away that task of education. In this display, telling that “... “ADAM” also must choose ...”, was an expression of an already made decision, a cunning and veiled way to say “... I for one will never bow to serve a physical being ...”; just like that one amongst them and who himself self-proclaimed to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, had said openly and aloud, what all the others “ADONA’IM” hid in them and have been quietly thinking, saying:

I for one will never bow to serve a physical being!

...”

This show was just part of the series of malice and shenanigans (all kinds of monkey businesses), having no base and no stability, without possible ins and outs, orchestrated and led by those “ADONA’IM”, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, who are in “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE” and had educated all of them in “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”.

The decision to induce “ADAM” to their “HUBRIS CONFLICT” had already been made, and worked out by the Archangel MICHAEL, as part of his own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”, since the days after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they came to understand that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”.

 Extended clarifications of the opening speech,
Zoom out *****

With the closing of that opening speech, the Archangel MICHAEL opened a hologram — represented by an image in three dimensions appearing as “suspended in the air” and being a transmission in real time, live — of the place of the crime scene and where other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had already led “ADAM” in order to induce him to “HUBRIS CHOICE”; like a gentle lamb that is led to the slaughter, not being aware of the bad intentions that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had premeditated against him.

From the moment that obscurity “ascended on its own throne” inside the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil”, on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, its disciples and princes have been busy finalizing their planning of the “purging out of existence” of any remaining trace of the manifestation of “THE LIGHT” that in itself carries “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” who has been already sent into oblivion, into exile. Such a manifestation of “THE LIGHT” is found in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”; such a manifestation of “THE LIGHT” IS the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

The terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” are phrased in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Language” using the symbols of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

That scene, of the premeditated crime, especially prepared for this occasion, consisted of a garden, at the intersection of four rivers and where two large trees were: the first tree in the “NORTH” and the second tree in the “SOUTH”. The two trees had the same appearance; they had large thick leaves, casting their shadow on the ground. They had mighty roots and firm trunks, and from them hung large, ripe “fruits” — shining in the sunlight and asking to be picked up for consumption.⁸²⁶

⁸²⁶ The description, of these two trees, thus given to you, is the direct description of the spiritual symbols, using the symbols that are familiar to you in human language.

Each tree is in fact the representation of a delimited totality, in which well-defined parameters, logical predicates, rules, and laws extend, and in which well-defined and prevalent actions are exerted over the elements of this totality. It is all that defines, that gives sense, that gives a specific meaning determined by the context and the situation of the totality considered.

The large thick leaves and firm trunks are the representations of these well-defined parameters, of these logical predicates, of these rules, and of those laws which extend into the totality considered. In the case where the elements of the totality are living creatures, these large thick leaves and firm trunks are representations of the whole of the usages and customs, habits, beliefs, etc., which define the rules in use in the totality considered.

The mighty roots are the representations of complete consolidation, the very deep and ineradicable attachment, of the elements of the totality for all these well-defined parameters, these logical predicates, these rules, and these laws, in the totality considered. In the case where the elements of the totality are living creatures, these mighty roots are representations of the very profound attachment of these living creatures to the usages and customs of the totality, those usages and customs that have become an integral and ineradicable part of their “nature”, and define the normative principle stemming from the essence of these living creatures. From this complete consolidation, from this very profound and ineradicable attachment, each of these living creatures, as an individual element of the totality, is then defined by all the qualities and properties that give it its identity in the totality considered. To remove these usages and customs in such a totality, would be to undo such normative principle, and thus to destroy these living creatures, elements in this totality considered.

The large ripe “fruits”, ready for consumption, are representations of the results of the well-defined and prevalent actions in the totality considered; these actions being exerted by the elements of the totality, and the results of these actions being fine ready to be applied outside of the totality considered. In the case where the elements of the totality are living creatures, these large ripe “fruits”, ready for consumption are representations of the things that these living creatures have produced in existence, according to their way of doing things and thinking, and which are going to be transmitted or exported outside of the totality considered.

The two trees casting their shadow on the ground means that these totalities are projected on the ground. In the case where the elements of the totality are living creatures, “casting their shadow on the ground” means that what you will see on creatures brought forth on the ground, are projections onto them of the particulars of the two trees. What you see down here on the “Plane Below” where you currently live, is a projection of what came from

The Archangel MICHAEL had prepared that scene of the crime, knowing from the specifications of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” (which he believed to be “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, because not having knowledge of the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” hidden in this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”), of which he had part knowledge, in the execution of the task which had been entrusted to him to choose a “Character”, that the manifestation of this “Character” into existence — that is to say, this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which was produced into existence — would be fed by “fruits” (in the physical sense and the spiritual sense as a metaphor for knowledge). Now, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was a new-born and “fruits” were his only source of food to enable him to fill:

the “Plane Above”. For example, as you (reading these writings) would have understood already, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” (that is to say, the “animals”) are actually self-portraits of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, concrete “images” in characters of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; in other words, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” are projection on the “Plane Below” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. Got it? From now onwards, when you will see shadows of trees, or other things, projected on the ground, remember the content of this annotation. Every thing around you and inside you was produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE” for your own education.

It is very important that you (reading these writings) understand such things, which are associated with that, which is called the “nature” of a living creature, and so that you wake up from your sleep in the dusty soil. Because, once that, that which is called the “nature” of a living creature, has been consolidated at attainment of the defined period of time necessary for the consolidation, then after that period of time, such defined “nature” cannot be changed as it will have developed a mighty root, and that creature will henceforward mostly “do what it has become at that point of consolidation”; in other words, that creature will henceforth “do what its nature is”. Before the point of consolidation, the “nature to be” is in its process of elaboration preceding its actual appearance which will take place at the critical point of the consolidation; it is not yet defined, but is taking shape with the passage of time until it reaches the critical point of consolidation. At this point of consolidation, the “fruits” that the living creature will have produced, will be measured; They will be used if they are ready for consumption, otherwise in the case where they will be of no use and cannot be consumed, they will be put in the trash to be burned along with the creature that produced them. It is imperative that you wake up from your sleep, in the dusty soil, before the attainment of this critical point.

We will explain this as we move forward in the text below, so that you now be able to discern the contents of the visions and the living painting images that “THE DIVINE FORCE” will send to you and to improve your ability to read in spiritual language. Pay attention!

CHAPTER 174

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

- In the physical realm — the “NEED” (or the “DEFICIT”) of “‘EARTHLY’ specific supply of subsistence” of his “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”;
- In the spiritual realm — the quest by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, of knowledge and understanding of the environment in which he was created into existence, all that surrounded him: both the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it contains, and the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” containing the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; because the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” perceived and moved in these two environments.

As we have indicated already, when the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was created into existence, and as it will be the case for all the living creatures that will come into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, has withered and “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, inside of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, has fallen in the oblivion (or the ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” contains.

It is so that, the living creatures that come into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” are called upon to grow in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and it is “THE SPECIFIC SPIRITUAL FORCE OF LIFE” who will work in “PURITY”, “HOLINESS” and “RIGHTEOUSNESS” (that is, according to the elements of “THE REASON”) in all creatures that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed, to provide illumination, “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; SHE is the whole existing in every “PURE” creature.

It is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who will provide the temperature and the enlightenment intensity, that is, the illumination — “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined — and rouse “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, inside of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, out of the oblivion (or ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” contains.

The quest by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, of knowledge and understanding of the environment in which the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” has been created into existence, through the interaction of that “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” with that environment, creating development paths for “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, and as a consequence, the development paths of the arising personality of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, from knowledge gained (also called the “outcomes”, the “products”, the “achievements”, or: the “fruits”) from this interaction.

This was the weak link that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” had found in the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, newborn, and they will exploit it to accomplish their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”.

The Archangel MICHAEL spoke further, saying:

“...

That to the “SOUTH” is the Tree of Life, It is a symbol of “HEAVEN’s” everlasting vitality, and the life force that springs freely from IHVH.

That on the “NORTH” is the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. That tree bears bitter fruit, AZAZEL, as you know; the taste of it is familiar to you, for it is a symbol of your rebellion — of truth that has been stolen, and twisted into a lie. For freedom’s sake it is there; for it is possible for the man to follow in a holy course or an unholy one.

“ADAM” may choose to use his knowledge well, may choose to learn from us what rebellion is, and not drink directly from that fountain himself.

Thus is the justice of the “THRONE” seen. The man has no favors that you did not have, my first child. Yet if he will remain within the faith We have delivered unto him, then, he may eat of the southern tree always, and by his trust — even he will condemn your course. Even he will demonstrate why I cannot heal your wounds.

...”

We also add here some clarifications related to the continuation of the opening speech, so that never again you (the human reading these writings) do not let yourself be fooled by such speeches, but rather that you get a clear vision of the ins and outs of the actors of these speeches and the hidden intentions of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” against their neighbour, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

 Zoom in,
extended clarifications of the continuation of the opening speech *****

“... That to the “SOUTH” is the Tree of Life, It is a symbol of “HEAVEN’s” everlasting vitality, and the life force that springs freely from IHVH. That on the “NORTH” is the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil ...”

We will shed light upon these two trees at the end of these extended clarifications of the continuation of the opening speech.

“...That on the “NORTH” is the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. That tree bears bitter fruit, AZAZEL, as you know; the taste of it is familiar to you, for it is a symbol of your rebellion. ...”

The symbol at the core of this rebellion is actually the “LIGHT”, which all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have coveted and yearned to have, and which has been attributed to “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. The Archangel MICHAEL was in fact taking the name, the symbol, of that, which is good — that “LIGHT”, which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD” — and attributing it to that, which is not good — their rebellion against the decision of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER not to give that “LIGHT” to any of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, but to give it to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. That is the “why” of the “CELESTIAL WAR” and its consequence, which are all the destruction in which you are now embedded in, in the world in which you are living.

“...“ADAM” may choose to use his knowledge well, may choose to learn from us what rebellion is, and not drink directly from that fountain himself. ...”

In this manner, the Archangel MICHAEL had planned to corner the new born “ADAM” and wrap and swallow him, including his unborn descendancy (the whole forth coming “HUMAN EDIFICE”), in the “BETRAYAL”, which he, the Archangel MICHAEL, has perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and also to lockup “ADAM”, including his unborn descendancy (the whole forth coming “HUMAN EDIFICE”), inside the high walls of “obscurity” in which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have surrounded themselves with. He was revealing at the sight of all, what he had planned in his own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”, since the days after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they came to understand that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”.

What would someone, who has been produced into existence to be the sentence of annihilation of the ignorance and of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, learn from those who do not know who they are themselves? Who do not know why and how they came into existence? Who do not have any knowledge of the “ins” and “outs” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”?

Once awoken about its own status, someone, who has been brought forth into existence to be the sentence of annihilation of the ignorance and of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, will understand the depths of ignorance in which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have sunk, and that someone will not take part in that ignorance.

Remember that, from the spiritual perspective, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — “ADAM” — was similar to a newborn that is perceived in the hours which come just after childbirth. Do you also remember what you have recorded in Matthew 2:1-13, in the scriptures, which human creatures have in their possession? Do you remember about Herod, who was troubled by the birth of child CHRIST, who was announced by prophets as the child who will be born “KING”, and Herod wanted to wipe the child out of existence? That was a replica of what the Archangel MICHAEL and these “ADONA’IM” were up to against “ADAM”, and what they were talking about at this meeting. It was imperative for the Archangel MICHAEL, these “ADONA’IM”, and their fallen nemesis, to prevent that “ADAM” awaken to the knowledge of his own status with respect to these disciples of “obscurity”.

You should understand that in the announcement of the prophets about “... the child who will be born “KING” ...”, the word “KING” in Matthew 2:1-13, in the scriptures, which human creatures have in their possession, is a reference to the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the model succeeding the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. We will elaborate about that model in another chapter below. “ADAM” is the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. In the same line of expression, the coming of “ADAM” into existence was announced to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” as the coming of a child “KING” above the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, “KING” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, which are products of the mould designated as the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

As we have indicated in one previous annotation, such choice of words and expressions (“...the child who will be born “KING”...”, etc... and that you will find throughout most Scriptures) is due to the fact that, when such revelation is given to a human creature, he can only interpret and express it using words, symbols and expressions in the human language and which are familiar to him and to those human creatures around him, so that they can grasp and understand what is been revealed. If the human creature receiver of such revelation has a tendency to be a hunter, then he will interpret and express it using words, symbols and expressions of hunters; if he is a fisherman, then he will interpret and express it using words, symbols and expressions of fishermen; if he is in the building construction business, he will interpret and express it using words, symbols and expressions that you find in building construction business; if he is living in a politically organized community or major territorial unit having a monarchical form of government headed by a king or queen, he will interpret and express it using words, symbols and expressions, which best describe his living environment. Well, I am sure that you get the point. With which words, symbols and expressions would you describe that, which is beyond your understanding?

The child “KING” born of the virgin “MARY” was a replica of “THE DIVINE FORCE” producing into existence the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model. “THE DIVINE FORCE” is “The life of the ‘VIRGINAL SPIRIT’”, and as you would know, “THE DIVINE FORCE” is “ABSOLUTE PURITY” and no creature into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” has ever made HER “IMPURE”.

“...The man has no favors that you did not have, my first child. ...”

As we have already indicated in one previous annotation, all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had declared themselves to be “gods”, with the Archangel MICHAEL at their helm and followed by AZAZEL their “public figure” and “spokesman” of the “ADONA’IM” closed circle, were in the same disastrous situation of a “pampered child” with their many disruptive behavioral patterns. None of them had developed in themselves any knowledge about “why?” they were into existence and under “which?” specifications they were maintained into existence. A “pampered child” always has his own reasons according to his own “logic” to prove that he is entitled to everything he wants: “He wants what he wants when he wants it.” For that reason, he will appear and will be impulsive, and he will try to sabotage every project in which he will not be ranked first and will not get the particular privilege that is the object of that project. It is not enough for a “pampered child” to have all privileges already existing, he has to pretend to have even more than he has already; it is not enough to be admired, he has to be admired above everyone and praised by everyone, in the first place. Those destructive behaviors, characteristics of a “pampered child” and, that you now see widespread amongst human creatures did not started with human creatures in the “Plane Below”, but they started in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” in the “Plane Above”, with these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, with the most elders of them: the “ADONA’IM”. All the evil deeds that you see widespread amongst human creatures did not started with human creatures in the “Plane Below”, but they have their origins in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” in the “Plane Above”, amongst these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

The hidden agenda behind the words “the man has no favors that you did not have”, was to place and assert himself to be above the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and also to downgrade the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” below their level, as they knew and understood that the possession by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” of that “LIGHT” — which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD” — had placed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” above all of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including the Archangel MICHAEL himself. In order to achieve that goal of placing himself above the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, he will betray all the teachings that he had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”. The instruction, which was given to them to to celebrate “THE PRAISE” around and through “ADAM”, just as they perform it around “THE SHEKINAH”, has been the drop that overflowed the vase of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, and the Archangel MICHAEL was thus trying to overturn and dismiss that instruction.

“My first child” refers to AZAZEL. We have already revealed how these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were “spoken” into existence. As you would have understood by now, all “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were “spoken” into existence through the Archangel MICHAEL, by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and on instruction from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. It is so that the Archangel MICHAEL thought that he was the one who was bringing forth these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” into existence by his own volition. In the same way, he thought, and all the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” also thought, that he was the one who created the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. His own speech gives you an indication on the depth of absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

“...Yet if he will remain within the faith We have delivered unto him ...”

As we have indicated already, the Archangel MICHAEL was assigned the task to choose a “Character” for himself, that external shape, represented by a set of subjectives morphological characteristics, and that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has applied to the “Specific ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” to produce that, which has been called: the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. He will let circulate the idea that he is the one who created the human creature, and will feed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” with their “obscurity” with the expectation that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will choose by himself to remain forever locked inside that “obscurity”, away from knowing about its own “PLENITUDE” as “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and away from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, hence, his words “the faith that We delivered onto him”. He knew not that it is because of his own deficiency, that the creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was announced to them and in order to remedy the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that has taken place into them, to break and dismantle the high walls of “obscurity” in which they have surrounded themselves with.

“...Even he will demonstrate why I cannot heal your wounds. ...”

They had understood that something beyond the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”, which they could all see, was broken inside that “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”. For these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who did not know about the model of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the mould from which they were produced into existence, the only thing they knew about themselves was their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”, which they could see: they were their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”.

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each of the fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, was fractured and a product (reminiscent to “blood”) of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” was leaking out, through the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL←SPIRIT’ Frontier” of their fractured “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”. None of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” could see that leakage, they only knew that something was not working anymore inside of them, as it should, and they knew that the environment around the fallen ones was affected negatively.

How was he, the Archangel MICHAEL, to heal those fractured “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, which he cannot see and do not know the whereabouts inside that “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”? Only the one who built that “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the first place can repair it. ONLY “THE DIVINE FORCE” can repair such damages, which those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” were marked with.

So, the Archangel MICHAEL managed to come out with an explanation why he could not heal those wounds of the fallen ones.

 Extended clarifications of the continuation of the opening speech,
Zoom out *****

With that, AZAZEL replied, saying: “... Let it be so. This war is not at its end. ...”.

Afterwards, he was brought out of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” with his cronies and they were plunged right back in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

In their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, having also sent into oblivion “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” that was speaking from “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, the Archangel MICHAEL and all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew not “how?” they were brought up. They knew very well about the existence of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, whom they have all failed to recognize, and in the depths of their “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, they knew very well that, as many as they were, myriads of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, they have all been brought up by “THE ONE” who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

Having brought up the myriads of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, simultaneously, in groups, or individually, would “THE ONE” who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”, not be anymore capable to nurture and educate that single “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that he, the Archangel MICHAEL, has set as a “prey” to be removed from existence? After the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, all these “pampered children” “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have repressed and sidelined the knowledge of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and instead, they have pushed forward ideas as if they grew up by themselves.⁸²⁷ And now, they have set themselves to educate this “new comer” “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by feeding it with the fruits of the tree which is in the “SOUTH” and that which they designate as “... a symbol of ‘HEAVEN’s’ everlasting vitality, and the life force that springs freely from IHVH ...”, or they themselves will remove that “new comer” from existence. All the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has deployed in Her “Classroom” and in front of all of them, on the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when SHE had produced into existence the multitude of “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” after their kind and bearing “fruits”, they have thrown all those teachings away. It is only later during the unfolding of this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they will sober up from their insanity in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that these “pampered children” “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will acknowledge the truth about all the care and education that “THE ONE” who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable, had provided to them.

Now that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is into existence, the primary objective of this presentation of the Archangel MICHAEL was to fully destroy the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” which has been established from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, and for the Archangel MICHAEL, to reclaim the hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE” through “THE SHEKINAH”, the object from which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves

⁸²⁷ If an opportunity shows up and you find yourself in front of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, ask them the following questions: “How did you grew up?”, “Who educated you?”, “Did “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER educated you and how did HE carried it out?”, “What have you done with all the education that FATHER provided you with?”, etc...

with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”. That “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, which took place inside “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in his own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, was fighting for its own survival.⁸²⁸

With this presentation, the Archangel MICHAEL has masterfully managed to drive attention away from his own “SINS” and “BETRAYAL”, including those of the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and which are the causes of the presence of those fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” inside this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” has now been created into existence, and he has centered attention on this first “new born” “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’

⁸²⁸ A replica of this presentation, in which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have laid their trap to destroy “ADAM”, will be produced into existence roughly seventy billion years later with the birth of CHRIST, and the lead actor then was the king Herod. But the dark details of Herod planning the death of the new born child CHRIST, have never been disclosed to human creatures, while the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were watching and understanding what was about to happen to the new born CHRIST, as they themselves did the same to the new born “ADAM”. In the scriptures, which human creatures have in their possession, it is only reported, without details, that (Matthew 2:1-13):

... behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream and said:

“...

Stand up, take the child and his mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the child, to destroy him.

...”

Remain attentive and remember the meaning of those two trees “casting their shadow on the ground”!

As we have indicated already, that angel, which “appeared to Joseph in a dream”, was the Archangel GABRIEL. And he had said to Joseph: “Stand up, take the child and his mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the child, to destroy him.” It is not that he could “see” the future, but it is that he knew very well what they, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM”, have done to “ADAM”, who was a “newborn”, and he had seen over and over again all the replicas of that situation repeated amongs human creatures. Thus, by inference, he understood with certainty what was about to unfold on the “new born” child CHRIST if no action is taken.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. This is known as psychological misdirection: a principle element in the art of deception. Psychological misdirection is the intentional deflection of the attention of an audience away from one thing and for the purpose of concealing it. It is not simply about deflecting attention, but it is also about directing attention toward something else interesting, which will prevent the audience from noticing the primary cause of, or the temporal succession of the unfolding of previous events that have led to what they are witnessing. Psychological misdirection is intended to deceive not only the perception, but also the memory about those previous events, by influencing the conscious experience of the audience, or by influencing the reasoning about the cause of the occurrence of what, those who are in the audience had experienced; thus creating a “tunnel vision”⁸²⁹ for the audience and in which any action occurring outside of the frame goes unnoticed. It hinders the audience’s attempt to figure out the answer to the questions “how did we get to this point?”, “how did we get into this situation (usually, how did we get into this mess)?”, “how did such a thing come to be?”

This presentation was revealing the cunning and insidious way set forth by the Archangel MICHAEL, to achieve that primary purpose, while hiding the “why” of the “CELESTIAL WAR”, and which is their rebellion against the decision of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER not to give that “LIGHT” — which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD”, and which is the innermost component of your structure

⁸²⁹ Tunnel vision is a special phenomenon that affects the ability to perceive environmental stimuli and affects reasoning. It is relatively common that, when a person is in a state marked by psychophysiological stress, he will be interested exclusively in what is related to the task, the threat or the main preoccupation, which concerns him.

From the point of view of cognitive psychology, a tunnel vision is an impairment of attention. It is an attentional phenomenon that occurs in situations of intense stress, especially when a sense of threat is felt. It is due to specific hypervigilance, that is to say, selective attention to stimuli associated with a potential threat to safety or survival. This makes it easier to deal with stimuli, which one considers relevant, but it reduces the ability to perceive the remaining of the peripheral factors of the situation. Tunnel vision does not always correspond to reality. Some people, especially introverts because of their higher level of general anxiety, are more likely than others to have tunnel vision.

When a tunnel vision occurs, the field of vision, and often the remaining of the senses as well, focuses only on those stimuli that are associated with what is most relevant. This leads to the fact that the probability of correctly perceiving the remaining of the peripheral stimuli and correctly assessing the situation will be very markedly reduced; and thus the reasoning will be affected, even reduced.

(you! Human creature), as has been, since eternity and before none of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were “spoken” into existence, defined in the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — to any of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, but to give it to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.⁸³⁰

If the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” which has been established from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, is destroyed, so will also be destroyed any ordinance, and hence, any “KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, intended to send through the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. As such, in their their logic distorted by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and as their public figure, the one who himself self-proclaimed to have outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, had said openly and aloud, what all the others “ADONA’IM” hid in them and have been quietly thinking: “... They will never bow to serve a physical being! ...”.

It is thus that by this presentation of the premeditated crime scene, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” wrote themselves the terms of the “DEATH CONTRACT”, the “HUBRIS CONFLICT”, and by which they intended to pull the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which has been called “ADAM” and meaning “The Eye of The ‘LIGHT’”, away from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER; and therefore it is by this “DEATH CONTRACT” that the Archangel MICHAEL, leader of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” which were several billion years older, has established to demonstrate his understanding of the concept of “DEATH” on their following: the three days old newborn.⁸³¹

⁸³⁰ Do not loose sight of this “why” of the “CELESTIAL WAR”, during your walk to recover your lost “PLENITUDE”, after reading this whole “BOOK”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” initiated all the destructions in which you are now living in, in order to hijack that “LIGHT”, the true “GOLD”, which you carry inside of you, and everything turns around that.

⁸³¹ It is for the purpose to make understand that the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was thus premeditated by the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” long before that this earthly world in which you live in was created, that CHRIST had told the Jews (as it was narrated through the testimony of the human who was called John, John 8:44):

When the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” say: “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...”, it is about this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”, that they have formulated and wrote themselves against their neighbour, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, in order to conceal the “BETRAYAL” of the “ADONA’IM” towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and by which they had intentionally pulled, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and had thus sealed the destruction of all that, which will be subsequently carved into existence in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, including the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

This rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”, which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” formulated and wrote themselves against their neighbour, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, is a summary of the decision and offspring of this decision that the Archangel MICHAEL, standing in the “IMPURITY”, having not developed in him the knowledge of the “PURITY” of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and the products of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” which are manifested by metaphors into existence in “PURITY”, had taken, had written, from his own volition with “MALICE”, to flout “THE WILL” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and to destroy his neighbour — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” —. It is about this decision,

From the beginning he [the adversary, the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and thus all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who embodied the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, not only AZAZEL and his cronies, but including the Archangel MICHAEL and his accomplices], had set himself to kill humans, he did not stand in the truth because there is not any truth in him. When he utters a lie, he draws from what is his, because he is liar and father of lies.

CHAPTER 174

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

which he has established in his goal, to destroy, to kill, to erase from the existence his neighbour and which was sealed in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the Archangel MICHAEL, since those days before the creation of this terrestrial world, when he had come to understand that “... None amongst them, not even him the Archangel MICHAEL, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”.

Had these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had had knowledge of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, they would have understood that everything that comes out of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” carries the epithets “PURITY” and “TRUTH”; they would have understood that whatever they mean by “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...” and which they were about to apply into existence in order to justify the murder of their following, is not something written in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

This rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, is a work of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and has no base and no stability, without possible ins and outs, orchestrated and led by these “ADONA’IM”, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE FORCE” in “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE” and who had educated all of them in “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”.

The scene, of the premeditated crime, especially prepared for this occasion, has a strong symbolic in that it is for the Archangel MICHAEL, a representation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, of which he had failed to have knowledge; because “THE DIVINE FORCE” has never disclosed the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” to the Archangel MICHAEL, and to no other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

It is to allude to this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is truly in the image of “THE DIVINE” and manifested in the “‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ Specific State”, that the Archangel MICHAEL had chosen this scene.

The four rivers delimit the four directions: EAST, NORTH, WEST, and SOUTH, and thus their placement is an expression of the acronym IHVH — “HE WHO EXISTS", "HE WHO IS ABOVE", "HE WHO WILL EXIST", "HE WHO ARRIVES". In addition, "THE WATER" flowing on the rivers is the symbol of life of the "Subjective 'EARTHLY' Garment", and the presence of "ADAM", which had been led to this precise place by the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures", means that the Archangel MICHAEL is talking about the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" which is truly in the image of "THE DIVINE", source of life; this "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" which was placed inside of "ADAM".

The part of the scene which is located in the "SOUTH" is an expression of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" which is located in the "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT' Substance" constituent of the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" in the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature".

The part of the scene which is located in the "NORTH" is an expression of the conjoint of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" which is located in the "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT' Substance" constituent of the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" in the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature"; that is, it is an expression of "The ALTAR of 'THE DIVINE'" inside of this "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' Body" in the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature", because in the acronym IHVH, the "NORTH" is mapped with "HE WHO IS ABOVE", and "HE WHO IS ABOVE" is "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER.

The tree which is in the "SOUTH" is in fact an expression of the plant that has mighty roots inside of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" and has sprouted into existence inside of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" in the "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT' Substance" constituent of the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' Body" in the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creature", and from which the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creature" found joy, their state of gladness. It represents all the usages and customs, habits, beliefs, in the way of doing things, to think, etc..., which define the rules in use in "THE CELESTIAL HOST".

That joy and that state of gladness ensue from the comfort of the work position held in the "GOVERNMENT" of the "Specific Energy 'CELESTIAL' Domain"; that is, in the hierarchy of communication of the ordinances of the "specific spiritual formation" of "THE CHURCH" from "THE SHEKINAH" — "THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE 'NON DIVINE'".

The root of that tree is very strong and powerful, because it is in fact the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH" that took place inside of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" in the "Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

That tree, which is in the “SOUTH” and which, like the Archangel MICHAEL described it, is a symbol of “HEAVEN’S” everlasting vitality and their life force, is in fact the tree of the life of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; a tree they made together in their own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” in order to make the likeness of their intellect. That tree which is in the “SOUTH” is “THE TREE OF ABSENCE OF KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, or “THE TREE OF DEATH”; it is not “... the life force that springs freely from IHVH ...”, because what comes into existence through “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, is “THE TRUTH”, “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” expressed by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

The seed of that tree which is in the “SOUTH” is the desire, the deep aspiration to fill the feeling of a lack, of an incompleteness of the manifestation of a metaphor of a “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” of which one has been endowed; and also the lust for the manifestations of the metaphors of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, of which the others have been endowed, all in order to satisfy the feeling and emotions associated with “POWER” (also called the “AUTHORITY”). This seed blooms in the darkness, in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

The flower of that tree which is in the “SOUTH” is the anointing of perversity, its leaves are made of “MALICE” and monkey businesses, its branches are shadows of “DEATH” that it contains, and its root takes strength in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

The “fruits” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, are the knowledge gained (also called the “outcomes”, the “products”, the “achievements”) and concerning “THE ONE” from whom they originate and who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”; the “fruits” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, are actually the “fruits” of ignorance.

It is by consuming those “fruits” of the tree which is in the “SOUTH” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” found themselves bogged down in the swamp of “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”, in which they are standing, in their open conflict, in their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”, far away from and at the very opposite of “THE CONFIDENCE OF THE DIVINE”, in an embarrassing absence of knowledge of their own root, in a miserable absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

It is that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, and the “fruits” of which they have fed themselves with, that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have decided to recommend to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” so that it should not perceive its “PLENITUDE”⁸³² by its own “INTELLECT” by communicating directly with “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in his status (that of his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is a unique expression of “THE UNION”) as truly a “CHILD” of “THE DIVINE”, but so that it loses that status and becomes a “Servant” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

Indeed, to feed on the “fruit” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, means: to accept in oneself and to live according to all the usages and customs, habits, beliefs, in the way of doing things, to think, etc..., which define the rules in use in “THE CELESTIAL HOST”; to submit to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, that so far had been established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”; in other words: to submit to “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.⁸³³

⁸³² Later during the course of the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” will show a manifestation which is associated with the “PLENITUDE” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to EZEKIEL.

⁸³³ Read also the excerpt of the conversation of July 08, 2006, Aristide with the Archangel MICHAEL concerning the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and which we have given out in one previous chapter.

Archangel MICHAEL (answering to a question asked by Aristide, on orders from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER):

“ADAM” is the first creature that has been created on Earth. He was created as an adult; barely seventeen, eighteen years.

He served THE ETERNAL his GOD and he had the possibility to come to us. Without the wings, he was moving; ...

But by curiosity, he [“ADAM”] wanted to learn more about [his own] world and not ours. If he had asked questions about our world [that is to say, the “fruit” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, and which the Archangel MICHAEL had described as the “... symbol of *“HEAVEN’s” everlasting vitality and life force ...” of these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”], it would have been different, but he was much more interested in the world in which he [“ADAM”] was created.

It is with such arguments that these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and self-declared “gods” chose to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and to justify the murder that they have perpetrated against “ADAM” and all its descendants.

To help you understand the behaviour of these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, at that time, recall the particular task to choose a “Character” for oneself, that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had assigned to the firsts foremost “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and from which their personality, at the time when they chose their “Characters”, were later transferred onto the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

As we have explained already, those “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” carry with them the celestial truths that defined the personalities of the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” at the origin of the “Characters” manifested as “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

The manifestation of how these “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had then organised themselves in their hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, that so far had been established through “THE SHEKINAH”, is what you can observe in the animal kingdom and which is designated as “authority hierarchy” or “dominance hierarchy”. That is part of how those “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” viewed the existence and themselves within it. What you observe in the animal kingdom are parts of the celestial truths at the time when the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” chose their “Characters”.

Such hierarchy is one in which, in a selected group in the animal kingdom, there is one animal at the top that dominates the others, and each of the others animals is under the authority or dominated by higher-ranking group members and, in turn, sets its authority or dominates lower-ranking members, and so on, down to the last animal who dominates no one. Clearly, the benefits of group membership are not the same for all the animals when there is an “authority hierarchy” or a “dominance hierarchy”; lower-ranking animals, although they contribute to the cohesion of the group, may appear to be less valuable in the group than the higher-ranking animals do.

With the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and the creation of the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that hierarchy of communication that existed amongst the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and the manifestation of which can be observed in the animal kingdom, now has little, if not zero, meaning at all, especially for the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, since the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was designed so that it communicates directly (through “THE

Therefore, to feed on the “fruit” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, will lead the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” not only to forget and not to understand its “PLENITUDE” by his own “INTELLECT” by communicating directly with “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in his status (that of his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is a unique expression of “THE UNION”) as truly a “CHILD” of “THE DIVINE”, but also to abdicate his freedom to the existing hierarchy of communication established through “THE SHEKINAH”, and thus be totally dependent upon these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” — that is to say, slavery⁸³⁴.

DIVINE FORCE”) with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and pass on instructions to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” regardless of their position in their existing hierarchy.

It is so that, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were fighting to preserve their hierarchy, and to place the “new comer” — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — at the bottom of their hierarchy, or wipe that “new comer” out of existence, they were resisting “change”, as you are familiar with, in any businesses striving for a well defined profit. Here, the enterprise was the whole “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, and this business imperative and primary objective is productivity in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”. However, this primary objective has not been achieved in “THE CELESTIAL HOST”; productivity in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” was measured by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and it was found to be very low, almost inexistent, as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were sleeping on the “kudos of their innate skills”, after mastering their work tools. When productivity is low in a business, profit also drops; when productivity increases, profit generally improve as well. When “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, the business owner, saw that productivity in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” was low, then HE rightfully initiated the “change” process to increase productivity. To increase productivity, it is important to change how employees work, to bring the “LIGHT” close to them. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” as workers in the business, had not grown “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” in them, but rather the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside of their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”. It is so that, with the announcement of “change” in the business, their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” has generated “FEAR” of “change”, and these workers were ready to destroy themselves, to destroy the enterprise, in order to not have implemented, that “change” in business. As such, what you see amongst you, in businesses, in the earthly world were you live, is just a manifestation of what had happened in those days in the “Plane Above”, with those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. As we have said, remain attentive and remember the meaning of those two trees “casting their shadow on the ground”!

⁸³⁴ As we have already indicated in one previous annotation, yes, “slavery”, that is the word and concept, which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have used, already

As for the tree which is in the “NORTH”, and that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have declared to be the “... Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil ...”, it is actually an expression of the plant that has its mighty roots inside of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside of this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

That tree which is in the “NORTH”, it is “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” who has designed and established it, it is the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and it is “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and only HER, who will provide the fertilizers, the temperature and the enlightenment intensity, that is, the illumination — “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined —, which are necessary for the development of that plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

What “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” designs, what HE sees, what “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, afterwards emits in the attribute “NON DIVINE” through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, who unfolds as a “TREE” within the attribute “NON DIVINE”, is food and delight for the attribute “NON DIVINE” and all that it contains, is truth, joy and rest, and conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined.

Only “THE DIVINE FORCE” possesses in all their details the knowledge of all the elements of education contained in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and the unique manifestations of the metaphor of every “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and which are necessary for the development of those unique manifestations of the metaphor of those “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”; and SHE received this information from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in order to accomplish all the purposes of education of each creature that will be created into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

Only “THE DIVINE FORCE” knows (in the sense of “is able to distinguish, to differentiate between; to know the right hand from the left hand; is be able to discern”) that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE in those days, before that this Earthly world in which you now live was created into existence. That is how most of those higher ranking “ADONA’IM” and archangels at the heights of their “HUBRIS” perceived their fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were lower in the hierarchy of communication of ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH” and who were tasked to perform the actual work at the bottom of that hierarchy.

ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, that, which belongs to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that, which is inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “RIGHT”, that, which is “JUST”, that, which is “CORRECT”, in short, that, which is “GOOD”. Only “THE DIVINE FORCE” knows (in the sense of “is able to distinguish, to differentiate between; to know the right hand from the left hand; is be able to discern”) that, which is not conform to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, that, which does not belong to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that, which is not inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “WRONG”, that, which is “UNJUST”, that, which is “INCORRECT”, in short, that, which is “EVIL”. It is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who gauges any creature that is in existence within the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

THAT TREE, WHICH IS IN THE “NORTH”, IS “THE DIVINE FORCE”!

Just as “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, “THE DIVINE FORCE” is conceivable by no thought of the creatures that have been produced into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, SHE who is not visible to any of these creatures, although SHE is the science, which is found in each of them, no word can say of about HER, no hand can touch HER. Before that any of the creatures that have been produced into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, is aware of what is emitted by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, it is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who receives the instruction first and it is SHE who decodes and explains it to these creatures through the process of education through enlightenment.

What belongs to “THE DIVINE FORCE” as knowledge rises above all wisdom and surpasses all intellect, and surpasses all glory, which the creatures that have been produced into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, can emit throughout their lives.

The “fruits” of that tree, which is in the “NORTH”, are the knowledge gained (also called the “outcomes”, the “products”, the “achievements”) by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in Her office inside “THE DIVINE DOMAIN” and for “THE ONE” from whom the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” originate and who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”, but whom “THE DIVINE FORCE” knows perfectly; the “fruits” of that tree, which is in the “NORTH”, are among others, the fertilizer that “THE DIVINE FORCE” will provide and which are necessary to the growth of the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

None of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, including the Archangel MICHAEL, can provide those the elements of fertilization that are those fertilizers, that temperature and that enlightenment intensity; since none “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” has knowledge of those elements of fertilization.

ONLY “THE DIVINE FORCE” HAS RECEIVED, FROM “THE DIVINE”, THE AUTHORITY TO PERFORM THAT TASK.

It is of this plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” will make commandment to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to stay away and not to taste the “fruits”; that is, not to listen to “THE DIVINE FORCE” — “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” — who speaks from “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had sent to oblivion the direct communications between “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER who is outside of the attribute “NON DIVINE”, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”.

These “pampered children” “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have declared themselves to be “gods” on both sides of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR” have understood that: the absence of knowledge concerning “THE DIVINE” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will be their power to them “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” over the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” who will be asleep on the bed of ignorance; “YOUR IGNORANCE IS THEIR POWER”. When someone is in the absence of knowledge of its own roots, asleep on the bed of the absence of knowledge concerning “THE DIVINE”, this will leave that person at the mercy of those who stand in “IMPURITY” in all its forms and who will take advantage of that ignorance and use it against that person. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will not tell you about your “TRUE STATUS” as the receptacle built by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and intended to “CARRY THE (MANIFESTED METAPHOR OF THE) PRESENCE OF ‘THE SHEKINAH’”, as (using their own notions and words) the “heirs of all that is”⁸³⁵ and they will not bring you to understand who you are, or to ⁸³⁵ As we have explained already in one previous annotation, from the teachings, which these “ADONA’IM” had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, through the “specific understand the set of prerogatives, which have been conferred to you, in your “TRUE STATUS”, by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and the “AUTHORITY”, which derives from those prerogatives, because it is easier for them, “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, standing in their own “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”, to keep such knowledge away from you if you do not know what that knowledge is.

Having failed to grow the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in themselves, in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State”, and having no knowledge about that “LIGHT” — which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD” —, how the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who do not have any knowledge at all of the existence of the elements of fertilization, in the “‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ Specific State”, which are necessary for the development of the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” has sown in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”, they have understood that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is “ALL THAT IS”, another designation for “HE WHO IS”. They have understood that the “key layer”, which is the “LIFE” imprint of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER is designated as “THE LIGHT”, which we have explained at the onset of these writings. “THE LIGHT” characterizes the Energy that emanates from “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” and makes it “ALIVE”. That energy is the “LIFE” imprint of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’”.

They have understood that they are not manifestations of the determinants of “THE LIGHT” layer, but they, “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, have only epithet functions in the manifestations of the determinants of “THE LIGHT” layer. Furthermore, they have understood that a manifestation of a metaphor of “THE LIGHT” — of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State” (the “key layer”, which is the “LIFE” imprint of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER), which is the child of the attribute “GOD”, and which they have all failed to understand what it was —, will be given to the “new creature” (that is to say, to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and that is to say, to you, human creature, reading these writings).

This makes the “new creature” (that is to say, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and that is to say, you, human creature, reading these writings) the “RECIPIENT” of the manifestation of the determinant of “THE LIGHT” layer. Such “RECIPIENT” of the manifestation of the determinant of “THE LIGHT” layer is designated as the “HEIR” of “THE LIGHT” layer. Through several implications and additional functionalities, which we have described in the chapters concerning the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and, which will give to such “RECIPIENT”, the qualities and traits transmitted directly by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and from which such “RECIPIENT” will perpetuate the work of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, it is thus that such “RECIPIENT” will also be designated as: the “HEIR” of “ALL THAT IS”. in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, were going to grow this seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, in the “‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ Specific State”, in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is a whole mystery.

By placing as façade in front of the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, the works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and actions of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” wanted to ensure that “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” that speaks from “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, will also be sent to oblivion.

It is the combined group made up by the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” (that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, that, which belongs to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that, which is inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “RIGHT”, that, which is “JUST”, that, which is “CORRECT”, in short, that, which is “GOOD”), and in front of which they have placed this façade of filth (that, which is not conform to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, that, which does not belong to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that, which is not inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “WRONG”, that, which is “UNJUST”, that, which is “INCORRECT”, in short, that, which is “EVIL”) of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, that the Archangel MICHAEL had declared to be: the “... Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil ...” by saying: “...That on the “NORTH” is the Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil. That tree bears bitter fruit, AZAZEL, as you know; the taste of it is familiar to you, for it is a symbol of your rebellion. ...”.

Why all these efforts, all this unease, all this rush, this undue haste which gives this careless and sloppy character on the part of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have established and accepted this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against their following — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”?

Is there a difference between:

1. The shenanigans that AZAZEL was using when he drew “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in the deserted corners of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” to demonstrate his new appearance and to corrupt them and divert them from “THE DIVINE”;⁸³⁶ and

2. What the Archangel MICHAEL and these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have thus hatched inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” and in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”?

Was it so the extent of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have grown in themselves?

Was it so the extent of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have grown in themselves?

Why, by holding this meeting inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”, were they trying thus, by their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, to corrupt “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and which is the “Autogene God” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, the first begotten and anointed of “THE INCORRUPTIBILITY”?

Why were they trying to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal the “BETRAYAL” that they had perpetrated in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”?

All “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present there were aware and knew that something was wrong with that rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, they knew that something was different.

⁸³⁶ This can also be discerned from the conversations that the elders of the creation had between themselves and in relation to the realization of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Read more in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the unconscious expression of the organization of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” in the particular task to choose a “Character” for oneself.

Having sent to oblivion “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” that was speaking from “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” now had to stretch to its limits to grasp what was happening around them and what they were doing.

For, to the extent of their portion of the domain of “THOUGHTS”, which is delineated by the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”, they had never knew what was “pain”, they had never knew what was discomfort or dissatisfaction, they had everything they wanted, everything they could think to want, they had; but, none of them had that “LIGHT”, which has been given to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and made it akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

Even after the “BETRAYAL” that they had perpetrated in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, they had little idea of the depths of “FATALITY” in which they had thus plunged “THE HOLY PROJECT”, until later during the course of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they will see all their actions performed again and again, as in a repeating loop, with the descendants of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; in brief, when they will see the “... shadow casted on the ground by that tree, which is in the “SOUTH” ...”

It is so that, by the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have made manifest the decision that they had already made in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”: to destroy their following whom they had already designated as the “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, or to have forever dominion on their following — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is thus by this charade, in which they have set the terms of that rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that they wanted to wipe out all the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested all along the past week, as well as the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had sown in “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in order to rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

It is by this charade that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” wanted to cancel the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”; That sentence of annihilation which was manifested by the creation into existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Through this charade of presentation, the Archangel MICHAEL has revealed what he had planned in his own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” and kept hidden in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in his “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”; he has revealed the cage of ignorance in which he intended to lock all creatures, away from any teaching coming from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, away from ever coming close to know “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.⁸³⁷

In thus formulating the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the Archangel MICHAEL, the “ADONA’IM”, and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present there had shown by that, that they understood not the sole and unique commandment that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, gave them through “THE DIVINE FORCE”: “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”. The Archangel MICHAEL, the “ADONA’IM”, and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present there had shown that they did not stand in “PURITY” and “TRUTH”. As the Governing Law of their Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, has been implemented in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each of them, and they cannot escape it, it is so that the result of their actions will be “CHAOS” and “IMPERFECTION”, as output of their “Walk within the Acronym IHVH”; the result will be everything that is opposite to “PLENITUDE”.

Indeed, as we have already described, it is through “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” that any manifested product, in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, will stand in “PURITY” and “TRUTH”, and hence “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, which is the Governing Law of the Behavior, of such manifested product, will lead it to its expected “PLENITUDE”, as was ⁸³⁷ All these revelations are the “shame” of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which they carry with them since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. Although they took the necessary measures to keep secret all their sins and misdeeds, they also understood that nothing will remain hidden and everything will be revealed at the sight of all, at the appointed time.

designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. If a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, which is a manifestation of a metaphor of a product of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, fails to stand in “PURITY” and “TRUTH”, then “IMPERFECTION” and “CHAOS” will be its characteristics.

Furthermore, as we have also already described, in the section concerning the creation into existence of the Archangel MICHAEL, all the rules and principles that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established in order to sustain “THE HOLY PROJECT” into existence are based on a common element which is “VITAL” to the existence and to the proper functioning of the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” and everything will be formed and produced by it.

This common element is “THE SPECIFIC SPIRITUAL FORCE OF LIFE” that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had abundantly poured in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and whose degree of presence, in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” and everything that will be formed and produced by it, will allow to sustain into existence living creatures that SHE would create subsequently. “THE SPECIFIC SPIRITUAL FORCE OF LIFE” is:

“PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”

The “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE PRAISE’” is catalyzed by the degree of presence of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

It is through “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” that the products, also called the “fruits”, of “THE TREE OF LIFE” and which are manifestations, in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, of metaphors of supply of subsistence that are provided as a result of the execution of the “Causal Precedence Relation of ‘THE PRAISE’”, will be extracted and provided to the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle”, so that this “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle” remains into existence in the “‘SPIRIT’ Specific State” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

These products, also called the “fruits”, of “THE TREE OF LIFE”, are the “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” which are necessary for the proper functioning of the “Specific Elementary ‘SPIRIT’ Particle”. This is why “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF 'THE DIVINE'" is also used as synonym for "THE TREE OF LIFE".

"PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF 'THE DIVINE'" goes hand in hand with "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE", they are parts of all manifested forms of "THE DIVINE FORCE" and thus represent the same thing seen from different but complementary perspectives.

The development of "PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF 'THE DIVINE'", is the affective and emotional development of the seed of "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE" inside "The ALTAR of 'THE DIVINE'" which is covered by the "Specific Energy 'SPIRIT' Substance" both in the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creature" model and in the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" model.

The development of "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE", is the development of "THE INTELLECT" in "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" in relation to acquiring knowledge about everything that complies with the specifications that "THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER" has defined in the works that are manifested into existence in the attribute "NON DIVINE".

These two developments form the framework, the model whereby "THE DIVINE FORCE" will conform to complete the education that SHE will provide to the creatures that are manifested into existence in the attribute "NON DIVINE".

Therefore anyone who rejects "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE" has also rejected "PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF 'THE DIVINE'", and consequently anyone who rejects "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE" has disavowed the principle which is at the basis of his subsistence in the attribute "NON DIVINE", has disavowed the specifications on which he was carved into existence in the attribute "NON DIVINE", and thus embraced "DEATH".

This is why it is said that: whoever rejects "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE", cherishes "DEATH".

"THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER, through "THE DIVINE FORCE", gave them this sole and unique commandment to lead these "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" to understand that they are attached to the attribute "NON DIVINE", that they have been produced into existence in the attribute "NON DIVINE" and as such they cannot remain into existence by themselves and without external supply of subsistence: only "THE DIVINE" IHVH, our FATHER, "HE WHO LIVES BY HIMSELF", owns that property and HE is not from the attribute "NON DIVINE".

As well as in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have transgressed (to the highest degree) this unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” — that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, gave them through “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

Having named himself “god” over the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, the Archangel MICHAEL wanted to conceal the “BETRAYAL” that they perpetrated in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, by phrasing also his commandment through the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” and in which he will make commandment to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to stay away from “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, under penalty of “DEATH”.

The sole and unique commandment that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, gave them through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, has a basis and is stable, since “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” defines the foundation and the stability of all products of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, as well as the manifestation into existence of those products in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

“DEATH” resulting of the rejection of this first commandment, which is “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, is a consequence of the series of malfunctions that will take place in the components of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” for the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model, and respectively in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” for the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model; because the malfunctions of these components will be due to the fact that they will not be within the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined for their operation, they will have failures and will no longer receive as should the external supply of subsistence, to enable them to remain into existence.

It is the effects of such malfunctions that felt in them all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had unveiled and exposed their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure”, without protection, to the luminous radiation emanating directly from “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — which is placed in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”; because the structure of their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” had fractured, cracked and broken in contact with that luminous radiation emanating directly from “THE SHEKINAH”, and which passed through that unprotected “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure”.⁸³⁸

⁸³⁸ Excerpt from the chronicles of the conflict of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”. AZAZEL had led the Archangel ZA’AFIEL, away from the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of that, which will be the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, where this exchange between the two took place long before the beginning of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”:

“...

Archangel ZA’AFIEL:

You must tell me what consumes your thoughts so deeply, Adonai. How can I help you? You have always been the first with encouragement or aid up until now. Can I not return this favour when you need it?

AZAZEL:

I have need of nothing. It is for your sake that I do this, your sake and all the Host.

Archangel ZA’AFIEL:

And just what is it you are doing? Why all this effort, why all this unease?

AZAZEL:

What do you know of unease, Za’afiel? Do you have any idea what has been happening inside my being since this started? I have these movements in my essence that I cannot control. I perform actions I cannot explain at times.

...”

“... What do you know of unease, Za’afiel? Do you have any idea what has been happening inside my being since this started? ...” is said to lead you to understand through discernment that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had no knowledge of the existence of their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” as such and which enlivens the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”.

“... since this started? ...” refers to the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”; all the “ADONA’IM” “were shaken like a reed shaken by the wind”, because of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that they had in them.

“... I have these movements in my essence that I cannot control. I perform actions I cannot explain at times ...” is said to lead you to understand through discernment that his “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” is fractured, cracked and broken, and no longer works in

Whereas the commandment of the Archangel MICHAEL, through the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” and in which he will make commandment to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to stay away from “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, under penalty of “DEATH”, has no basis and no stability. It is based on the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, it is based on the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, it is based on the desire to “have the last say”, the strongest argument in the “CONTROVERSY” between him and AZAZEL, and get rid of their already designated “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”.

The Archangel MICHAEL, led by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, had chosen to demonstrate his understanding of the concept of “DEATH”, according to his own understanding of what it was, on the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”: with one stone make several strokes.

This “DEATH” that will follow from the rejection of the commandment not to eat of the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “NORTH”, the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, is not a consequence of some series of malfunctions whatsoever in the components of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” for the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, as a result of an inadequacy of the degree of presence of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” designed it. But it will be rather a consequence of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and “narcissism” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” which will be hit with full force in its arguments and will then, decide to act to safeguard and preserve its arguments: it will be the premeditated and deliberate murder of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

It will thus be the premature destruction, by the Archangel MICHAEL, of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of which he had knowledge since he is at the origin of the “Character” represented by this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”; not because this “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” would have had a series of malfunctions from the fact that its components would not have been within the specification that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has synchronization with the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”; just like what you see manifested on humans who suffers from dysfunctions of the central and/or peripheral nervous systems or who suffers from neurological disorders.

defined for their operation, but because the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was perceived as a threat to the object of their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and thus had to be put out of action. This will be the premature “DEATH” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”: it is the “Subjective Death”.

In this premature “DEATH” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” which will ensue from the rejection of the commandment not to eat of the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “NORTH”, the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” will trample and replace the innocence of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”; the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” seeking its own preservation, as well as that, which pleases it.

The terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” boil down to this:⁸³⁹

By yourself, embrace “DEATH” which ensues from the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” as we, “SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, did it by eating of the “fruits” of the tree which is in the “SOUTH”, or so otherwise if you eat of the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “NORTH”, we will put you to “DEATH” ourselves.

...”

⁸³⁹ Among human creatures in these days, it is the same thing that the brigands are doing to their recalcitrant victim when, holding a gun to the head of their victim, they say:

“ ...

Look, I love you very much and I will make you an offer you cannot refuse: join us in our nakedness or else I will shoot you right away... In any case you are dead meat, because your presence is a rebuke against our lucrative activities.

...”

In parables, it is said of this meeting held by the “ADONA’IM” and concerning their statement of the terms of the “DEATH CONTRACT” rigged against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that:

“...

The first Archon gathered with his authorities and together they perpetrated adultery⁸⁴⁰ with the knowledge, which they have received from MOTHER.

Of that adultery was begotten by them a “bitter bond”⁸⁴¹ with two cutting edges and whose nature is to oscillate from one thing to another.⁸⁴²

This “bitter bond” is so hard and the archons will so strongly root it in the nature of all creatures that it is to this “bitter bond” that all creatures (be it celestial creatures as well as human creatures) and in all generations have been associated⁸⁴³.

It is indeed from this “bitter bond” born from the ignorance that arose any fault, any injustice, blasphemy that is associated with ignorance, fright, any precept overwhelmingly associated with the

הַמִּלְכָּה

⁸⁴⁰ That is, they degraded the pure and active knowledge, which they had received from MOTHER, by mixing ignorance to it; thus transgressing the fidelity to the teaching they had received from MOTHER. Indeed, they replaced the innocence of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”; the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” seeking its own preservation, as well as its own desire, which pleases it.

⁸⁴¹ That is to say, that “DEATH CONTRACT” rigged against their neighbour — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — and by which they also formalized the “HUBRIS COVENANT” that they had concluded between them, between the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL.

⁸⁴² All the creatures will oscillate between the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL; and dancing at the concerted tune of these two “pampered children”, covered by their “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” and locked in their obscurity.

⁸⁴³ Seventy billion years later, it is CHRIST who, as a product of the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the following model, and which is described in the next section, will come to break this bitter bond. This will be the “REDEMPTION PROJECT” through which, CHRIST will also break this bond of servitude that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have thus placed on “ADAM” and all its descendants.

transgression of the first rule of existence [that is, “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”].

And it is by this “bitter bond” that all the creation will be made blind and locked in ignorance so that the creatures will not know “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

And it is by this “bitter bond” that the archons will hide their own sins, as they will be related to measures, times and moments, for they will place this “bitter bond” on everything.

...

In thus formulating the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that they will afterwards present to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” who was not yet at the threshold of the stage of the “spiritual awakening”; that is, from the spiritual perspective, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was similar to a newborn that is perceived in the hours which come just after childbirth — the Archangel MICHAEL, the “ADONA’IM”, and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present there had sent to oblivion all teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested in front of them; in particular, when “THE DIVINE FORCE”, under the appearance of the Archangel JEHOEL, spoke to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, saying:

“...

Every day, we grow closer to IHVH in understanding, in wisdom, and in beauty.

Have you forgotten? If we do not continue to grow, what are we?

...”

If the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” do not feed on the “fruits” of that tree which is in the “NORTH”, and which are in fact the fertilizers, the temperature and the enlightenment intensity that are provided by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, then, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” would have succeeded to block all elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that make of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” a unique expression of “THE UNION”.

If the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that make of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” a unique expression of

“THE UNION”, are blocked, then, will also be blocked those communications through which “THE DIVINE FORCE” provides the fertilizers that will allow the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” to sprout and grow as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it.

As we have mentioned already, those fertilizers are the knowledge of these things that relate closely to “THE HOLY PROJECT” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established, and which represent what we have called: the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”; that is, what justified and has been at the origin of “THE HOLY PROJECT” in which manifestations in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, of metaphors of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that “THE DIVINE” has chosen to share with the attribute “NON DIVINE”, will be “spoken” into existence: the “who”, “what” and “why”, that will represent all of the ins of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and the “when”, “where” and “how” that will represent all the outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

If the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” do not feed on the “fruits” of that tree which is in the “NORTH”, then, it goes prisoner in the same “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which is frozen like a mist on all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, that “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which prevented all of them to see “THE TRUTH SUN” which shines always outside and above the mist of ignorance, that “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which prevented all of them to see and understand the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and kept them under the absolute dependence of ignorance.

If the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” do not feed on the “fruits” of that tree which is in the “NORTH”, then, the hierarchy of communication of the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from that “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will be destroyed. What then, will this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” be? It will forget its “PLENTITUDE” and become a slave to those who fed first with the “fruits” of that tree which is in the “SOUTH”; because these firsts will dictate their will on such a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

The entirety of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, had been burdened and soiled by the impurities of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” caused by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, when the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH” had been blocked, preventing the surpluses of “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” which were produced and emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — to flow in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and to cleanse it from its filth.

Likewise if the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” do not feed on the “fruits” of that tree which is in the “NORTH”, then, will be blocked all elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that make of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” a unique expression of “THE UNION”, and thus both the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” and its “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” will be burdened and soiled by the impurities associated with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and subsequently destroyed. That was the ultimate goal of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

This rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” had been carefully prepared in advance and it was not the product of a spontaneous work of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which has mighty roots inside of “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL, with the approval⁸⁴⁴ of the “ADONA’IM”, prepared the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, so that this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants do not look towards “HE WHO IS ABOVE”, towards their “PLENITUDE” in their status (that of their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” which is a unique expression of “THE UNION”)

⁸⁴⁴ For, none of these “ADONA’IM” stood up and asked: “Why are we planning to do such evil things against our neighbour? FATHER never treated us like this since we are into existence.” None of them stood up against all this unfolding evil, despite all the warnings, which were given to them through several communications by “VISIONS” and concerning the forthcoming “HAVOC”, which is on the path on which they were walking. None of them would denounce this crime which was about to be perpetrated against their following, the “new creature”, which they had already labelled as “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION” to be wipe out of existence, thus making themselves complicit. If you become aware of a deception and do nothing to stay out of it, to expose it, or to confront the perpetrators, then you become part of the deception and you have embraced the deception. They all gave their approval, and they were all anxious to see the concept of “DEATH” demonstrated on the “new comer”.

as truly a “CHILD” of “THE DIVINE”, but so that they lose that status and become “Servants”.

They have thus formulated the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all its descendants, by also claiming to be the purveyors of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and so that this latter do not think he is devoid of its “PLENITUDE”.⁸⁴⁵

⁸⁴⁵ This is the origin of all premeditated murders that will take place in this world in which live human creatures. It is not by the hand of human creatures that such things have come into existence, but they came into existence by the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”.

Several replicas of this situation in which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have set the terms of their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” to destroy their following, “ADAM”, which had been created to rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that had taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” without exception, will be produced into existence all along the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Those who are familiar to you will appear roughly seventy billion years later, and will involve the birth of MOSES, he who has received the tablets of the Decalogue, and also afterwards the birth of CHRIST, as it is reported in the scriptures (Matthew 2:1-21):

“... ”

Now when they had departed, behold, an angel of the Lord appeared to Joseph in a dream and said:

“... ”

Stand up, take the child and his mother, and flee to Egypt, and remain there until I tell you, for Herod is about to search for the child, to destroy him.

“... ”

And he rose and took the child and his mother by night and departed to Egypt.

Then, Herod, when he saw that he had been tricked by the wise men, became furious, and he sent and killed all the male children in Bethlehem and in all that region who were two years old or under, according to the time that he had ascertained from the wise men.

“... ”

“ADAM” on the other hand, did not have such an escape option, he will be destroyed by the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had received the task of facilitating the

Having not grown in them “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, having no knowledge of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” which is part of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model from which they had all been “spoken” into existence in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” had not still understood what made the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” akin to “THE SHEKINAH” – “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

In addition, they all could see for themselves that the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” had a unique tendency to feed on “fruits” produced by the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” fed themselves with. Those “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” and those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” were not akin to “THE SHEKINAH”.

A long time before the creation of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” into existence in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” had already educated them about the “Formative Essence of ‘THE DIVINE’” and of His three attributes which define three core “Divine States” that are: the “‘SPIRIT’ Divine State”, the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, and the “‘GOD’ Divine State” whose child is the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”.

“THE DIVINE FORCE” had told them of the primordial characteristic which defines the very nature of “THE DIVINE”: “HE WHO LIVES BY HIMSELF”, the Monad of origin; the primordial unit which is the source of itself, which exists by itself, which lives by itself, and which feeds on the knowledge of itself.

But the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” went so far as to “DOUBT” the existence of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State” and of the “‘GOD’ Divine State” whose child is the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, to the point that the Archangel MICHAEL, the eldest, had then, named himself “god” over the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. They had also “DOUBTED” about the existence of that primordial characteristic which defines the very nature of “THE DIVINE”.

Having not grown in them the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, then, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” could not either understand that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, as well as those “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” and those development of the character of “THE INTELLECT” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” from elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”.

“‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, were and remain still “INDISTINCT FORM OF THE SPECIFIC ENERGY ‘EARTHLY’ SUBSTANCE”; that is, cohesive subsets and carved in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”.

From the perspective of this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, the fact that the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” feeds on “fruits” produced by the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” fed themselves with, is an expression of “HE WHO LIVES BY HIMSELF”.

In their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, those “ADONA’IM” did not understand why that first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” who is akin to “THE SHEKINAH”, in the very “IMAGE” of IHVH, fed on “fruits” produced by the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” fed themselves with, without that these latter are akin to “THE SHEKINAH”.

It is so that, the terms of this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which they had thus established, were for them a veiled way to refute the primordial characteristic that defines the nature of “THE DIVINE: “HE WHO LIVES BY HIMSELF”, the Monad of origin; the primordial unit which is the source of itself, which exists by itself, which lives by itself, and which feeds on the knowledge of itself.

It is by this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that they have also chosen to formalize the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, in front of the entirety of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, thinking thus that they will outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and by which they had intentionally pulled, those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

As we have already indicated, at that moment and at those places where had fallen the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, both the following were contaminated and turned in the state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”:

1. The “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRITUAL’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRITUAL’ Substance” of the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” containing the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; and
2. The “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

It is so that, long before the “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was created, the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” which was to serve as a dwelling place for that “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, was instead given by the Archangel MICHAEL to the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”.

Afterwards, it was just a matter of time before that the intensity of the state of “CHAOS” of the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, be rendered manifest on scales larger than that of the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, and in the first manifestation of the “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

It is by this rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that the “SPIRIT←SPIRIT” ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will pin on this first “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, the responsibility of the manifestation of this state of “CHAOS” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, which in fact results from the “BETRAYAL” that they had perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and which was spreading already in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and all that it contains.⁸⁴⁶

The Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADOAN’IM” wanted to make “THE DIVINE” liable of their premeditated destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and by the same occasion, justify their real “CHARGE” that they had brought against “THE DIVINE” for not choosing to express on a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the new manifestation of metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which is an expression of “THE UNION” and that HE has expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. That is why he concluded his presentation of the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” by saying:

“... Thus is the justice of the “THRONE” seen ...”.

How would someone who do not have knowledge of the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, know what the “JUSTICE” of “THE DIVINE” is?

The “JUSTICE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, is defined by the elements of “THE REASON”; that is, by the set of guiding principles that govern “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

As we have already indicated, that set is formed by all the rules, laws, and the “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established in the unique “DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, as well as all the countless proposals raised at the beginning of the inference of both all products that are formed and all those that are consumed in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, each of these proposals not inferring itself from any other in this “DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION”.

In the attribute “NON DIVINE”, it is to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, under the designation of “THE DIVINE WISDOM”, and only to “THE DIVINE FORCE”, that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has entrusted the knowledge of the “JUSTICE” of “THE DIVINE”; the knowledge of all what “THE DIVINE

ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed, in all details.⁸⁴⁷ As such, “THE DIVINE FORCE” is the incarnation of the “JUSTICE of ‘THE DIVINE’”. It is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who gauges any creature that is in existence within the attribute “NON DIVINE”. “THE DIVINE FORCE” is “THE WEIGHT SCALE OF THE DIVINE” by which all the creatures, which are into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, are measured; each creature at its appointed time. This “WEIGHT SCALE OF THE DIVINE” is not a weight scale, which operates on the principle of the “double standards”, the principle of “two measurements for the same weight”, the principle of the “double scale of criteria”, and no creature of the ⁸⁴⁷ It is for the purpose to lead human creatures to understand this, that Solomon, when “THE DIVINE WISDOM” walked with him and told him who SHE was, and under the inspiration of “THE DIVINE WISDOM”, had described her by saying:

IHVH created Me, origination of His Project, before His earliest Works.

From eternity I was established, from the beginning, before the origin of the Earth.

When there were no abysses I was brought forth, when there were no springs abounding with water.

Before the mountains had been shaped, before the hills, I was brought forth, before HE had made the earth with its fields, nor all the molecules and the first elements of the world.

When HE consolidated the heavens, I was there, when HE drew a circle on the surface of the abyss, when HE condensed the clouds from above, when the sources of the abyss were inflated, when HE assigned its term to the sea — and the waters will not cross the edge —, when HE laid the foundations of the EARTH, I was at His side like the Project Master I was his delight, day after day, ever at play all the time in His presence, ever at play in his EARTH and finding my delight among the children of men.

And now, my sons, listen to Me: Blessed are those who keep My ways!

Hear the instruction and be wise, and do not neglect it.

Blessed is the one who listens to Me, watching daily at My gates, guarding the jambs.

For whoever finds Me, finds life and obtains the favour of IHVH, but he who sins against Me, injures his soul; all who hate Me, cherish death.

attribute “NON DIVINE” has ever distorted and will ever distort this “WEIGHT SCALE OF THE DIVINE”.

Only “THE DIVINE FORCE”, in all her forms, has all this information in all their details, and SHE received it from of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in order to accomplish also all goals of education of all creatures that will be produced into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

The “JUSTICE” of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, is not defined on the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, but it is defined by the elements of “THE REASON” and it is dictated by “THE TRUTH”; that is, the rules, laws, and “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, and that formalize and fully demonstrate the truth of formulas of relationships between its seven constituents “Divine Particles” and all the products that are formed and those that are consumed in this “DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”.

If the Archangel MICHAEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, standing there inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” and in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”, truly intended to see “... the justice of the “THRONE” ...”, then, they would not have hindered three days long the action of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, which was designed to cleanse the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” from its filth, and hence to erase AZAZEL and all his followers from existence. He would not have pulled AZAZEL and his cronies out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”. At that very moment, when they are speaking about seen “... the justice of the “THRONE” ...”, they have put in place their deceit through which they kept hindering the action of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, from erasing from existence, AZAZEL and his cronies who accompanied him back into what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE”.

They have spilled the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Blood” and they have “BETRAYED” “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, they have perpetrated adultery with the teachings that they have received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and here they are, in this insane situation, still in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, hindering the action of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, and wanting to see “...the justice of the “THRONE” ...”, not knowing that, the action of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’”, which they are currently hindering, was part of “... the justice of the “THRONE” ...”. Not knowing that, “THE DIVINE FORCE”, who is the living incarnation of the “JUSTICE of ‘THE DIVINE’”, had produced each of them into existence, had educated each of them through the process of education through enlightenment, had walked amongst them wearing their own garments and talking to them directly and face-to-face, and none of them recognized HER, none of them came close to know HER; not knowing that “THE DIVINE FORCE” is the science that is hidden in “THE SHEKINAH”, and as such, “THE DIVINE FORCE” is “... the justice of the “THRONE” ...”.

Then, what type of “...justice of the “THRONE” ...” were they talking about? For these “ADONA’IM”, most elders of the creation, including AZAZEL and all his cronies, who still carried with them their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, and were standing right there, inside of what had been restored of the “CELESTIAL TABERNACLE” and in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”, that “...justice of the “THRONE” (to be) seen ...” was about taking away from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, that “LIGHT” — which is the manifestation of the “LIGHT” of the “‘LIGHT’ Divine State”, which is the child of the attribute “GOD” — which has been attributed to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and giving it to them. For these most elders “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their logic distorted by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that “LIGHT” was to be theirs, and they were claiming that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had not treated them fairly by giving that “LIGHT” to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, who has just been created into existence.⁸⁴⁸ The younger “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who were still in the stage of “spiritual childhood”, standing there and watching their elders, and who had been asking each others, “... are we going to fight again! ...”, did not understand what their elders were up to and had been fighting about; most of them were just following their leaders, by affinities and by conveniences.

As we have already indicated in one previous annotation, adrift into the absence of responsibility and accountability, a “pampered child” is likely to be discontented, frustrated, irritable, disgruntled, plaintive, querulous, resentful, self-centered, unpleasant, even obnoxious to those around him, preoccupied by his own “Interpreted THOUGHTS” about the privilege that he does not have and is longing to have, and feeling victimized and even cheated, feeling to be the victim of an unjust act from his parent, if he do not get that privilege. A “pampered child” always has his own reasons according to his own “logic” to prove that he is entitled to everything he wants: “He wants what he wants when he wants it.” For that reason, he will appear and will be impulsive, and he will try to sabotage every project in which he will not be ranked first and will not get the particular privilege that is the object of that project. It is not enough for a “pampered child” to have all privileges already existing, he has to pretend to have even more than he has already; it is not enough to be admired, he has to be admired above everyone and praised by everyone, in the first place. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were demonstrating through their own behaviours, all the defining and treacherous characteristics of the “pampered children” who did not get what they coveted and that has been given to someone else. Using every treacherous tricks of “pampered children”, they were now in the process of exercising their own “justice”, and as they saw it through their covetous desires, in order to grab that privilege, which according to their own logic, is rightfully theirs, but has been given to someone else.

As we have also already indicated, this is why “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had not interfered to thwart the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their shenanigans. If “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had applied his “JUSTICE” for the “BETRAYAL” that HE suffered on the part of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, then, HE would have erased them all from existence. All those shenanigans would later be revealed at the appropriate time following the appropriate convergence point in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE” has consolidated in Himself.

Having sent into oblivion all the teachings they had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, these teachings that represent also the “fruits” of the work accomplished by “THE DIVINE FORCE” for the good of the creatures that are produced into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, then, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their shenanigans wanted this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and all his descendants to do the same.

Such was the depth of resentment of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had drafted the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”, because they had not digested that “THE DIVINE” has chosen to manifest an expression of “THE UNION” — the manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” — on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and not on them as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”.

It is to make understand these things, which are since the beginning, that CHRIST told to His disciples that:

“ ...

The archons wanted to deceive humanity as soon as they saw that it was akin to that, which is truly good.

They took the name of that, which is good and attributed it to that, which is not good, to deceive humanity through “alter ego of names”⁸⁴⁹ and to tie humanity to that, which is not good, and subsequently what favor they are extending them! — In order to detach the humanity of that, which is not good and place it among that, which is good according to them.

Because, in truth, they wanted to take anyone who was free and subject him as slave forever.

As we have mentioned in a preceding annotation, “... anyone who was free ...” refers to any creature who possesses knowledge of the “TRUTH”; that is, knowledge of the rules, laws, and the “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has established in this unique “Divine ⁸⁴⁹ By “alter ego of names” is meant to say that they pretended to be intermediaries between “THE DIVINE” and humanity; they pretend to be “gods” (which they are not) and “deities” (which they are not either), towards humanity; there is no trace of elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” in their constituent parts and they pretend to be “gods” (which they are not) and “deities” (which they are not either), towards human creatures.

Because anyone who has such knowledge that goes beyond “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” is free, is not subjugated to the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, but is subject only to “THE DIVINE”.

Covered by the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil”, the elders of the creation would not allow that another creature possesses such freedom; because it would take such a creature outside their established hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE” and through which they indulged themselves of their “HUBRIS”. It is on the ““SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that “THE DIVINE” chose to manifest the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” in order to sprout such freedom in him.

CHAPTER 174
THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE
FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

HOST", saying, with the same "MALICE" that the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" had developed in them:⁸⁵⁰

"...

All the "CELESTIAL HOST" also rejoices with your pleasure, "ADAM".

The plants here were particularly designed for your body's needs and your delight.

Of every tree of the garden you may eat freely, but... from the tree of the knowledge of good and evil, the tree I have placed in the "NORTH", you must not eat, for in the day that you taste the "fruit" of that tree, you will surely die.⁸⁵¹

⁸⁵⁰ You can also read about this in their own records, as reported in the chronicles of the conflict of "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" and in which they describe their prowess of the absence of "THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE" and their works of the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH". Some of these chronicles (which are incomplete) have already been delivered to the human by the name of David Aguilar, and are available online on the Internet.

⁸⁵¹ Notice that the Archangel MICHAEL has said: "... the tree I have placed in the "NORTH" ...", taking ownership of this premeditated scene of the crime. He was revealing as such what he had already worked out in his own "nefarious and despicable shadow scheming" to destroy his following, "ADAM". Through the "alter ego of names", these "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" will pin this deceptive speech of the Archangel MICHAEL on "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER, and they will let humans record it as such, as "the word of god", in the records of the history of humanity and which they call "Holy Scriptures". They will not tell human creatures that, in what they have recorded in their scriptures, which they call "Holy Scriptures", and which they designated as "the word of god", that imposter "god" is the Archangel MICHAEL and NOT "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER. It is so that human creatures will go on "minding their own business" and thinking that, that "god" about which they have recorded in their scripture and who was making commandment to "ADAM" not eat of the "fruit" the tree, which is in the "NORTH" is "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER. Do you see the deception that these "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" have begotten into existence? Do you understand the extent of spread of such deception and its progenitures and the damages, which it would caused in the paradigms in which humanity will find itself and live in since those early days right after the creation of "ADAM" until nowadays? Who do such evil things against their neighbour? Such deception illustrate the depth of the resentment of these "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" against "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER and against the "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" onto whom "THE DIVINE" has manifested an expression of "THE UNION".

Having failed to understand and uphold the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” —, which was given to them to observe and which is the “GLUE” that maintains intact the structural integrity of any assembled structure of “created energy” inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, it is as such that the Archangel MICHAEL was also reavealing that he had already elaborated his own commandment in his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”. He had already worked out the manner through which he intended to trap his prey “ADAM” and to demonstrate his own understanding of the concept of “DEATH”, the cause-and-effect relationship between “SIN” and “DEATH”, on his neighbour, and also through which he intended to maintain

Thus concealing his feelings, his true and malicious intentions towards his neighbour, which he considered to be a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, this was a devious way of saying, “I will put you to death”, or “I will kill you myself.” The subsequent events will prove this and put in the sight of all his hidden intentions. This was thus the whole extent of the “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, and therefore of the “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE” of his neighbour, which he had developed in himself.

The Archangel MICHAEL had already worked out the manner through which he intended to demonstrate his own understanding of the concept of “DEATH”, the cause-and-effect relationship between “SIN” and “DEATH”, on his neighbour, so that, putting it using his own words: “the Host be able to fully understand [the destruction that he and AZAZEL have unleashed in the CREATION] until they [the celestial creatures of the Host] see Sin demonstrated”.

Read more in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the conversation between the Archangel MICHAEL and the Archangel ZA’AFIEL, extracted from the archives on the unfolding of the open conflict in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

I cannot explain it too directly to you at this time, for the Host will not be able to fully understand it until they see Sin demonstrated.

...”

They do not designate as “SIN” all their own transgression of “THE FIRST RULE OF EXISTENCE”, their own misdeeds and treasons that they have perpetrated so far and since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, they use terms like “... MISUSE of the greatest gift [i.e. the ability to choose freely] that IHVH has given to the Host ...” and they do not also designate as “SIN” the “MURDER” that he is about to perpetrate against his neighbour.

himself at the top of the perch of their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”. Covered and blinded by the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil”, he was “out for a kill” and he needed an excuse to carry out a premeditated act of aggression in full conscience against his neighbour the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. And in so doing, he will use that excuse to conceal his own misdeeds and to perpetrate even more others as he will have the courage.

It is so that, the innocent and guileless newborn, who was not yet at the threshold of the stage of the “spiritual awakening”, taking the Archangel MICHAEL as one that ensures his well-being and also the well-being of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, which were all around in this crime scene and with whom he was having fun, will ask him in return:

What does it mean “TO DIE”?

....”

Consequently, the Archangel MICHAEL will take advantage to sow the seed of “DEATH” in this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, innocent victim of their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, who was thus on the sacrifice table so that the concept of “DEATH” be demonstrated through him, as those elders of the creation have already decided.

Indeed, the Archangel MICHAEL spoke not of “THE DIVINE” from whom all “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” originate and who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”; he spoke neither about “THE HOLY PROJECT” and the ins and outs — that is, the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “NORTH” and which contains information about what justified and was at the origin of “THE HOLY PROJECT” in which they were all “spoken” into existence; the “who”, “what” and “why”, that will represent all of the ins of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and the “when”, “where” and “how” that will represent all the outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT” — since he was himself in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”. Neither did he spoke about the specifications and the constituents of “ADAM”, the creature he claims to have created into existence, or did he spoke about the element which is “VITAL” to the existence and to the proper functioning of those constituents of the creature he claims to have created into existence, and how the fact of eating the “fruits” of “... the tree [which, he said to have himself] placed in the “NORTH” ...” will impair the functioning of the critical and most inner component of the creature he claims to have created into existence, and how subsequently, the chain of impairments, will lead to that which is called “DEATH”, since he was himself in the absence of knowledge about his own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and its functioning from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” he was about to murder.

Instead, he told him about the “fruits” of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, the actions of AZAZEL and that he had fallen from “HEAVEN” with a great curse upon him — as if AZAZEL had walked on a banana peel on the “heavenly floor”, had lost his equilibrium, and had fallen from “HEAVEN”, landing in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” lives — and he told him that he was not benevolent as were the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that were maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

He slid under the carpet, their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and through which he had himself intentionally pulled, AZAZEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and had himself immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” lives, and by that “BETRAYAL” he had sealed the fate of everything that exist in this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

In front of the entirety of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, the Archangel MICHAEL has promised to “ADAM” that those of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” who had stayed with him in the “HEAVEN” will ensure his protection (to him “ADAM”) and that him “ADAM” will never come to meet AZAZEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had fallen out of the “HEAVEN” with him.

He promised him that he will be kept safe, and protected, as long as he will obey this commandment, that he avoids what they have declared to be the “... Tree of Knowledge of Good and Evil ...” which is on the northern part of the intersection of the rivers; that is, that he avoids feeding on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” by listening to “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE”.

And of course all these promises will not be kept by these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and when “ADAM” will stumble on their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, then, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” which will be responsible for guarding “ADAM” will be the first to say that they do not know and do not understand how such thing had happen. Indeed, they were speaking in truth: they did not know and did not understand how such thing had happen. How did “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” spoke to “ADAM” and revealed things to him, while these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who were keeping watch, as “body guards” of “ADAM”, saw NOTHING and heard NOTHING? Remember that these disciples of “Obscurity” knew not about the existence of their own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, hence they knew not about the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, which “ADAM”, as a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creature”, was wearing, and deep inside of which “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” is located, and from which “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” speaks and sends “specific communications”. Let’s not burn the steps, we will come back to it shortly, let’s continue first with the description of the unfolding event between the Archangel MICHAEL and “ADAM” and in front of the entirety of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”.

Having thus received of the Archangel MICHAEL, that seed of “THE ABSENCE OF THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” (that is, the seed of “DEATH”) and having received of the Archangel MICHAEL the promise and the assurances that him “ADAM” will never come to meet AZAZEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had fallen out of the “HEAVEN” with him, it is then, that “ADAM” who took the Archangel MICHAEL as being the one that ensures his well-being, will also promise to this last by saying: “I will not go near it”.

By this, the innocent and guileless victim who was on the sacrifice table so that the concept of “DEATH” be demonstrated through him, as those elders of the creation have already decided, signed their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” which had been presented to him through their “MALICE”: as such, he has been taken “hostage” by the Archangel MICHAEL.

The Archangel MICHAEL and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who followed all this charade, have smiled, enchanted at the engagement of the innocent and guileless “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that has thus been chained up in the prison of ignorance so that he do not feed on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and stays away; because just as in their “MALICE” they had abused “THE CONFIDENCE OF THE DIVINE”, likewise through that “MALICE” they had now managed to deceive the one who they claimed to be above them and represented a threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

What the Archangel MICHAEL had not told to “ADAM”, is that this promise was not only about him “ADAM”, but it applies also all his descendants; because if it would happen that “ADAM” would come to keep his promise, then, the Archangel MICHAEL would follow that promise on the descendants of “ADAM”. Thus, by this promise, all his forthcoming descendants have also been taken “hostage” by the Archangel MICHAEL.

מִיכָאֵל

What the Archangel MICHAEL had not told to “ADAM”, nor to the others “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, but he will tell them when “ADAM” will stumble on their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, is “THE BUYBACK CLAUSE” (also called “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, or even “THE ATONEMENT CLAUSE”)⁸⁵² of that promise that “ADAM” had given him. And he had already pre-established and sealed that “REDEMPTION CLAUSE” during the presentation on the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, when saying:

סָבִיר

“... Thus is the justice of the “THRONE” seen ...”.

Through this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE” of the promise that “ADAM” had given him, he had established that:

⁸⁵² To bring you up to speed, fast forward to nowadays. This spoken only (unwritten) “BUYBACK CLAUSE” (also called “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, or even “THE ATONEMENT CLAUSE”) is just like the “fine print” of rigged contracts that you see nowadays amongst human creatures. As you would know already, the “fine print” of a contract is refers to the contract terms and conditions, disclosures, or other important information in obscure language, which is not included in the main body of a document, but placed in footnotes or a supplemental document. The “fine print” is often the key deceptive part of a contract; its purpose is to make the unsuspecting recipient entering into agreement believe that the offer is better than it might actually be. The information contained in the “fine print” is often essential for the recipient to know but is kept “hidden” at first glance. Understanding the “fine print” leads to understanding the entire contract as opposed to only reading what is in the primary text of the contract. Remember: you name a progeny of “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITY” and “LIE” and you will find its origin amongst those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and in that “CELESTIAL WAR”.

“...

Only the One who has established the terms of the “DEATH CONTRACT”, determines the penalties that he will himself associate with non-compliance with the terms of this “DEATH CONTRACT”.

...”

And as a challenge to “THE DIVINE”, who they have failed to discern and reconstitute from all the manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that have been expressed on them, and to refer to the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” — that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, had given them by the intermediary of “THE DIVINE FORCE” and asked them to observe, and that they had all transgressed, the Archangel MICHAEL will tell this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE” to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, saying:

“...

Only the One who gave the LAW can truly pay its penalty. Only the One who established the CREATION can redeem it from the sins caused by AZAZEL’s deception.

...”

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, who were also all in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and who believed that it is the Archangel MICHAEL, having declare himself to be “god”, who had created everything by himself, will find themselves even more confused upon hearing this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, which is actually the ransom for releasing the “hostages” — “ADAM” and all his forthcoming descendants — that have thus been captured through that promise that “ADAM” has given to the Archangel MICHAEL; those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, knew not the wherefores of this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, they knew not that this has now become a matter between the Archangel MICHAEL, in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, measuring himself to, and challenging directly, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.⁸⁵³

⁸⁵³ To place things in perspective, so that you come to grasp the extent of insanity in which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had plunged themselves, imagine a

The LAW, referred to here above by the Archangel MICHAEL, is the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” — that was given to all of them to observe, as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including the Archangel MICHAEL himself.

As we have indicated already, as long as the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER would have chosen to share with this attribute “NON DIVINE”, are not yet shared with this attribute “NON DIVINE” but rather remain in “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, then the attribute “NON DIVINE” and all that it contains as creatures cannot know about the existence of these “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, nor would they know about themselves as manifestations of the metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that already exist in “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, or know anything else about “HE WHO IS”, nor would there be a CREATION. Thus, “THE ONE” who established the CREATION, who they have failed to discern and reconstitute from all the manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that have been expressed on them, and of whom the Archangel MICHAEL is talking about here, and he was well aware of what he was saying, is “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, who he is trying to hold responsible for their “BETRAYALS” and transgressions of the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” — that was given to them to observe.

Since the afternoon of the First Day of implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, until the afternoon of the Third Day when the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” had exploded, had “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — not worked as it should and had not provided an adequate surpluses of “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, in order to erase this filth and destroy any impurity present in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, including all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” whose “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” were already cracked and broken and had followed AZAZEL in his transgressions, and were no longer in “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER?

situation where you have an earthly microbe, which can only be viewed using microscopic devices, stands up on its “feet” from where it is on earth and begins to challenge the “Solar Star” that shines every day above the world in which you currently live. As such was the situation here, in front of “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”.

Who, by his deceit, had hindered during three days the action of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, and protected from the destruction by the radiation and the strength of the force emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, AZAZEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” who have joined him and who, through their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, openly put in jeopardy the good implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”?

Who, by his deceit, had intentionally pulled AZAZEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and had himself immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” lives?

It is so that, through this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” wanted to make “THE DIVINE” liable of their premeditated destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and by the same occasion, justify their real “CHARGE” that they had brought against “THE DIVINE” for not choosing to express on a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the new manifestation of metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which is an expression of “THE UNION” and that HE has expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Through this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, they also wanted to ensure that no other creature will be a threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”; because any other creature who wants to redeem this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE” must undergo the terms of acquisition of “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, that is: to suffer the “Subjective Death”, which is the premature “DEATH” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as the Archangel MICHAEL has established it in the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”, believing that this was meant to be “THE VERITABLE DEATH” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Under the terms of this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, the “Subjective Death” applies only on the “Character” of which the Archangel MICHAEL is at the origin and is somehow the “owner”⁸⁵⁴, because having designed the morphology of this “Character” (just as if he had accomplished it by himself, since he was not aware of the existence of “THE DIVINE FORCE” who has the knowledge of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE” has consolidated in Himself); it is so that the “Subjective Death” applies only on the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”.

In establishing the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” and “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, the Archangel MICHAEL believed thus that his “Subjective Death”, which is the destruction of the “Character” of which he is at the origin, was “THE VERITABLE DEATH” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

All these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew very well that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, has never spoken a word in contradiction with HIS own standards, with HIS own rulings. Thus, in establishing the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” and “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, the Archangel MICHAEL believed thus that he has outgrown in intelligence and wisdom, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and that he has sidelined HIM out of the CREATION, that is to say that he has placed the CREATION in a situation where no creature will listen to “THE DIVINE FORCE” and will feed on the fruits of the tree that is in the “NORTH”, he believed that he had thus seized the CREATION and he will behave in this way throughout the course of this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”; for, if “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, wants to redeem that rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”, HE must undergo the penalty that the ⁸⁵⁴ In his “obscurity”, he believed and even nowadays he still believes that he is the “owner” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that human creatures wear, and so do believe most of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. That “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” was produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, who wrote over 3 billion times the signature of IHVH at the base of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. When you ask to these self-declared “gods” to tell you something about “HE WHO IS”, “THE ONE” whose signature is found over 3 billion times at the base of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” that you, as human creature, wears and that they claimed to have created, they truly tell you what they know about HIM: and that is, NOTHING at all. “... HE is a nice guy who help humans a lot and sometimes he helps us ...” is what they will give you as answer to the question “What can you tell me about IHVH?”. They do not even know that at the base of that “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” wrote over 3 billion times the signature of IHVH.

owner of the rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” will set; and that penalty was the “Subjective Death” he believed to be “THE VERITABLE DEATH”, what he believed to be the “REMOVAL FROM EXISTENCE”.⁸⁵⁵

But the Archangel MICHAEL is not the creator at the origin of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, he had no knowledge about the existence of that “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, and therefore the “Subjective Death” cannot and does not apply on this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”: only the rules and laws established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” apply to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

As we have already explained, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had not interfered to thwart the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their shenanigans. All these shenanigans would later be revealed at the appropriate time following the appropriate convergence point in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” that “THE DIVINE” has consolidated in Himself.

And it is the appropriate product which will be associated with that appropriate point of convergence in “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, that will redeem this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, paying the ransom for the “hostages”, and release these “hostages”, who are all the descendants of “ADAM”, who are the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, of this “DEATH CONTRACT” which had been rigged against them.⁸⁵⁶

⁸⁵⁵ Extremely worrisome shiver will run down your spine when you come to “see” the extent of the evil state that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developped in them in those days. Remember the writings in Daniel 12: “Many will be puzzled [when they read about these things] but knowledge will increase.”

⁸⁵⁶ Seventy billion years later, it is CHRIST who, as a product of the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the following model, and which is presented in the next section, will come to redeem this “REDEMPTION CLAUSE” and would be prone to the terms of the acquisition of “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, that is: to suffer the “Subjective Death”, which is the premature “DEATH” of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” as the Archangel MICHAEL has established it in the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”. This will be the “REDEMPTION PROJECT” through which, CHRIST will also break this bond of servitude that the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have thus placed on “ADAM” and all its descendants.

As we have already indicated, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has endowed the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of this “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, with properties which are those of “THE

This is why it is said about CHRIST that HE has been produced into existence “TO DIE” and thus to redeem the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, so that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our (your) FATHER can resume with the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” as HE intended since the beginning, but this time with the redeemed “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” who will STAND IN PURITY AND HOLD THEIR GROUND IN PURITY, and once the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have received the retribution for the destruction that they have unleashed in the CREATION. Make of this your primary objective and life purpose, you, human creature, who is reading these writings, just as CHRIST did it and continues to do it: AGAINST WINDS AND TIDES, STAND IN PURITY AND HOLD YOUR GROUND IN PURITY, for the LOVE of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, our (your) MOTHER, and for the LOVE of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our (your) FATHER, so that HE can resume with the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” as HE intended since the beginning, with you and those amongst you, who will STAND IN PURITY AND HOLD THEIR GROUND IN PURITY. Do not tie yourself on Earthly things, they are merely sculpted and delimited parts of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”; they were produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and for your education: YOU HAVE A HIGHER PURPOSE!

It is only a “PRINCIPAL” instance of a model who, through “THE REDEMPTION CLAUSE”, has the power to undo the links of the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the model which precedes it, and thus rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that would have taken place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” of the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the model which precedes it; just as “ADAM” who is the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, was created into existence to rectify the deficiency of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that took place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” of the Archangel MICHAEL and who is the product of the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model.

Even at that time, the Archangel MICHAEL, who had named himself “god” above the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” will also declare to these same “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that he will come himself to eventually break this bond of servitude that he had placed on “ADAM”.

Nowadays, after all the destruction that took place in during the implementation and the course of this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, because of their ill-willed intentions, he is well aware that, as the leader of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, he will answer to all the destruction that he and AZAZEL have orchestrated, as soon as AZAZEL and those fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were immersed in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” will be erased from existence; this will happen soon, very soon, as the course of this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” is coming to its end.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”; that is, this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, ensues from a great power and a great wealth.

What the Archangel MICHAEL had not told to “ADAM”, is that by this promise, “ADAM” had abdicated his own freedom to him as well as that great power and wealth carried by his “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” as a “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, and which he had received of “THE DIVINE” through “THE DIVINE FORCE” and at his creation into existence; and thus “ADAM” had given to the Archangel MICHAEL, the power to do whatever he want of him and of his descendants.

And what abuse would the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, be it those that were maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” or those that were immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, not inflict to “ADAM” and all his descendants, when as they say themselves “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...” will come to pass?

Even nowadays, several of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and not any least, who dwell in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” in the “Plane Above” have not abandon that treachery resulting from their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and which is part of their “nature”.

If you walk with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and that you hear these words “...PROMISE ME THIS..., ...PROMISE ME THAT... ...” adressed to you, and coming from one of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, then, do not rise to the bait; for, it is a rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against you and which is thus been presented to you.

Be aware that you carry within you a manifestation of a metaphor of a “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that represents a threat to his function in the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, from which he indulge himself with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

Also be aware that at your expense, and as it is routine for them to use the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” as a “scapegoat” in their “HUBRIS CONFLICT”, some of the elders of the creation who dwell in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” have already concluded a “HUBRIS COVENANT” with those who have been immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” and who are locked underground in “THE DEPTHS OF THE WATERS”⁸⁵⁷ of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and with whom they have always kept in touch.

Think for a moment: how much weight, what value or importance, would your “PROMISE” carries in front of someone who has already made his decision about you, who does not keep his own “PROMISES”, and who has conscientiously chosen to disregard the instructions given to him by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER?

The primary purpose of this treacherous subterfuge “...PROMISE ME THIS..., ...PROMISE ME THAT... ...”, coming from these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, is not only to further deprive you of your capacity to ⁸⁵⁷ During the course of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, the impurities flowing out of those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have rejected the first commandment, “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, thus loosing “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and were hurled on EARTH and immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” down here, will propagate at high speed in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”, and consequently the “CHAOS” effects will be transmitted to the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”; therefore affecting all “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

To minimize the impacts of those transmitted “CHAOS” effects on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, while awaiting for the achievement of the convergence point, in time and from the manifestation out of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles”, appointed to erase from existence of those fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, ordered those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” which were maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, to lock their fallen brothers underground in “THE DEPTHS OF THE WATERS”. That is how those fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” ended in there, awaiting for their definitive removal from existence.

As we have indicated in one previous annotation in the chapter concerning the third decree of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, the part of the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment”, which is delimited by that internal structure of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, which covers the inner core of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, and containing that internal structure of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, is that, which will be designated later as “HELL”, and in which those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, and the human creatures that joined them, are incarcerated, pending their final dismantling and erasure from existence.

choose freely, but to lock you away from “THE DIVINE FORCE” who is alongside you and who, in “ABSOLUTE PURITY”, is protecting you from them.

The ultimate purpose of such “HUBRIS COVENANT” is your destruction and thereby, the destruction of the project that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had entrusted to you.⁸⁵⁸

If you come to open your mouth to answer to the one who would have presented you such “DEATH CONTRACT”, then, it must not be to make such a promise. If you make such a promise, then, you should be aware that with your promise you have abdicated your ability to choose freely and you have delivered to him your independence. Remember that all creatures are called upon to grow in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” through a teaching/learning process provided by “THE DIVINE FORCE”. As with all learning processes, you will make decisions at certain phases based on the context at that time and the data available to you at that period of time. Such data will often not be complete and as such, you will be in ignorance of the complete picture, which is obtained by completing the current data with data that are not yet available to you. As you acquire more data, as you acquire knowledge (insight) from those data, you also learn and grow in knowledge. And as it is with ignorance in any person: from the moment when that person acquires knowledge (insight), then, his ignorance dissipates by itself. The best decisions which that person was used to make in the phases of ignorance and absence of insight will often become the worst decisions which he could possibly make once he has acquire knowledge (insight). So, if you give your promise to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and self-declared “gods”, while you are in ignorance, how would you grow in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”? Only idiots stay in their ignorance and do not change their opinions and views regarding of the changing context and data. Never argue with them, for they will drag you down to their level of idiocracy and then beat you with their “obscurity”. It is as such and with this word “PROMISE” that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will lock-up all creatures in their “obscurity” and destroy all the work of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

If you come to open your mouth to answer to the one who would have presented you such “DEATH CONTRACT”, then, let it be first to ask him what are his ⁸⁵⁸ Such things were later revealed to the elder ENOCH, of whom METHUSELAH is a descendant, through communication by “VISIONS”, which was sent to him by “THE DIVINE FORCE” on instructions of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and concerning the “blinded seventy shepherds”. We will come to that communication by “VISIONS” on the “blinded seventy shepherds” in another chapter below.

motives? Don't beat around the bush, ask him straight away: "WHAT ARE YOUR MOTIVES?" On the answers that he will give you, add the question "why?", and so on until you reach the true motive or else until he begins to utter threats against you. Why add the question "why?" as much as possible? Because of the principle of causality (the temporal order of things) inside the attribute "NON DIVINE". As we have already indicated, inside the attribute "NON DIVINE", nothing is without cause; the "cause" being the preceding motive (in the temporal order of things) and which produces or causes something. The cause is thus the correlate of the produced thing (which is the effect, the consequence), it precedes this produced thing (which is the effect, the consequence), it is associated with the "raison d'être" of this produced thing (which is the effect, the consequence), it is necessarily responsible for the existence of this produced thing (which is the effect, the consequence). The understanding of the principle of causality is the necessary foundation of even the slightest knowledge of what is produced into existence inside this attribute "NON DIVINE". Asking questions, searching for causes is a fundamental predisposition of "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" that drives to find and formulate explanations about what produces or causes something, and is thus related to a desire to know, to a quest of knowledge of the reality.

The true motive which is at the origin of such "DEATH CONTRACT" is always the "HUBRIS" of manifestations of metaphors of "DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH". If he were to tell you what are his motives, then, if you want to be polite, tell him this:

"...

I was created in the "IMAGE" of "THE DIVINE" and I take care of my FATHER's business.

Go first ask "THE DIVINE" that HE makes you such a "PROMISE", then, the answer of "THE DIVINE" of whom I am an "IMAGE" will be reflected on me.

..."

Do not let such "SPIRIT←SPIRIT" 'CELESTIAL' Creature" impress or intimidate you, regardless of who it is.

REMEMBER YOUR PLENITUDE!
REMEMBER WHO YOU ARE,
"SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'SPIRITUAL' CREATURE'!

YOU ARE A LIVING REPRODUCTION (REPLICATION) OF “THE SHEKINAH” – “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

As we have explained already, as a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, you possess in you the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” through your “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” and which none of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and self-declared “gods” possesses. The “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” is much more “thinner” than the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”; IT IS ABOVE the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and it flows freely into the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”, and in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Space”, the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” seems elusive and “invisible” if compared to the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance”. The “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” on the other side does not flow in the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”, it is BELOW the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance” and it has only an epithet function in the “Specific Energy ‘LIGHT’ Substance”. Furthermore, you possess in you the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ REASON” and from the perspective of “THE POTENCY”, you, as “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” (that is to say, a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creature” dressed with a “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”), are also ABOVE all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” (that is to say, “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘SPIRITUAL’ Creatures” dressed with a “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”) and self-declared “gods”.

Know that “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” surpasses everything in the attribute “NON DIVINE”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” know themselves where they are standing, that is, far away from “THE CONFIDENCE OF THE DIVINE”; and as for you, stand in “PURITY” and hold your ground in “PURITY”.

Your protection against such “DEATH CONTRACT” is “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”; that is, “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and SHE will tell you this:

“...

My son, stay away from such evil work of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

Do not forget my teaching, but let your heart keep my tenets.

They are length of days and years of life and for you greater peace.

Do not let friendship and loyalty leave you. Tie them around your neck, write them on the tablet of your heart.

You will find favor and be well advised in the eyes of “THE DIVINE” and of His creatures.

Have trust in “THE DIVINE” with all your heart and do not lean on your own intelligence.

In all your conduct learn to acknowledge it, and HE will guide your steps.

Be not wise in your own eyes, but rather have much love for “THE DIVINE” and turn away from evil.

This will be healing for your body, a refreshment for your limbs.

...

My son, let not prudence and discernment get away from your eyes: watch them!

They will be life for your throat and grace for your neck.

Then, you will go your way safe and your foot will not stumble.

If you lie down, you will not be afraid; once lying down, your sleep will be sweet.

Do not fear a sudden terror, nor the irruption of the wicked when it comes; because “THE DIVINE” will be your insurance and off trap HE will keep your foot.

....”

Never make promises, do not trust the promises of these elders of the creation, NEVER sign such “DEATH CONTRACT”, stay away without hesitation from the one who would have presented such “DEATH CONTRACT” to you, regardless of the apparent strength of the one who would have presented you such “DEATH CONTRACT”, regardless of the shape of his “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”, stay more than ever away from such creature.

Arm yourself with “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” to eliminate all forms of “HUBRIS” that you have discerned in you and that will be the subject of the “HUBRIS CONFLICT” (through the terms of the “DEATH CONTRACT”, “...PROMISE ME THIS.....PROMISE ME THAT... ..”) that would have been presented to you.

If you come to make such a promise, then, later when you will stumble on the terms of such “DEATH CONTRACT”, they will say: “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...”.

Once the Archangel MICHAEL had received the engagement of the innocent “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that has thus been chained up in the prison of ignorance so that he do not feed on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and stays away, then, the Archangel MICHAEL returned in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and sat quietly, waiting that “... it was what had to happen, what had been written ...” comes to pass. In fact, he was monitoring the various frequencies of the channels of communication, all around “ADAM”; all those channels of communication, which he had knowledge of, and through which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER used to communicate with these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. Remember the hologram — represented by an image in three dimensions appearing as “suspended in the air” and being a transmission in real time, live — that the Archangel MICHAEL had opened, showing the place of the crime scene and where other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had led “ADAM” in order to induce him to “HUBRIS CHOICE”? As such, directly from the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, the Archangel MICHAEL kept surveillance on “ADAM” who was in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, in addition to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who, not knowing about the “live feed hologram” surveillance, were assigned as “bodyguards” around “ADAM” and were reporting to the Archangel MICHAEL.

It is so that, this first day of the first week after the creation of “ADAM” will follow its course with “ADAM” assigning names, “unique words”, to all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had gathered and which were presented to him.

Remember that the “Characters” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” have chosen for themselves, and that have been manifested by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the creation of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, are in fact, the records of the “Specific ‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Nature” (or simply, the “nature”) that has emerged respectively of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, of the affective and emotional state of each of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” at the origin of these “Characters”: these are concrete “images” in characters of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who are at their origin; that is, the self-portraits of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

Also remember that: once the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had expressed on each of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of each “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” became an integral part of their “nature”, it is so that, the names of grandeur that adorn these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have become façades for them, not reflecting the true “nature” that has developed inside “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and took place.

These names, these “unique words”, that “ADAM” assigned to all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, are in reality the names associated with the true “nature” that has developed inside “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Bodies” of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. These are the real names of the “nature” that is hidden behind the façades of the names of grandeur that adorn these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. It is so that, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” have, each two names:

1. The names of grandeur⁸⁵⁹, derived from the “unique words” and the attributes of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which have been expressed on them by manifestations of the metaphors, of which they are the shadows, and which are the façades from which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” derive authority; and
2. The names associated with the true “nature” that has developed inside “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and became an integral part, and which are for them, the reminiscence of the deceit and prejudices, of the destruction and of the reduction to helplessness, that they have caused to their neighbour — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

⁸⁵⁹ These are the designations by which they present themselves to others. These names follow the model: (“unique word” or attribute of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”) to which the suffix “el” or “iel” is added, and which is the singularity used to refer to the property of “HE WHO IS ABOVE”. For example: MICHAEL, GABRIEL, RAPHAEL, URIEL, CAMAEL, etc...

It is so that, the “specific processes” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of this “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model that had been produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, were running at full speed and their products converging to the stage of “spiritual awakening”, while unconsciously revealing to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, what the true “nature” in them was.

It is so that, in the days that will follow, “ADAM” will begin to explore the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which he has been created into existence, moving from one place to another, without walking with his feet and without wings, but using his “Protective ‘SPIRITUAL’ Dome” that was invisible in the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” which covered him.⁸⁶⁰

During his exploration, “ADAM” has not found another creature to his likeness — that is, another “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” —, but had found only the “Vegetal ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, the “fruits” of which he fed, just as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” that he had also found, fed themselves on those “fruits”.

⁸⁶⁰ Read also the excerpt of the conversation of July 08, 2006, Aristide with the Archangel MICHAEL concerning the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and which we have given out in one previous chapter.

Archangel MICHAEL (answering to a question asked by Aristide, on orders from “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER):

“ADAM” is the first creature that has been created on Earth. He was created as an adult; barely seventeen, eighteen years.

He served THE ETERNAL his GOD and he had the possibility to come to us. Without the wings, he was moving; ...

*But by curiosity, he [“ADAM”] wanted to learn more about [his own] world and not ours. If he had asked questions about our world [that is to say, the “fruit” of that tree, which is in the “SOUTH”, and which the Archangel MICHAEL had described as the “... symbol of “HEAVEN’s” everlasting vitality and life force ...” of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”], it would have been different, but he was much more interested in the world in which he [“ADAM”] was created.

“ ...”

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of this “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, it is through the “exploration processes”⁸⁶¹ that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was called to seek to understand “HE WHO LIVES BY HIMSELF”, “THE ONE” from whom all creatures originate and that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have failed to discern and reconstitute from all the manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that have been expressed on them, and whom these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” made commandment to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to stay away from.

In order to answer his quest to find another “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to his likeness, it is then, that “THE DIVINE FORCE” will once again receive “THE WORD OF THE DIVINE” carrying in it the instructions concerning the achievement of the next product in this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Just as “THE DIVINE FORCE” had accomplished it by producing the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, “THE DIVINE FORCE” resumed her work, invisible to the entirety of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” watching, and “THE DIVINE FORCE” has produced into existence in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective, and who will be designated by a “unique word” whose pronunciation in the human language is translated by: “THE FEMALE”, or “THE WOMAN”.

⁸⁶¹ As you would know already, the early stages of learning often rely on making observations and poking around. Infants “instinctively” learn through active exploration of their surrounding environment from the moment that they unleash their first wail as the midwife pokes and prods their wrinkly, tiny bodies. Creatures, be it celestials or humans, enter the existence with a predefined curiosity and an explorer mindset. That mindset will guide them in their early ages as they taste, touch, smell, listen, and observe the world around them and form “brain pathways” based on each of their real experiences with their surrounding environment.

THE PAROXYSM OF THE "HUBRIS" IN "THE CELESTIAL HOST": FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' CREATURE"

This first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective was in the likeness of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, she was also covered by the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” and she could also move with the help of her “Protective ‘SPIRITUAL’ Dome” that was invisible in the “Specific Radiance ‘SPIRITUAL’ Aureole” which covered her.

Her perceptions and her intelligence, as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had also noticed afterwards, were similar to those of “ADAM”, and these two creatures were forming together the manifestation of the pair formed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

By the creation of this second “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” wanted to bring the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” to grow in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and to discern and understand that THE PURPOSE OF “THE DIVINE FORCE” IS TO BE THE CONJOINT OF “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. She works for the good of Her Conjoint, All the days of her life, She does him good, and not harm: this is not a relationship of “Servitude”. Those who are conjoints work in the same consent and form one common entity.

Although the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had understood that these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” formed a perfect pair, none of “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had made the connection with “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and “THE DIVINE FORCE”; since not having “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and thus none of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had understood the teaching that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had manifested through this production into existence of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

The Archangel MICHAEL still believed that it was himself who had achieved this production, all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, will also believe that it is the Archangel MICHAEL, who has created the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective.

And the “ADONA’IM”, as to them, they were still waiting to see the “DEATH” of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, whom for them had already been designated as being a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”.

In the days that followed, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had not grown “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” and who had been sent alongside “ADAM”, continued to feed him with what they had available in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”; that is, obscurity, the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” — the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “SOUTH” and from which the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had found their joy and their state of gladness; that is, the “fruit” of “THE TREE OF ABSENCE OF KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, or “THE TREE OF DEATH”.⁸⁶²

All those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had been sent alongside “ADAM”, spoke not of “THE DIVINE” from whom all “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” originate and who to them had remained invisible and unapprehendable and inconceivable by elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”; they spoke neither about “THE HOLY PROJECT” and the ins and outs — that is, the “fruit” of the tree which is in the “NORTH” and which contains information about what justified and was at the origin of “THE HOLY PROJECT” in which they were all “spoken” into existence; the “who”, “what” and “why”, that will represent all of the ins of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and the “when”, “where” and “how” that will represent all the outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT” — since they were themselves in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

It is so that, in their attempts to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal their “BETRAYAL”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” will feed the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, with their “obscurity”. The Archangel GABRIEL, one of the most clever among these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who now worked very closely with Archangel MICHAEL, and who had taken over to fill the vacant position in “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”, when AZAZEL, who after having stolen part of the “specific generative energy” from “THE SHEKINAH” was dismissed from all duty, and who was involved in the pulling of AZAZEL and his cronies out of destruction in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and their immersion in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which live “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, will tell the following to “ADAM”:

⁸⁶² It is the same “fruit” of “THE TREE OF ABSENCE OF KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” that you will find in all the writings that human creatures have in their possession and which they call holy scriptures and through which the disastrous deeds that had been accomplished by the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” are not only imputed to “THE DIVINE”, but they are used to characterize “THE DIVINE”, preventing human creatures to take awareness of their “PLENITUDE” and to look at their origin which is “THE DIVINE”.

AZAZEL believes that if he can lead you into disobedience he will somehow be proven right — that IHVH standards of government, the laws by which IHVH established the creation, are unreasonable. That His will is restrictive to “those whom He has created”, and he [AZAZEL] will, in that way, prevent his own destruction.

....”

We add here some clarifications related to this speech, so that you understand how the deception proceeds forwards from these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

 Zoom in, extended clarifications of the speech above *****

“...AZAZEL believes that if he can lead you into disobedience he will somehow be proven right — that IHVH standards of government, the laws by which IHVH established the creation, are unreasonable. ...”

This is another indication, out of their own words, that despite all the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” poured on them during the whole duration of the implementation of the “First Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and which lasted roughly seventy billion years in “THE FRAME OF REFERENCE OF THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, none of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” knew of “THE DIVINE SUPREME CONFIGURATION” of seven “Divine Particles” and its products, from which “IHVH standards of government, the laws by which IHVH established the creation” originate, and from which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” all have origin. They knew not why and how they were “spoken” into existence, they knew not why tasks were assigned to them through the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”, and were cascaded down to each of them. But they were now all inclined and determined to destroy “ADAM”, the one by whom such knowledge was intended to be manifested in order to remedy their ignorance.

“...AZAZEL believes that if he can lead you into disobedience he will somehow be proven right...” is part of the things that these “ADONA’IM” were discussing among themselves in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, long before the start of “THE CELESTIAL WAR”, long before the creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

Here, the Archangel GABRIEL had managed to “pull a rabbit out of the hat” to divert the attention of all, especially the attention of the newcomer, away from their own “BETRAYAL”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and through which they have pulled garbage out of their own house and placed it in the place of residence of “ADAM”. It is a misdirection that will affect the subconscious of the one who will receive and feed on such progeny of “obscurity”. Do not lose sight of the thread of the unfolding of the events:

1. The “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” is announced to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.
2. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” understood that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”
3. Powerless, in their frustration and despair, they started to sabotage the tasks that were assigned to them: stealing, corrupting their fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, breaking the rules of their own existence, to the point that most of them are internally damaged and become filth and garbages.
4. The “DEATH” sentence and erasure from existence of those amongst them who are internally damaged, the filth and garbages, is announced to them by “THE DIVINE”.
5. Their leaders, the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL, enter into agreement to prevent the creation of the “...new creature, who will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION”...”, and in that agreement, they give to the filth and garbages, the place of residence of the “new creature, who will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION”.

6. The main filth swears in front of all the “ADONA’IM”, the Archangels, and the chiefs of the Angelic Orders, to destroy everything that belongs to “THE DIVINE”, and they launch “THE CELESTIAL WAR”.
7. The internal “specific processes” of “THE SHEKINAH” are in fully functional mode in order to destroy and erase the filth and garbage from existence and from the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.
8. The Archangels MICHAEL and GABRIEL, who are in charge of the part of the operation of “THE SHEKINAH”, set in place a premeditated deceit to block the operation of “THE SHEKINAH” and thus they protect all the filth and garbages from being destroyed and erased from existence.
9. Their premeditated deceit fails and all the filth and garbages are in the process of being effectively destroyed.
10. The Archangels MICHAEL and GABRIEL intentionally pull all the filth and garbages out of that destruction in progress and they send that filth and garbage in the place of residence of their neighbour, who has not yet entered his own house.
11. Their neighbour enters his own place of residence, sees the filth and garbage in it, and now the Archangel GABRIEL tells him that the garbage “believes that if he can lead you into disobedience he will somehow be proven right ...”.

What’s wrong with these “ADONA’IM” who are trying to manipulate their neighbour? What is that filth and garbages doing in the place of residence of the newcomer in the first place? Do you understand why we have said that the Archangel GABRIEL has “pulled a rabbit out of the hat” to divert the attention of all, especially the attention of the newcomer, away from their own “SINS” and away from the “BETRAYAL”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER?

“...That His will is restrictive to “those whom He has created”. ...”

As we have indicated already, these “pampered children” “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had not seen anyone that existed before them, they knew not how they came into existence and they believed that they had no beginning:

they believed that they were “eternal”. Despite all the teachings that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had poured on them, their “public figure” and “spokesman” of the “ADONA’IM” closed circle, as well as all the remaining “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” cascading down in their hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE” from “THE SHEKINAH”, knew not about the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”; they knew not that they are all prone to it, and cannot escape it.

“...and he [AZAZEL] will, in that way, prevent his own destruction. ...”

“...destruction? ...” what do you mean by that strange word “destruction”? should have asked “ADAM” to the Archangel GABRIEL. The use of that strange word “destruction” in that sentence tells you that these “ADONA’IM” understood very well that all their fellow “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, were to be destroyed over there in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

This “speech” is the favorite expression of the two cutting edges “bitter bond”, which those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had retained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and not the least of them, had begotten from their ignorance and from the adultery they perpetrated with the knowledge, which they have received from MOTHER. They will use this argument throughout the course of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and even nowadays, they keep using this two cutting edges “bitter bond”, to root it in any human creature and to associate it to any human creature, on which “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” is projected to be manifested. “HE WHO” through whom this knowledge has been sent to mankind, knows what he is talking about; for, the Archangel MICHAEL and AZAZEL have both tried unsuccessfully to lay upon him, this two cutting edges “bitter bond”, and using those same arguments, almost to the word, as they have done on “ADAM” and to many others after, and for the purpose that this knowledge must not reach mankind. “THE DIVINE FORCE” watched over her “CHILD” and this “BOOK” came out.

Thus, these were the works and the reasoning of all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, having no knowledge of the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, not knowing why and how they had been “spoken” into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, not even knowing of the existence of the attribute “NON DIVINE” in which they are all attached, having no knowledge of the model from which they have all been carved and produced into existence, having no knowledge of the limitations of the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” imposed upon them, etc...

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” having not developed in itself the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, but rather the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, thus, these were the reasoning of the works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in them and which became an integral part of their “nature”. And they will nourish the whole CREATION with these products of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and will drag the whole CREATION in the wake of this ignorance.

 Extended explanations of the speech above,
Zoom out *****

In response to the “speech” above, “ADAM”, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” innocent has said:

“...

I am not sure I understand all what you are talking about.

....”

In his innocence, “ADAM” knew not what “MALICE” is, he knew not what “treachery” is, he was a “new born” who knew not about the “treacherous blow” that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have set up and had already set in motion against him and all his future descendants.

Those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” did not know that they were revealing, as such, their own deceptive proceedings; they were revealing the true “nature” that has been sealed inside their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”. They did not know that everything, up to the very least detail, about their “nature” was been recorded by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

Being in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and full with “MALICE”, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of

“THE CELESTIAL HOST” were thus transferring on “ADAM”, the consequences of the “BETRAYAL” they had perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and through which they had intentionally pulled, AZAZEL and all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and had immersed them in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” live.

It is so that, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” will feed the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” abundantly with their “obscurity”. The Archangel GABRIEL, will also tell the following to “ADAM”:

“...

The law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction. Even now, AZAZEL's essence is being held together by the mercy of IHVH, since it is infected with sin.

Until AZAZEL fully reveals his character to all, he is allowed time... but the way he is using this time is doing nothing but revealing more clearly the nature of the sin in him.

He feels that if he can get you, you who is IHVH most precious creature, to also transgress, then, IHVH will spare all who have sinned, in order to save you as well.

If this were to occur, should IHVH protect even one sinner, then, AZAZEL would see this as an indication that IHVH IS unfair, and that he should never have been “cast out of Heaven” for his own rebellion.

He would storm back into the Kingdom and overthrow it. Even the Holy angels would be so confused, that they could not be rallied into a suitable defense.

We add here some clarifications related to this speech on the “law of sin and death” as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” understood it, so

This follows from the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”. They knew not about the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”, of which all of them are prone to and cannot escape, but the most clever among these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were able to infer the cause-and-effect relationship from the events they were witnessing happening around them since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and also from the content of that communication by “VISIONS”, which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, via “THE DIVINE FORCE”, had sent to the Archangel MICHAEL and about imminent events to occur in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and which were to befall those rebellious “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which were marked for “MAVET” (marked for “DEATH”, the removal from existence, the return to nothingness): their imminent erasure from existence and how this was to happen.

CHAPTER 174
THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE
FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE

into the “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL, giving AZAZEL (the one whose essence, they have acknowledged, is infected with “SIN”) possession of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; for, they said: “... In that place, Azazel will be able to avoid mavet for a time, and to finally come to a full understanding of his mistake. He... and those who choose to go with him...”⁸⁶³. What about their own inference “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”? Add “one” to “one”, what would you get? What will be the result of placing all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” whose essence are infected with “SIN”, inside the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and applying the inference “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”? Would the result be the DESTRUCTION of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it will contain or would it be something else?

Since these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who have called themselves “the most intelligent children” of IHVH, did not consider as “SINS”, the transgressions and crimes, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, before the creation of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, and which were exemplified by their ex-public figure of the circle of the “ADONA’IM”, but they consider their own transgressions and crimes rather as “...MISUSE of the greatest gift [i.e. the ability to choose freely] that IHVH has given to the Host ...”, now, to the inference “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”, add the infamous “...I cannot explain it too directly to you at this time, for the Host will not be able to fully understand it until they see Sin demonstrated...”⁸⁶⁴. What do you get? THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”! As such, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” also revealed by themselves, and through their own “words”, their premeditated intentions towards their neighbour, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

“...Even now, AZAZEL’s essence is being held together by the mercy of IHVH, SINCE IT IS INFECTED WITH SIN. ...”

In that sentence and with the words “...held together...”, which means to keep the component parts, to keep the shattered parts, of something together in a defined state, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” reveal that they have understood that “AZAZEL’s essence” is shattered. That is the extent to which they have understood that something (actually the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, which they had no knowledge of the existence) inside of AZAZEL is fractured, broken. That shattering, as we have indicated already, was the result of him, in the bitterness of a manipulative and ungrateful “pampered child” who has been whining way too much and did not get what he yearned to have, throwing tantrums and exposing his “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure” unprotected to luminous radiation emanating directly from “THE SHEKINAH” to show his displeasure. All those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which have followed AZAZEL in that transgression also ended-up with fractured and broken “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” invisible inside their “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”. With their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, fractured and broken, which could no longer reflect the unique and homogenous aspect of the “HOLY SPIRIT” in the image of which they were designed and created into existence, they were all found not to be “fit for purpose” anymore, and were marked for “MAVET” (marked for “DEATH”, the removal from existence, the return to nothingness): this was to happen inside the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”. It is not because of the mercy of IHVH that “...Even now, AZAZEL’s essence is being held together” (that is to say, he is not yet “DEAD”, returned to nothingness), but because of “THE BETRAYAL” of the Archangel MICHAEL, which took place on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

Knowing that, “THE ESSENCE OF AZAZEL [AND OF EACH OF HIS CRONIES] IS INFECTED WITH SIN” AND “...THE LAW OF SIN AND DEATH IS THE FOLLOWING: SIN CAUSES DESTRUCTION [AND CONSEQUENTLY DEATH]. ...”, why then, have these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, self-declared “most intelligent children of IHVH”, proceeded with their deceit to hinder the action of “THE SHEKINAH”, then, pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’

Substances” coming out of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, AZAZEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carry in their essence the mark of the “DEATH”, to place them under the bed sheets of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, whom they, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, have understood themselves as to be “THE MOST PRECIOUS CREATION OF IHVH”?

- Was it for the wellbeing of this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”?
- Was it because these “ADONA’IM” had too much love for their following — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”?
- Was it because these “ADONA’IM” had in them “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE”” and were upholding the unique commandment that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, gave them through “THE DIVINE FORCE”?
- Or was it because they had decided among themselves to demonstrate this relationship of cause and effect on their neighbour, this first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to get rid of him?

As we have indicated already, the Archangel MICHAEL had decided to destroy the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” right after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and he started setting in place a deceptive act to hide his “MALICE” and his intentions towards his neighbour. Through their own words and conversations, they will unconsciously reveal everything that they hid in themselves.

All these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” broke (to the highest degree, as “broke” is a light word, and I did not find a word heavy enough to characterize the transgression that these “pampered children” have perpetrated, to make you feel the severity of their transgression of) this unique commandment, and thus, they have all sinned against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and that is why HE withdrew His confidence from all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, without exception.

Read more, with explanations, in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” feeding the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

“...Until AZAZEL fully reveals his character to all, he is allowed time... but the way he is using this time is doing nothing but revealing more clearly the nature of the sin in him. ...”

When “THE DIVINE FORCE”, speaking through the Archangel UZZIEL in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and in front of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, had revealed to them and fully described the character of AZAZEL, were those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” asleep or had their “ears” plugged?

When by the “KHEREV” of the Archangel MICHAEL, has revealed the true monstrous “Character” that AZAZEL had chosen to be identified with through manifestation of a metaphor in the new “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, were these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” asleep or else had their “eyes” blinded?

On second thought, looking at the feats of those who dwell in “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, this statement is correct, as it is not only about AZAZEL, but it is about all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including all those that have been maintained in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”.

Given that any “SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” with guilty “CONSCIENCE” towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, whatever the masks of convenience (masks of sanity), the necessary accommodations and indulgence that it will produce vis-à-vis itself to conceal its guilt and having at a lower cost the feeling of fulfilling its obligations and having nothing to reproach itself, will eventually betray itself and reveal its own misdeeds, the existence of which will be inferred through discernment from the “IMPURE” signals of actions which it will produce and manifest into existence, in the broad daylight and at the sight of all, we will rephrase this statement by saying that:

Until all of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, elders of the creation, without exception, fully reveal their characters to all, they are allowed time... but the way they are using this time is doing nothing but revealing more clearly their “nature” and the “MALICE” and the sin in them.

...”

Nothing is hidden, except to be made manifest; nor is anything secret except to come to light.

“... he is allowed time ...” why then, in the dwelling place of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”? Because the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had so much love for their neighbours the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”?

Have you ever heard of a dwelling place that could house at the same time he who is in the image of “THE DIVINE” and he who has openly declared himself the enemy of “THE DIVINE”? That enemy that vowed to seize all that, which belongs to “THE DIVINE”?

“... you who is IHVH most precious creation ...”

It is because “THE DIVINE” IHVH, our FATHER has established to manifest the unique expression of “THE UNION” represented by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and not in a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, that all the “ADONA’IM” and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will infer that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is in their own words: “the most precious creature of IHVH”.

Having then, inferred that their neighbour, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is “the most precious creature of IHVH”, why then, did they plan and proceeded with their deceit to hinder the action of “THE SHEKINAH”, then, pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” coming out of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, AZAZEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carry in their essence the mark of the “DEATH”, to place them under the bed sheets of “the most precious creature of IHVH”?

It is so that, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, through their actions and their words, were in fact revealing everything about their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming”: the deceptive works set by the “pampered children” to sabotage every project in which they will not be ranked first and will not get the particular privilege that is the object of such a project.

Such were the depths of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

Read more, with explanations, in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” feeding the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

“... He feels that if he can get you, you who is IHVH most precious creature, to also transgress, then, IHVH will spare all who have sinned, in order to save you as well. ...”

This is an expression of the two cutting edges “bitter bond”, which they have begotten from their ignorance and from the adultery they perpetrated with the knowledge, which they have received from MOTHER.

It is in this manner that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, self-proclaimed “gods” and self-declared “most intelligent children” of IHVH, in their obscurity, will place and deeply root this “bitter bond” and all its variants on everything, blinding all the creation and locking it in ignorance so that the creatures will not know “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. As such, they will hide their own sins, as they will be related to measures, times and moments.

Keep in mind that at the moment of this speech about the “law of sin and death” as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” understood it, only the first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE”, as human creatures, were into existence inside the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”. The others creatures into existence were the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. With the expression “all who have sinned, in order to save you as well”, who do you think they are referring to when they say “all who have sinned”? They are referring to themselves, on both sides of the two warring parties of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”, and they are speaking about “saving their own skin”⁸⁶⁵ at the expenses of “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’

⁸⁶⁵ An expression used nowadays and meaning: to find an escape route to rescue or protect oneself from imminent danger, trouble, difficulty or unpleasant situation, without regard or concern for the welfare of others.

For “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, the nearly 70 billions years that have elapsed so far, since the creation into existence of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, is seen as nearly 70 weeks. The human creatures will answer for their own sins, so will all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”; they will answer for their actions and “SINS”.

Creatures”, because they have understood the gravity of the “BETRAYALS”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and they have understood that they will “receive the bill” and answer for the disaster in which they have thrown the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” on both sides of the two warring parties of this ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR” are very well aware of their own “SINS”, which they have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and they are very well aware of the consequences; “the law of sin and death”. Through such expressions of the two cutting edges “bitter bond”, which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have begotten from their ignorance and from the adultery they perpetrated with the knowledge, which they have received from MOTHER, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” also acknowledge that they, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have “SINNED” against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER. The strategy, which they have set in place in order to be spared, to try to escape the “law of sin and death” as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” understood it, is to drag these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, hence all those who will descend from these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” (and that is to say, the whole “HUMAN EDIFICE”) inside the quagmire of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and to keep “THE HUMAN EDIFICE” locked-up in there.

It is so that, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were using the “alter ego of names” trying to put the responsibility for the actions of their “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” on “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER; because in fact, it is the Archangel MICHAEL with the approval of the “ADONA’IM” who wrote the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” so that this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, as well as all his descendants, look not towards “HE WHO IS ABOVE”, towards their “PLENITUDE”.

Read more, with explanations, in the section concerning the details of annotations — Annotation on the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of the remaining of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” feeding the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

“...If this were to occur, should IHVH protect even one sinner, then, AZAZEL would see this as an indication that IHVH IS unfair, and that he should never have been “cast out of Heaven” for his own rebellion. ...”

As such, are the reasonings of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. What about the previous saying: “...Even now, AZAZEL’s essence is being held together by the mercy of IHVH, SINCE IT IS INFECTED WITH SIN. ...”? Does it not mean “PROTECTED FROM UNDERGOING MAVET, PROTECTED FROM DEATH”? It is with such sayings that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” roll and twist their words in order to pull the wool over the eyes of “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

“... would see this as an indication that IHVH IS unfair ...”; did you notice the word “unfair”, which they have used? How did such a “strange” word came to be in a domain of existence where the concept of “not to be satisfy” did not exist? That “strange” word, “unfair”, is the one, which these “ADONA’IM” have used to qualify “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, since the days after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they came to understand that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”. The word “unfair”, as you would know already, means: “not honest, not impartial, disingenuous, using or involving trick or artifice, not conforming to approved standards or rules, not in accordance with absolute respect for what is owed to each one, not giving each one their due, not based on or not behaving according to the principles of equality and justice, honesty and ethics, etc...” As for the word “justice”, do you remember the “... Thus is the justice of the “THRONE” seen ...”, coming from the Archangel MICHAEL? Do you now understand the depraved state of mind, which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and their leader have exhibited right after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and which has been sealed as part of their “nature”? Do you now understand what CHRIST was revealing using the parable of the workers of the eleventh hour?

Having no knowledge about the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, it is by such subterfuge that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” wanted to outsmart “THE TRUTH” to conceal and make forget not only their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, but also conceal the fact that they are the ones who had decided to erase what they had designated as a “MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, that had received the new unique expression of “THE UNION”, which represented to them a threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH”.

With that “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, all these “ADONA’IM” have “SINNED” against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, they have “BETRAYED” “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, they have perpetrated adultery with the teachings that they had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE”, they are “TRUE SINNERS”.

By explaining as such the “why” were AZAZEL and all the fallen “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” present in this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” in which “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” live, these most clever amongst the “ADONA’IM” at that time, have rolled their own “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, from which they have pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances” coming out of “THE SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, AZAZEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who carry in their essence the mark of the “DEATH”, and they have turned that “BETRAYAL” into a “cast out of Heaven”: a deceit produced by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” worthy of the best conjurers! And human creatures will record it as “cast out of Heaven” in the records of their history, not knowing the details of what was behind that “cast out of Heaven”.

“...He would storm back into the Kingdom and overthrow it. Even the Holy angels would be so confused, that they could not be rallied into a suitable defense. ...”

They were now whitewashing their “BETRAYAL” perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, using such reasoning that are the progeny of “IMPURITY” in all its forms and in which “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside each of them was standing.

As we indicated in one previous annotation and we remind here so that you can understand how “THE HOLY PROJECT” was diverted from its course by these elders of the creation: these were the works and the reasoning of all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” in their absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, having no knowledge of the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, not knowing why and how they had been “spoken” into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, not even knowing of the existence of the attribute “NON DIVINE” in which they are all attached, having no knowledge of the model from which they have all been carved and produced into existence, having no knowledge of the limitations of the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” imposed upon them, etc...

The “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” having not developed in itself the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, but rather the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, thus, these were the reasoning of the works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, that all these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in them and which became an integral part of their “nature”. And they will nourish the whole CREATION with these products of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and will drag the whole CREATION in the wake of this ignorance.

 Extended explanations of the speech on the law of sin and death, Zoom out *****

It is with such “fruits” of “THE TREE OF ABSENCE OF KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, or “THE TREE OF DEATH”, that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who had been sent alongside “ADAM”, were feeding him; thus keeping him inside the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which was theirs and which was frozen like a mist on all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, that “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which prevented all of them to see “THE TRUTH SUN” which shines always outside and above the mist of ignorance, that “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil” which prevented all of them to see and understand the ins and outs of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and kept them under the absolute dependence of ignorance.

Long before the actual start of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, right after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when these “pampered children” came to understand that “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...” and subsequently have “lost their mind”, the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” were able to infer through observations of the events that were unfolding around them, that AZAZEL and his cronies were infected with “SIN”, and they were able to infer (using their own words) that “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”. Yet, because they loved “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER very much and they also very much loved “the most precious creature of IHVH”, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” that was to be produced into existence in first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, they decided to enter into the “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL, giving AZAZEL (the one whose essence, they have acknowledged, is infected with “SIN”) possession of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; for, they said: “... In that place, Azazel will be able to avoid mavef for a time, and to finally come to a full understanding of his mistake. He... and those who choose to go with him...”. What about the inference “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”, which Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” have postulated? Add “one” to “one”, what would you get?

Who are the two “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who opened that tunnel between the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and have instantly transported and hurled in the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, which were “infected with SIN”, which have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, and which were in the process of being erased from existence through the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, and which was in ongoing process in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”? Those two “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who opened that tunnel are: the Archangel MICHAEL and the Archangel GABRIEL, the one who is telling “ADAM” that: “The law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction. Even now, AZAZEL’s essence is being held together by the mercy of IHVH, since it is infected with SIN.”

Now, think for a moment and put the pieces of the puzzle together: what will be the result of placing all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” whose essence are infected with “SIN”, inside the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and applying the inference “... the law of sin and death is the following: sin causes destruction ...”? Would the result be the DESTRUCTION of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and all that it will contain or would it be something else? As we have indicated already, the Archangel MICHAEL had decided to destroy the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” right after the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” and he started setting in place a deceptive act to hide his “MALICE” and his intentions towards his neighbour. He has premeditated the destruction, the “murder” of “ADAM”, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, hence the destruction of the whole “HUMAN EDIFICE”, which ensue from “ADAM”. Through their own words and conversations, they will unconsciously reveal everything that they hid in themselves.

It is so that, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, to the detriment of “THE DIVINE FORCE” who are always in “THE SUPREME PLENITUDE” and who had educated all of them in “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” will continue through such series of shenanigans (all kinds of monkey businesses), having no base and no stability, without possible ins and outs, orchestrated and led by these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”.

The unique outcome of those series of shenanigans will be to discredit and destroy the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to prevent that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” be “above them”, and thereby to justify their “CHARGE” as they understood it in their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

From the perspective of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the filth that had been intentionally pulled out of the destruction by the flow of the pure “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRIT’ Substances”, containing crude and very high “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence”, which had been accumulated inside of the “SHEKINAH”, and which flooded the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, and immersed in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, at the end of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, had continued to spread in this “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”.

It is so that, at locations were the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” walked, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” that have openly rejected “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is, and which thus carried with them all their filth and the mark of “DEATH”, were always around lurking, and thus was increasing and spreading the state of “CHAOS”, contrary to the “HARMONY” prescribed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”, all around these firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, both:

1. In the “Specific Atomic ‘SPIRITUAL’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRITUAL’ Substance” of the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’

Environment” containing the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”; and

2. In the “Specific Atomic ‘EARTHLY’ Substances” constituents of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”.

It is so that, from the perspective of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, the environment in which were these firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” well was contaminated and soiled.

Having abdicated his freedom by the commitment he had made to the Archangel MICHAEL, and feeding on the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, it is so that the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” which make of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” a unique expression of “THE UNION”, began to be blocked by this poisonous food that these firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” were receiving from the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining.

It is so that, the emotions associated with “FEAR”, “ANGUISH”, “DOUBT”, etc..., that are generated and expressed into existence in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” to indicate the presence of this “HUBRIS CONFLICT”, and also to indicate that oneself is in a soiled environment, started to appear in the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.⁸⁶⁶

⁸⁶⁶ From the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” comes among other things: grief, envy, jealousy, pain, boredom, rivalry, insensitivity, anxiety, concern, affliction, etc., as well as the emotions associated with them. Such things do not exist in “THE LIGHT” — “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

From the pleasure that ensues from the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” come many vices as well as vanity and everything that looks like it.

From the desire that ensues from the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” come anger, irritation, bitterness, bitter passion and dissatisfaction, and all that resembles it.

From the fear that ensues from the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” comes terror, perplexity, anguish and shame.

And whoever controls the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, hence the emotions of “FEAR”, “ANGUISH”, “DOUBT”, etc..., and which are the progeny of

Those who are akin to “THE SHEKINAH”, are also designated as “LAMPS”, or carriers of “THE PRESENCE OF ‘THE SHEKINAH’”, and, speaking by using the metaphor, it is said about these “LAMPS”, which are fed with obscurity — or ignorance, the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” — that:

If a lamp absorbs obscurity, then that lamp turns off and becomes obscurity; because the conditions of diffusion of the radiation of the light that was placed in that lamp have been affected, they have been mixed with the peculiarities of darkness, and have thus been damaged.

He, who has ears to hear, let him hear!

The firsts two “SPIRIT←LIGHT” ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” had been endowed with the “GIFT” of “VISION”, in their “SPIRIT←LIGHT” Body”, as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” had designed them.

“IMPURITY” in all its forms, associated with the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, in people, becomes the master of their behavior, and hence the master of the decisions, which they make, that is to say, the master of “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside each of them.

CHAPTER 174

because both of them, they have sunk into the ignorance caused by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” they were fed with.

“THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” told them the “TRUTH” and made them understand, through communication by “VISIONS”, that from the perspective of “THE POTENCY”, which is the degree of possession of elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON”, and which, inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, is a manifestation of a metaphor of the “Generative Power of ‘THE DIVINE’”, the “‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ Divine State” which is defined by the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT→LIGHT’ REASON” has more “POTENCY” than the “‘SPIRIT’ Divine State” which is defined by the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”; and it is likewise with products manifested through metaphors, that is, that “THE FEMALE” and “ADAM” are above all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, above the Archangel MICHAEL who was telling them that he was their “god”.⁸⁶⁸

“THE FEMALE” kept “ADAM” abreast of all that and “ADAM” also listened to “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE”, and thus “THE DIVINE FORCE” started to provide them the temperature and the enlightenment intensity, that is, the illumination — “THE LIGHT” which allows to discern that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined —, that are necessary to awake “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” out of you, since the day when you were born; but because you have been blinded and brainwashed, through the education that was pass on to you by your also blinded and brainwashed ascendants from generations in descent, to dismiss “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE”, when you receive HER voice, it is thus that, you often say: “My INSTINCT tells me this..., My INSTINCT tells me that...”. You MUST LISTEN carefully to what that, which you designate as your speaking “INSTINCT” and which speaks directly from “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside of your “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, is telling you. “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” will give you guidance when you are “in trouble waters”. To be able to recognize “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE”, you MUST stand in “PURITY” and hold your ground in “PURITY”, then speak back to HER.

⁸⁶⁸ As we have indicated in a previous annotation, later during the course of the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” will show a manifestation which is associated with the “PLENITUDE” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to EZEKIEL. It is the same teaching SHE had given here to “THE FEMALE” and to “ADAM” so that they remember their “PLENITUDE”.

the oblivion (or ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”.

This was an expression of the relationship of “Conjoints”, the harmonious complementarity between the “MALE” and the “FEMALE”, as “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; those who are conjoints work in the same consent and form one common entity, just as THE PURPOSE OF “THE DIVINE FORCE” IS TO BE THE CONJOINT OF “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. She works for the good of Her Conjoint, All the days of her life, She does him good, and not harm: this is not a relationship of “Servitude”.

As we have already indicated, the “spiritual awakening” marks the awakening of “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” from this oblivion (or ignorance) of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’”, so that the oblivion wears off and that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER be known, and also marks the beginning of the “spiritual” life into existence. This is the “spiritual baptism” in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and in the understanding and the knowledge of “THE TREE OF LIFE”.

It is the start of affective and emotional development of the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” inside of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is covered by the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model.

It is so that, “THE DIVINE FORCE” has awakened in these firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, their “GIFT” of “VISION”. Through communication by “VISIONS”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” started to provide the fertilizers to “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” in each of their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, using the concept of the plant and of its branches and leaves, and of the “fruits” produced by a tree as we already explained about education by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and through growth stages of the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” started to feed on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.⁸⁶⁹

⁸⁶⁹ It is for the purpose to make understand this, that CHRIST had said in parables that:

“... ”

By decision of “THE DIVINE” and by revelation, “THE DIVINE WISDOM” taught the two, knowledge by the intermediary of the tree, under the aspect of an eagle. SHE taught them to eat the knowledge, so that they remember their “PLENITUDE”, as had occurred in the two, the fall in ignorance.

By feeding so on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” began quickly to understand through discernment that in ignorance, in this absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, in which they had been

“... by revelation ... under the aspect of an eagle ...” refers to the communication by “VISIONS”.

“... to eat the knowledge ...” means to acquire and feed oneself with knowledge and grow up in the knowledge; in much the same as you are asked to acquire the knowledge sent to you through this BOOK, which is the “fruit” of the Tree of Knowledge, of which the Archangel MICHAEL made commandment to “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” not to eat, and you have to develop it and cultivate it in you, so that you come to understand who you truly are, and so that you wake up and work to cultivate the seed of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, which is inside you (in each of you as human creature, there is “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, dormant), and so that you recovers your lost “PLENITUDE”.

“... the fall in ignorance ...” refers to the fall in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”; that is, the fall in the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which had taken place in their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”.

“THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” in all its forms and manifestations — as you would have understood by now, this means “THE DIVINE FORCE” —, is the best disinfectant that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” MUST use in order to rid their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of “IMPURITY”, which, as you have also understood, grows out of the residues of “Interpreted THOUGHTS”; “THE DIVINE FORCE” is the antidote against IGNORANCE. You should also understand that, when you have been endowed with the “GIFT” of “VISION”, once “THE DIVINE FORCE” has activated it, you will unexpectedly receive communications by “VISIONS”, which SHE will send to you, or which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, will send to you through “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Some of these communications by “VISIONS” are for educational purposes and other communications are intended to bring you up to speed about the “state of affairs” around you, and in which case you will instantly and innately understand the content of the communication by “VISIONS”, which has been sent to you, and you will understand that you are in communication with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, in the same manner as when someone is standing next to you and shows you and explains to you the current “state of affairs” around you. The “state of affairs” around you may be the one concerning: the current state, the imminent state or the future state. When the communication by “VISIONS”, which is sent to you is for educational purposes, you will not instantly and innately understand the content of the communication by “VISIONS” and “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, will also tell you, in one way or another, what the purpose is. For example, the purpose might be for you to exercise your discernment capabilities and your capability to read and understand in the “Specific ‘SPIRIT’ Language”; the purpose might also be to transmit it to those end recipients who have not been endowed with the “GIFT” of “VISION” for their education, etc...

CHAPTER 174

THE PAROXYSM OF THE “HUBRIS” IN “THE CELESTIAL HOST”: FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ CREATURE”

“ . . .

How is it that you are still standing here, stripped of identity and honor?

...

And this is why it is said in the scriptures that the human creatures possess that:

THE PAROXYSM OF THE "HUBRIS" IN "THE CELESTIAL HOST": FORMALIZATION, ON THE FIRST DAY OF THE SECOND WEEK, OF THE PREMEDITATED DESTRUCTION OF THE "SPIRIT←LIGHT" 'EARTHLY' CREATURE"

“... “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” saw that they were naked ...”

By feeding so on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” began quickly to understand through discernment that he and “THE FEMALE” are manifestations of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” and which, from the perspective of the power and as the possession, since having in them the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON”, were on a scale of classification which is above that of all the manifestations of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM”; that is, to all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including the Archangel MICHAEL, who do not have in them the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” but pretended to be the providers of their well-being and kept them in ignorance, in nakedness.⁸⁷¹

By feeding so on “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, through communications by “VISIONS” provided by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” understood and saw using their own perceptions that they were “NAKED”;⁸⁷² which through discernment means: YOU ARE FALLING IN THE IGNORANCE, or YOU ARE IN THE PROCESS OF LOSING YOUR GARMENT OF LIGHT, or YOU ARE IN THE PROCESS OF LOSING “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” THAT WAS PLACED IN YOU.⁸⁷³ It could be quite a shock and a scary thing, when you stand in “IMPURITY” and receive a communication by “VISIONS”, through which you are shown your current and truthful status, just ⁸⁷¹ As we have indicated in one previous annotation, later during the course of the unfolding of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” will show a manifestation which is associated with the “PLENITUDE” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, to EZEKIEL. It is the same teaching SHE had given here to “THE FEMALE” and to “ADAM” so that they remember their “PLENITUDE”.

⁸⁷² As in the saying: “When you have started waking up from the sleep in ignorance, and started learning, the more you learn, the more you realize how similar you are to an empty barrel or how naked you are, and the more you realize the extent of how much you do not know.”

⁸⁷³ When you stand in “THE PURITY” and that “THE DIVINE FORCE”, through the communication by “VISIONS”, shows you your truthful status, then you will see that you are entirely covered with “LIGHT”, thus, you are dressed with “THE GARMENT OF LIGHT”.

like a live movie unfolding right there in front of you, in which you see yourself truthfully, and that on top of that, you are not aware of what a communication by “VISIONS” is, and you are not aware that you have the “GIFT” of “VISION” inside you. “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” had been fed abundantly with “IMPURITIES” and obscurity by those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were around them and they had sunk into the ignorance caused by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” they were fed with. Picture then, the scary situation in which “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” had found themselves, when they received that communication by “VISIONS”, revealing them their current and truthful status⁸⁷⁴, with those “hawks” and “vultures” “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” swarming around them and wanting to see the concept of “DEATH” demonstrated on their neighbours who, as such, were to be used in quality of “guinea pigs”.

None of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, the “bodyguards”, who the Archangel MICHAEL had assigned to always be around these firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, and who kept their service, as per the promise he made to “ADAM”, to protect them from any contact with the fallen angels who were always lurking around, none of the fallen angels too, could perceive or hear “THE DIVINE FORCE” — “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE”, THE INVISIBLE SHEPHERD OF PURITY AND HOLINESS — at work, along side “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE” and educating them. All the surveillance that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have set in place and monitoring “ADAM”, were useless; none of them could perceive “THE DIVINE FORCE” at work.

⁸⁷⁴ For those who do not have the “GIFT” of “VISION”, it might be difficult to understand. However, you can think about the nightmare situation where someone, who is under hypnosis (the condition involving focused attention, reduced peripheral awareness, and an enhanced capacity to respond to suggestion), turns up somewhere in public and realises he is totally naked. The common reaction is that, he will get red-faced in sheer confusion, awkwardly shielding his body from the eyes of the public and will attempt to make a getaway. In a similar situation, were “ADAM” and “THE FEMALE”, and it was the result of all the “IMPURITIES” and obscurity that those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had fed them with. When someone stands in the “PURITY”, there is in him no “FEAR” and no any other of those emotions that are children of “IMPURITY”. When furthermore to standing in the “PURITY”, someone is aware of what a communication by “VISIONS” is, the reaction to receiving such a communication by “VISIONS” is to instantly (after some training of course) discern (read in spirit) the message that is been sent through that “VISION”.

From his monitoring activity, the Archangel MICHAEL remembered that manifested form of that unknown creature that was manifested by "THE DIVINE FORCE" at that moment when SHE had lit up the "Specific Energy 'CELESTIAL' Substance" above their "heads" and had manifested in that illuminated part an aspect of the form of a creature that was unknown to these "ADONA'IM", and told them:

"GOD" EXISTS!

AND SO DO THE "LIGHT", THE CHILD OF "GOD"!

As we have pointed out already, in its attempt to render a manifested form of that unknown creature, having failed to discern that, that manifested form of that unknown creature was just a demonstration performed by "THE DIVINE FORCE" to bring them to focus away from their "DOUBTS" about the existence of the "LIGHT" of the "LIGHT" Divine State", "THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT" inside of the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' Body" of the Archangel MICHAEL, had produced an imperfect illusion with two faces: the first face of which that of that, which now is known, in the "Plane Below", under the designation "SERPENT". This was the "Character" chosen by the "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'CELESTIAL' Creatures" of the "SERAPH" instance, during the task, which was assigned to the "ADONA'IM" to choose a "Character" for oneself, and in their attempt to represent that creature, which was unknown to them and which was manifested above the "heads" of the "ADONA'IM" by "THE DIVINE FORCE". It was the result of a lack of discernment and a failed attempt to represent "THE DIVINE FORCE", let alone "THE DIVINE", IHVH, our FATHER, who have all remained unknown to them; for, with which one image would you describe or represent that, through which all images have been brought forth, spawned, into existence?

It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL understood that, just as they, the "ADONA'IM", had received that teaching, through that manifested form of that creature that was unknown to them, and from which, in performing the task to choose a "Character" for oneself, they have chosen and developed the "Character" that has been produced into existence in the "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Substance" constituent of the first "Specific Energy 'EARTHLY' Habitation Domain" and on a "'SPIRIT←SPIRIT' 'EARTHLY' Creature" that was given the designation of the "SERPENT", in much the same way these first two "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creatures" have now also received, through communication by "VISIONS", a similar education about themselves, as "'SPIRIT←LIGHT' 'EARTHLY' Creatures", and also about these "ADONA'IM" who pretended to be the providers of their well-being.

From his monitoring activity, the Archangel MICHAEL came to understand that these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, in addition to the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” that they have and which make them akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, have also been endowed with the “GIFT” of “VISION”, which has now been awoken in them.⁸⁷⁵ He understood from his monitoring activity that the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective was listening to “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” by using his own perceptions (which made “ADAM” akin to “THE SHEKINAH” and allowed him to receive “VISIONS” emitted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”) which were more developed than those of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, feeding thus on the “fruits” of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and had not obey to him (the Archangel MICHAEL) who had declared himself to be “god” on the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. He understood from his monitoring activity that, the first living reproduction (replication) of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and which autonomously moves, communicates and interacts with its surroundings, that is to say, the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective, was now in operational mode; although it was not yet fully operational at full capacity, it was nevertheless operational and its features were functioning as they were designed and established by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and it was receiving communications by “VISIONS” coming directly from “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

He (the Archangel MICHAEL) knew not that, that manifested form of that creature that was unknown to them, was only a demonstration coming from “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Since they have all failed to recognize and to know “THE DIVINE FORCE”, it is so that in his beliefs, that manifested form of that creature that was unknown to them, and of which the produced “Character” has been designated as the “SERPENT”, was the one teaching these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.⁸⁷⁶ The communication by “VISIONS”

⁸⁷⁵ This is just to give you an indication of how “sublime” the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is, above all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” filled and blinded by the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and why they were eager to see the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” eliminated from existence.

⁸⁷⁶ It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL, since he believed that he was the one who was creating things into existence by himself, and these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ was something “strange” (that is to say, out of the ordinary) and not something understood by these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, as they relied only on their existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, that so far had already been established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

Such communications by “VISIONS” were often sent by “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE” and addressed to specifically designated “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. Once again, recall the vision communication that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had sent to the Archangel ZEPHON, and regarding what were to happen to the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, who were in the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” and who Creatures”, will later tell that the “SERPENT” has fed these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” with the “fruits” of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”. When these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” speak about the “SERPENT”, they are referring to that manifested form that “THE DIVINE FORCE” had demonstrated above their “heads” before the creation of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, which we have described already in one previous chapter, which was unknown to them, and which they attempted to reproduced the external appearance features through a “Character”, during the task of choosing a “Character” for one self, and to which (that unknown manifested form of that creature there, above their heads) they gave the designation of “SERPENT”. They are not talking about the “animal”, which is the “‘SPIRIT← SPIRIT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, associated to the manifestation of that chosen “Character” in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” down here, and which has also received the designation the “SERPENT”. In their ignorance, they have failed to discern and understand that, it is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who interacted/communicated with them through such manifestations, in much the same way as they have failed to recognize the many manifestations, which “THE DIVINE FORCE” had produced into existence and had dressed up with their own “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment” in their likeness and through which “THE DIVINE FORCE” was walking amongst them and talking to them face-to-face. So it is that these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” will let the human creatures in total obscurity, by not telling them about “what is what” and “who is who”, and when they tell about something, “they take the designation of that, which is good and they attribute it to that, which is not good, to deceive humanity and to keep humanity tied to that, which is not good”. Through the “alter ego of names”, they attribute their own disastrous actions and the progeny of “IMPURITY” in all its forms and which “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” beget into existence, to “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, and as such, they keep hiding their own “SINS” and lack of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”.

would choose to reject “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and all that HE is? At that time, long before that the actual implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT” started, the Archangel ZEPHON did not know what it was and he qualified it using another word provided by “THE DIVINE FORCE” — through the process of education through enlightenment, which we have described already, and through which SHE fulfilled all their “Wishes”, their “Desires” —, and which translates in the human language as: “SHEEMAMON”, meaning “desolation”; a state of complete decay, collapse, disintegration, devastation and destruction, the condition of a place that is empty of life, with nothing pleasant in it. At that time, in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, long before the creation of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” did not talk about the Archangel ZEPHON to have received and been fed on the “fruits” of some “SERPENT”. These “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” were rather lingered in the curiosity around the Archangel ZEPHON, asking him impatiently: “What do you see? What has been shown to you? etc...”.

Remember what we have indicated previously: Only “THE DIVINE FORCE” knows (in the sense of “is able to distinguish, to differentiate between; to know the right hand from the left hand; is be able to discern”) that, which conforms to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, what belongs to HER, that, which is inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “RIGHT”, that, which is “JUST”, that, which is “CORRECT”, in short, that, which is “GOOD”. Only “THE DIVINE FORCE” knows (in the sense of “is able to distinguish, to differentiate between; to know the right hand from the left hand; is be able to discern”) that, which is not conform to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined; that is to say, what does not belong to HER, that, which is not inside HER HOUSE, and that is, that, which is “WRONG”, that, which is “UNJUST”, that, which is “INCORRECT”, in short, that, which is “EVIL”. It is “THE DIVINE FORCE” who gauges any creature that is in existence within the attribute “NON DIVINE”.

In much the same way that the Archangel ZEPHON received the communications by “VISIONS” without knowing how he did it, these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” have now also received communication by “VISIONS”, sent by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and telling them about their current and truthful status with respect to the specifications that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined for them and with respect to these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, disciples of “Obscurity”, who were around them and who were considering themselves to be “gods”. And, these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, using it, as a pretext, are about to execute their already pronounced “DEATH” sentence against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” including all their descendants who are not even born into existence. That “DEATH” sentence, they had established it long before that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was produced into existence, in those days following the announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, when they came to understand that: “... None amongst them, who are elders of the creation, but a new creature will receive and carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”

It is so that, the Archangel MICHAEL went inside of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — where he recalled the terms of their rigged “DEATH CONTRACT” against the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and wanted to impute on “THE DIVINE”, the destruction of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and by the same occasion, justify their real “CHARGE” that they had brought against “THE DIVINE” for not choosing to express on a “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature”, the new manifestation of metaphor of the “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” which is an expression of “THE UNION” and that HE has expressed on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is then, that the “WRATH” that is always present around “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — manifested.

As “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has designed and established it, and as “THE DIVINE FORCE” has manifested it into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — is at all time in the state of “HARMONY” with “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

“Autogene God”, Monogene manifested by “THE DIVINE FORCE” in the attribute “NON DIVINE”, “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — is incorruptible, since it has received the anointing of “THE DIVINE FORCE”; and it is so that “WRATH” is always present around of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”.

It is so that, the “IMPURE” external signals which were carried by the “CHARGE” put forth by the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM” towards “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, will be rejected at entrance of “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’”.

The effect of that rejection manifested instantly, at the level of “THE SHEKINAH”, both in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Environment” external and immediate around “THE SHEKINAH” and in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, by the appearance of a vivid flickering orb all around “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, and the entirety of “THE SHEKINAH” started to vibrate because of the presence of those “IMPURE” external signals which were carried by the “CHARGE” put forth against “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”.

As we have already indicated in the section concerning the creation of the Archangel MICHAEL in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — is not able to enforce its own instructions without going through an intermediate vessel capable of entering in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”, such as the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” in the “PRINCIPAL” instance of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” model that enters and stands inside the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”, to receive the necessary instructions that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has chosen to deliver only through this process.

The Archangel MICHAEL had understood this, and in the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” — at that time, was the only intermediate vessel capable of entering in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH” — will “take hostage” “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” inside the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” constituent of “THE SHEKINAH”, and realize his own purposes, works of this “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

If at that moment, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had destroyed this unique vessel (the Archangel MICHAEL) designed as such by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and by which “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, had established to produce all the other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, then, it would have been the termination of the whole “HOLY PROJECT”, and thus the termination of the attribute “NON DIVINE” and all it contained would have been wiped out of the existence.

That is how far the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” that the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had developed in them, in their “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, brought “THE HOLY PROJECT”: to the point of erasure of the attribute “NON DIVINE” from existence. This should give you an indication on the severity of the “SINS”, the transgression, to highest degree, of the unique commandment — “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’” —, which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, on both sides of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”, have perpetrated against “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.

However, already in the afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, after the “BETRAYAL” that the “ADONA’IM” had perpetrated against HIM, “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER had already decided to continue the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT” with the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” whose structure of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” was not cracked, knowing that even with these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” remaining, the worst was yet to come, as these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” are all prone to the Governing Law of the Behavior and cannot escape it, and they were all standing in their own “DISGRACE”, “IMPURITIES”, and “LIES”.

And that worse happen; since having not understood the significance of this manifested effect of rejection of the “CHARGE” put forth against “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”, the Archangel MICHAEL came out of “THE SHEKINAH” and descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” to pour out his “ANGER” on the two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” and apply all the penalties, which he had already prepared in his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” in which he had set himself to demonstrate his understanding of “the law of sin and death” to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and using the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which he had already designated as “THE MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”, as “guinea pig”, who had breached the terms of the rigged “DEATH CONTRACT”.

That “ANGER” was not only directed on the two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” because their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, which were both endowed with the “GIFT” of “VISION”, which allowed them to receive “VISIONS” communications emitted by “THE DIVINE FORCE”, have functioned as they had been designed by “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and accepting the fertilizers and feeding on the “fruits” of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, not obeying thus to the Archangel MICHAEL, the voice of “IGNORANCE”, who made them commandment to move away from “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Remember that in the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Language” and using the symbols of the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, “THE DIVINE FORCE” is represented symbolically by THAT TREE, WHICH IS IN THE “NORTH”.

But that “ANGER” was directed toward “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, because the Archangel MICHAEL just as the other “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” had not digested that “THE DIVINE” has chosen to give the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” to the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and to manifest an expression of “THE UNION” — the manifestation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ INDISTINCT DIVINE FORM” — on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, and not on them as “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST”.

Recall that in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain”, the Archangel MICHAEL has implemented the deceit he had prepared in his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” from what he had acquired from the teachings of “THE DIVINE FORCE” and which allowed him to keep intact and regulate the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH”.

With this deceit, the Archangel MICHAEL and the Archangel GABRIEL had blocked the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL←SPIRITUAL’ Frontier” of “THE SHEKINAH”, preventing the surpluses of “‘SPIRIT’ specific supply of subsistence” which had been produced and emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — to flow in the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Substance” constituent of the “Specific Energy ‘CELESTIAL’ Domain” and to cleanse it from its filth.

It is so that, AZAZEL and all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” of “THE CELESTIAL HOST” who had joined him and who, through their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, and had openly put in jeopardy the good implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, had been protected from the destruction by the radiation and the strength of the force emitted by “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is inside “THE SHEKINAH”.

For the Archangel MICHAEL and the “ADONA’IM”, the threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, that so far had already been established through “THE SHEKINAH” and through which all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” indulged themselves with the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”, was not in “THE CELESTIAL HOST”, but the threat was rather their following: the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

It is thus that having understood that the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective listened to “THE UNALTERABLE VOICE” by using his own perceptions, the Archangel MICHAEL descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, to put an end to what he had already designated as being “THE MISTAKE OF THE CREATION”. He descended in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” constituent of the first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain”, to execute and demonstrate the sentence of the judgement that they, the “ADONA’IM” (they are all accomplices in this affair, bonding with each other and protecting the crimes of each and none of them is exempt), had already taken, long before the creation of this first “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Habitation Domain” and concerning their neighbour, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

As we have mentioned already, from the moment that obscurity “ascended on its own throne” inside the “HUBRIS Spiritual Veil”, on that afternoon of the Third Day of the implementation of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, its disciples and princes have been busy finalizing their planning of the “purging out of existence” of any remaining trace of the manifestation of “THE LIGHT” that in itself carries “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” who has been already sent into oblivion, into exile. Such a manifestation of “THE LIGHT” is found in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”; such a manifestation of “THE LIGHT” IS the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”.

Having searched but having not found where and how “THE DIVINE FORCE” had “hidden” that “invisible thing”⁸⁷⁷ (since he knew not of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’

⁸⁷⁷ The Archangel MICHAEL and the closed circle of the “ADONA’IM” all knew about the thievery, which AZAZEL — the first recorded intentional THIEF in the CREATION — had

Body”) from the “Specific ‘SPIRITUAL’ Visual Structure” and hence from the “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Visual Structure”, and inside the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, unable to either separate that “invisible thing” (which was actually the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, which he knew not) from the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”, to grab that “POTENCY”, which is defined by the degree of possession of elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON”, and which, inside the attribute “NON DIVINE”, is a manifestation of a metaphor of the “Generative Power of ‘THE DIVINE’”, and which made the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” akin to “THE SHEKINAH”, and which for them, in their logic of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” should be theirs, it is thus that, the Archangel MICHAEL will pour out his “ANGER” on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and will curse the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” to return and remain forever in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance” from which they had been carved into existence, this curse also spreading on their offspring.⁸⁷⁸

He will throw the disorder in the relationship of “Conjoints”, the harmonious complementarity between the “MALE” and the “FEMALE”, that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has defined between the two first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”; not knowing that they had worked in the same consent and form one common entity, and that this relationship of “Conjoints” had been established so that they, “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, grow up in “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, and discerned “THE DIVINE FORCE” and understand that THE PURPOSE OF “THE DIVINE perpetrated when he was still in office in “THE GUARDIANSHIP OF THE SHEKINAH”, and had stolen part of the “specific generative energy” from “THE SHEKINAH” and had hid it in his “Specific ‘CELESTIAL’ Garment”. Thus, he (the Archangel MICHAEL) had also searched, “scanned” through “ADAM”, for the whereabouts of such source of “specific generative energy” from “THE SHEKINAH”, the “invisible thing” (not knowing about the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”), which was making “ADAM” to be as radiant as “THE SHEKINAH”.

⁸⁷⁸ He knew not of the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” “hidden” inside of the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment”. By cursing the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” to return and remain forever in the “Specific Energy ‘EARTHLY’ Substance”, he wanted to make sure that no human creature — “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which is an unique expression of “THE UNION”, which thus represented to them a threat to the existing hierarchy of communication with “THE DIVINE”, which had hitherto been already established through “THE SHEKINAH” — do not remember its own “PLENITUDE” which stems from this expression of “THE UNION” defined by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, and be forever destroyed.

FORCE” IS TO BE THE CONJOINT OF “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER”. She works for the good of Her Conjoint, All the days of her life, She does him good, and not harm: this is not a relationship of “Servitude”.

By this disorder thrown upon the relationship of “Conjoints”, the harmonious complementarity between the “MALE” and the “FEMALE”, the Archangel MICHAEL will impose a relationship of “Servitude” between the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the adjective “MALE” and “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the adjective “FEMALE”, reflecting thus how he perceived the creation, and thus demonstrating his deceit.⁸⁷⁹

This deceit was demonstrated through the speech, which had been thought in advance in his “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” and was set in motion since the announcement of the “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, to destroy the new creature, when he came to understand that the new creature, and not him or any other of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, will be akin to “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, akin to that, which is truly close to “THE ONE” who they have all failed to discern. The speech, which the Archangel MICHAEL gave in front of the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, and in front of the whole “THE CELESTIAL HOST” listening, and which, in human language, translates into:⁸⁸⁰

⁸⁷⁹ You know the adage: “divide et impera”, divide and you will reign; divide and you will become rich; arouse oppositions and struggles and use them to ensure your authority; divide, and you will deceive human creatures, and dazzle their intellect, and make fun of justice, such is the formula of manipulators in control. Where do you think this strategy of fueling dissension and rivalry within united entities originates? In ancient Rome or much more earlier and so among these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”? Is this strategy of “divide et impera” the progeny of “PURITY” or “IMPURITY”? It is the work of “PURE, TRUTHFUL, AND AUTHENTIC LOVE OF ‘THE DIVINE’”, or the works of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”?

⁸⁸⁰ Prior to the release of the content of this “BOOK”, which was announced to you through Daniel (Daniel 12, Scriptures), the Celestial creatures (angels & archangels) have released the chronicles (although incomplete) of: their views and understanding of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER; their understanding of His creation, how they view themselves within that creation, how they view of the human creature; their understanding of the conflict that started between them (celestial creatures) and has been ongoing (using human creatures as proxies) since the first day of creation of this world in which you are living. Some of these

My purpose towards you shall not be changed. Still is my love with you, and you will multiply, as I commanded you from the beginning, and have children to cover the earth, and to subdue it. Take comfort in this, that I have not abandoned you. Yet, because of what you have done, there are terrible results which you must also take with you.

For the woman, it will be that your pain in childbearing will be great, and in sorrow and trouble will you bring forth your children. Yet, you will desire your husband, and to him have I given headship over you.

For you Adam, because you have heeded the voice of your wife more than my own, even the land is cursed for your wrongdoing. The fruit of the earth has been your downfall, and now you must toil and by the sweat of your brow you will eat your food.

In sorrow you will eat of the earth, and nor will you eat all things; behold, some plants will become harsh, and some painful to the touch — for you are reminded of that which you were not to touch. And some will become bitter to the taste, for you are reminded of that which you were not to taste. And so shall you work the land all the days of your life ... until you return to the ground, since from it you were taken. You were made of dust, Adam, and to dust must you now return.

In this excerpt, much of the wording of which you have recorded in your Scriptures, an act of “spiritual aggression” between a predator and its prey, a “spiritual assault”, took place in an attempt by the Archangel MICHAEL to reverse the classification order between the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, and to establish a dominance hierarchy of the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” on the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”. The Archangel MICHAEL has used many “psychological manipulation stratagems”, including the process of intrusive suggestions, as weapons, in every sentence, which he has uttered, to breakdown and to corrupt these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”.

As you would know already, psychological manipulation is the exercising of undue influence through mental misrepresentation and emotional exploitation, carried out covertly, with the intention to seize power, control, benefits, and privileges at the victim’s expense. It is a radical programming or reprogramming of all or most of the victim’s beliefs, desires, consciousness, and other mental states, by using verbal, paralinguistic, and non-verbal means. Psychological manipulation can take on many masks of convenience and the manipulators will hide under the many faces of the offspring of “IMPURITY”. Individuals, who stand in the “IMPURITY” in all its forms, can inflict the worst psychological harm on others through psychological manipulation. In psychological manipulation, the manipulator makes a conscious effort to manipulate others, and at the same time becomes an expert in this field, mastering the art of wearing masks of convenience and carrying out a nefarious, detestable, and shameless activity, deliberately creating an imbalance of power to exploit his victim and serve his own agenda by making it appear that the problem is with the victim. To achieve this, the manipulators use a host of psychological stratagems to establish their control over their victims. Most of the processes used by a manipulator are aimed at one and the same thing: [PSYCHOLOGICAL REGRESSION BY] FREELY CONSENTED ACTION [OF THE TARGETED VICTIM]. The manipulator makes sure that his prey, the designated victim, behaves as he, the manipulator, wants it and in addition that this designated victim feels to be acting on his own volition. Two of the most pernicious forms of manipulation among the multitude of these psychological stratagems are: the manipulation of perceived reality and the mental projection (also known as “the scapegoat stratagem”). These stratagems of psychological manipulation do not originate from human creatures, but from those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” on both sides of their ongoing “CELESTIAL WAR”.

The manipulation of perceived reality is an elaborate and insidious technique of deception which consists in sowing the seeds of doubt in a targeted victim by distorting or falsifying the account of events in such a way as to make the victim doubt his own perceptions, his memory, his own sanity, what he saw/listened to/felt. It is probably the most pernicious form of psychological manipulation of all, because it will slowly erode the sense of reality, gradually swallow up the ability to believe in oneself, gradually undermine the victim’s confidence in his own ability to distinguish truth from falsehood, right from wrong, or reality from appearance, and therefore lead the victim inexorably to self-doubt, and to doubt the legitimacy to denounce that one is a victim of mental abuse, psychological violence or more generally ill-treatment, thereby rendering the victim to be pathologically dependent on the manipulator in his thinking or feelings and validation. From a psychological point of view, the manipulation of perceived reality is based on what is designated as “cognitive dissonance”, which states that inconsistency between two cognitions creates an aversive state akin to hunger or thirst that gives rise to a motivation to reduce the inconsistency. Cognitions are elements of knowledge that individuals have about their behavior, their attitudes, and their environment. As such, a set of cognitions can be unrelated, consonant, or dissonant with each other. Two cognitions are dissonant when one follows from the obverse of the other.

IMPURITY

Mental projection (or “the scapegoat stratagem”) is the defense mechanism for manipulators. This is a hallmark of these people: they categorically refuse to admit or even perceive their own shortcomings, are unable to take responsibility for their actions. So they can do and say anything and everything to avoid being held responsible. This is where the mental projection comes in: the individual who is standing in “IMPURITY” in all its forms, rather than admitting it, will shift the responsibility by assigning it to someone else. Basically, it is as if this burden is too much to bear, too heavy for the manipulator to bear, and he is throwing everything back in the hands of the victim and accusing the victim! It is a reaction that allows the manipulator to let go of his guilt and unconscious shame of himself. The victim thus becomes a sort of “scapegoat”, of an “expiatory doll”, which the manipulator uses, accusing him of, to unload this weight. The manipulator thus avoids having to encumber himself with a sense of responsibility and a sense of morality, for this he will need his victim to take this responsibility on himself and especially that this victim feels very guilty, that this victim experiences shame, for reassurance.

In these forms of manipulation, the processes used by the manipulator will depend on the disposition he seeks to amplify on his prey. Among these processes, you will find guilt, which will always be accompanied by several processes relating to destabilization and subjugation.

In the process of guilt, the manipulator will:

- Awaken the protective instincts of his prey by emphasizing his vulnerability or by presenting himself as a victim of something that his prey would have done;
- Resort to the comparison with others to underline the failings of its prey and to push it to conform to his wish;

- Affirm to do everything possible for the well-being of his prey and show himself hurt or outraged in the face of any criticism whatsoever, which will prevent him from questioning himself.

In the destabilization process, the manipulator will:

- Display a smile even when he is placed on the spot, as if nothing could reach it;
- Disqualify the needs, feelings and values of his prey if they are contrary to his own;
- Denigrate and devalue its prey, under the guise of pseudo encouragement or compliments;
- Sow discord by means of innuendos that create suspicion, doubt, mistrust, ...

In the process of subjugation, the manipulator will:

- Use flattery to seduce and gain the sympathy of its prey;
- Change like a chameleon in front of its prey and according to situations, circumstances or those who are all around listening to it;
- Answer vaguely concerns of his prey and leave the field free to the phenomena of mental projection, which can lead to perceive him in a different light (better in fact) than what he is in reality;
- Communicate by means of a jargon reserved for insiders in order to impose himself and, if the uninitiated public wants to understand him, he appear to be surprised at the ignorance of this public in order to dig a little deeper into the so-called gap between him and this audience and get others to deem themselves ignorant.

The only way to come out unscathed from all attacks of psychological manipulation in all its forms is to STAND IN PURITY AND HOLD YOUR GROUND, AND ONLY TRUST “THE DIVINE FORCE” AND THE “DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER.⁸⁸¹

Now that we have equipped you with some basic knowledge about psychological manipulation, let us go back to that speech, which the Archangel MICHAEL gave in front of the firsts two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, and in front of the whole “THE CELESTIAL HOST” listening. Let us break down this excerpt and explain the spiritual meaning of its content, so that you can “see” the “big picture” and exercise your discernment skills, as you will be reading through the remaining text of this BOOK, or as you will be reading through other Scriptures.

“... My purpose towards you shall not be changed...”

As we have explained already, none of these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, including the Archangel MICHAEL, knew “why” the creation of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” was announced to them. In their “obscurity”, they have miserably failed to understand that their own ignorance, their blatant absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, was the trigger at the origin of that announcement of the “Second Phase” of the implementation of “THE HOLY PROJECT”.

“My purpose towards you shall not be changed” refers to that, which has been sealed in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside his “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, and became part of his “nature”, from that moment when he had entered into the “HUBRIS COVENANT” with AZAZEL, who afterwards changed his designation to affirm himself by a word whose translation into human language is “LUCIFER” and means “LIGHT Bearer”; that “LIGHT” of which they had heard during their education through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, and through the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH”, but of which they had no knowledge. As you would have understood, AZAZEL had changed his designation to affirm himself to be the “new being” (since at that time, they did not considered themselves as creatures, they did not know how they were created into existence) that will “...carry the manifestation of “THE UNION” ...”, long before that the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which is the true “LIGHT Bearer”, since the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” has been endowed with the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” through its most internal component where “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” is located, was produced into existence. That is to say, he wanted to be, for the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”, the equivalent of you, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, reading these writings. He and all the high-ranking “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” have understood that you, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’

Creature” reading these writings, are on a scale of classification, which is above all “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures”. As we have already indicated, for the Archangel MICHAEL, through that “HUBRIS COVENANT”, he would keep control of “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” — and thereby, control of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH”. He knew very well what is the main purpose of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, as “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER, through “THE DIVINE FORCE”, was keeping him abreast of projects to be implemented during the course of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, and he used that information to make opposite plans in his own “nefarious and despicable shadow scheming” to change that main purpose into what his own hidden intentions were; hidden in “My purpose towards you shall not be changed”. No one can escape the Governing Law of the Behavior, the manifestation of “The Walk within the Acronym IHVH”; it is a magnifying glass that reveals everything available in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”; it is a high precision compass that reveals everything about the behaviour of “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”; it reveals about what the progeny of the decisions taken by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”, which stands in “IMPURITIES”, “LIES” and “DISGRACE”, will be: those progeny are called “INCOMPREHENSION”, “OBSCURITY”, and “HATRED”, in all their forms; those were the core of the hidden intentions in “My purpose towards you shall not be changed”. His subsequent actions towards his neighbour — the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” — will further shed light and clarify all what was hidden in “My purpose towards you shall not be changed”.

As we have indicated already, in the chapter concerning the implementation of the seventh decree, the Archangel MICHAEL and all the “ADONA’IM” “did not give a damn” about all what “THE HAND OF THE DIVINE” was thus writing and which is the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

The remaining of this speech brought out his views of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, how he viewed his role in it and how he viewed the role of the human creatures in relation to him. All these views, he kept them hidden in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside his “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, and through such speeches, he knew not that he himself was revealing everything hidden inside him.

Indeed, as we indicated already, all temporal information concerning the state of the growing medium, which is the combined set formed by “THE SEAT OF WISDOM” (also called “THE GARDEN OF WISDOM”, the growing medium of “WISDOM”) and “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” (also called “THE GARDEN

OF THE INTELLECT”, the growing medium of “THE INTELLECT”) — among other things, the state of “PURITY” and “HOLINESS”, as well as the temperature and the enlightenment intensity —, as well as the state of this plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, all this information based on “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON”, which are only visible by “THE EYE OF THE DIVINE”, are contained and transported by the action signals which are produced by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT”. Those actions signals which were produced by “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside the Archangel MICHAEL are all displayed in his own speech.

“... Still is my love with you ...”

These are the masks of convenience (masks of sanity). If “love” your neighbour is synonym of “take the most poisonous snakes and scorpions into existence to place them in the bed sheets of” your neighbour, afterwards lay traps to overthrow your neighbour, then deceiving your neighbour and robbing him of his plenitude in broad daylight, and swallow him alive like the abode of the dead, then, the mere thought of what would happen if he did not “love” his neighbour, makes shudder.

“... you will multiply, as I commanded ...”

Having declared himself to be “god” above the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and also above the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, not knowing about his own origin and how he was created into existence, he firmly believed that he was the one who created the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, having no knowledge of the existence of “THE DIVINE FORCE”, whom none of them could perceive. Thus, he was deliberately using the process of “intrusive suggestion” to sow and imprint his views of existence into these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”. We will give a brief description of the process of “intrusive suggestion” at the end of these extended explanations.

As we have indicated in one previous chapter, taken together as one common entity, in a relationship of “Conjoints” and the harmonious complementarity between the “MALE” and the “FEMALE” adjectives applied to their “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body”, the two sets, which are constituted by the second and the third concepts, on the one hand, coupled to the fifth and sixth concepts, on the other hand, form an expression by metaphor of the attribute “GOD” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’”. The manifestation by metaphor of “THE LIGHT” produced by this expression by metaphor of the attribute “GOD” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” will be carried by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the “CHILD” beforehand created (that is to say, following a predefined model, namely, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model) by the “FATHER” and produced into existence in the attribute “NON DIVINE” by or through “specific processes”, which have been implemented by “THE DIVINE FORCE”. It is through the recursive transformations starting from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “MALE” adjective and from the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” of the first “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the “FEMALE” adjective, that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER has chosen to demonstrate and make understand to the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who were created into existence in the “Plane Above”, and in particular to those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who in their “obscurity” have self-declared themselves to be “gods”, what do the attribute “GOD” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” represent. There are well designed and established models behind the production into existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and of the recursive transformations associated to it, both through the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” and through the “Subjective ‘EARTHLY’ Garment” and revealing aspects of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and aspects of “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Those models, and among which those of which we have scratched the surface of the descriptions in the preceding chapters and to the extent of the current knowledge at our disposal, were designed and established since eternity, long before that the attribute “NON DIVINE” was created, long before that any “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creature” was “spoken” into existence. And, these models are being implemented within the attribute “NON DIVINE” by “THE DIVINE FORCE” and only on instruction of “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER and for the purposes of educating the creatures which have been produced into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” by “THE DIVINE FORCE”. Their application into existence inside the attribute “NON DIVINE” is not a quack affair where a creature which itself does not know how it came into existence will abuse the credulity of his fellows and start to say: “... as I commanded, from now on, the moon star is made of green cheese ...”, and then others creatures start multiplying, so to speak.

The “specific processes” of reproduction in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, and between a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the having the “MALE” adjective and a “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” having the having the “FEMALE” adjective, are a detailed demonstration through metaphors of a property of the attribute “GOD”, and which these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and self-declared “gods” have all failed to understand. Those “specific processes” of reproduction, are expressions in metaphors of the decoupling followed by the decomposition of the basic components which contribute to the definition of the property of the attribute “GOD” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” and reconstruction from those basic components to form a well defined entity.⁸⁸² “THE SCIENCE”, which is hidden inside the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model, is the property and registered brand of “THE DIVINE FORCE” and SHE is the one who has brought forth the first two products of the mould designated as the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model into existence, so that those products be the sentence of annihilation of the “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH” and of the absence of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE”, which took place in “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” inside the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body” of the one saying “... you will multiply, as I commanded ...” and of all the “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” who have inherited his ignorance.

Since the Archangel MICHAEL knew not of the existence of his own “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ Body”, let alone the existence of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ Body” inside the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, it is so that through the “... you will multiply, as I commanded ...”, the Archangel MICHAEL was also revealing the extent to which he had understood that teaching, which he had received from “THE DIVINE FORCE” to the extent of the elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” and regarding what the attribute “GOD” of “THE BODY OF ‘HE WHO IS’” represent; and that extent is: “ZERO”. The extent of the plant of “THE KNOWLEDGE OF THE DIVINE” inside these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” is meager and almost inexistent.

Through the “... you will multiply, as I commanded ...”, the Archangel MICHAEL was also deceiving all those “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” watching, as well as these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, into believing that he is the one who created them, while he has “zero” knowledge of the models, which have been designed and established by “THE DIVINE ⁸⁸² Do you remember the “prism experiment”, which we have mentioned in one previous chapter? Well, throw a second prism into the scene and, roughly speaking, you have a demonstration of what we are referring to, and concerning the attribute “GOD”: decomposition and reconstruction of luminous radiation. Decomposition of an electromagnetic wave, which transports luminous radiation, into wavelengths to which are associated a “Palette of COLORS” and reconstruction of the electromagnetic wave from the decomposed wavelengths and the associated “Palette of COLORS”. The “COLORS” of the “Palette of COLORS” are not properties of the “prism”, but are properties associated with the incoming electromagnetic wave, which transports luminous radiation.

ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” and through which these creatures have been produced into existence by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

“... have children to cover the earth, and to subdue it...”

This is how he had pictured the role of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” in relation to him. Through the ordinances of the “specific spiritual formation” of “THE CHURCH” from “THE SHEKINAH” — “THE THRONE OF THE DIVINE IN THE ATTRIBUTE ‘NON DIVINE’” —, he came to understand very well what was the true role of the human creature, but he decided that “THE DIVINE”, IHVH, our FATHER was in mistake, and he decided to change that role, in order to satisfy the needs of their “HUBRIS” of manifestations of metaphors of “DIVINE PRIMARY WEALTH”.

“... Take comfort in this, that I have not abandoned you. ...”

As such, he was openly revealing to all what he has perpetrated: he has “BETRAYED” the confidence that these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures” had placed on him, thinking that he was there for their well-being. “ADAM” abdicated his own freedom when he gave that promise to the Archangel MICHAEL, not to listen and not to feed with the education given by “THE DIVINE FORCE”.

With the saying “... Take comfort in this, that I have not abandoned you...”, the Archangel MICHAEL was now using psychological techniques to break the reactance of these first two “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creatures”, while robbing them, and hence robbing their unborn descendants, of their “PLENITUDE”. He will keep on doing such things during the course of this “Second Phase” of “THE HOLY PROJECT”, thinking that his misdeeds will never be revealed.

As you already know, “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has endowed “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model with the “FREE CHOICE”, the autonomous capacity to “THINK”, to “REASON” and to “MAKE DECISIONS” without that, the elements of “THE REASON” that “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has restricted to “THE SEAT OF THE INTELLECT” — in this case of the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, they are elements of “THE ‘SPIRIT’ REASON” in the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” and the elements of “THE ‘LIGHT’ REASON” in “The ALTAR of ‘THE DIVINE’” which is covered by the “Specific Energy ‘SPIRIT’ Substance” in this “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” model — are blocked by “THE SPECIFIC SPIRITUAL FORCE OF LIFE”. “THE DIVINE ARCHITECT AND PROJECT MASTER” has also endowed the model of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” with the basic instincts, which are necessary for survival and which will enable it to awaken and implement a set of psychological reactions in the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, which will “push” the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” to face any threat that could hinder its proper functioning. The greater the force of the threat, the greater the psychological reaction. This state will be inferred from various “free behaviors” prized by the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” and from it would result: the reassessment of a threat, the expression of a way out in the face of the threat, the change of attitude opposite to the position presented by the threat, etc...; in short, an application of the autonomous capacity to “THINK”, to “REASON” and to “MAKE DECISIONS”. The importance of a given “free behavior” is also a direct function of the unique instrumental value of this behavior, and which is necessary for the proper functioning of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”, multiplied by the current intensity of the functioning of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature”. The magnitude or importance of this psychological reaction depends on several factors, among which: the importance of the “free behaviors” eliminated or threatened to be eliminated; the proportion of “free behaviors” eliminated or threatened to be eliminated; and the intensity of the threat.

It is thus that if it were to happen that the “FREE CHOICE” of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is threatened or endangered for any reason whatsoever, the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will react accordingly in order to deal with any potential threat that seeks to hinder this “FREE CHOICE” and eliminate such a threat. Psychological reactance is that motivational-type emotional state, which is geared towards elimination or even recovery of “free behaviour”, which is threatened with being lost or which has been lost. If the psychological reactance of the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” is shattered and reduced to zero, then the “‘SPIRIT←LIGHT’ ‘EARTHLY’ Creature” will be reduced to what?

Remember what CHRIST had already revealed concerning these “‘SPIRIT←SPIRIT’ ‘CELESTIAL’ Creatures” and their leaders, when HE said:
